Your petitioners, residents of Western Pennsylvania, respectfully represent that, in 1880, 1881, and 1882, Col. William E. Merrill, one of the most reliable and intelligent engineers in the United States service, recommended an appropriation of $153,000 to commence a dam near Herr's Island, Allegheny River, in the port of Pittsburgh, Pa. In 1884 he says in his report: "I have so often recommended this appropriation and nothing has come from it, I do not now repeat it." Hence it has been dropped, but the reasons for it are stronger now than when first made, six years ago. Since then the Davis Island dam has been finished and natural gas has been more generally introduced as fuel, and large steel and other works have been started along the bank of the river, all requiring the cheapest freight possible. We therefore pray your honorable bodies to insert in the pending river and harbor bill the clause repeatedly recommended by Colonel Merrill, of $153,000, to commence a dam near Herr's Island, in the Allegheny River, Pennsylvania, and your petitioners will ever pray, &c.

I ask the careful attention of the Committee on Commerce to this important improvement, to which committee I move its reference.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CAMERON. I present resolutions passed by the Trades Assembly and lodges composing the same, of Pittsburgh, Pa., earnestly protesting against the imposition of a tax on oleomargarine and butterine and giving their reasons therefor. As this important subject is likely to be before the Senate at an early day, I ask that these resolutions be printed in the RECORD, and move their reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The resolutions were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., May, 31, 1886.

Hon. J. D. CAMERON,
Senate, Washington, D. C.:

Below find resolutions passed by trades assembly and lodges composing the same. Official copies by mail.

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 29, 1886.

Whereas certain measures are now pending in Congress for the regulation of the manufacturing and sale of butterine and oleomargarine and the imposition of tax thereon amounting to a prohibition; and

Whereas the manufacturing and sale of this article is a legal business, furnishing a clean, palatable, healthy, and nutritious article of food at a reasonable price, and that the effect of this legislation will be to increase the price of a cheap and wholesome food product and destroy the labor its manufacturing employs; and

Whereas the only reason given for this legislation is that it comes in competition with butter:

It is resolved, That we protest against the passage of such measures as unjust and injurious to the laboring classes and as opposed to the principles of sound public policy.

It is further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of this assembly.

The foregoing preamble and resolutions were adopted at a session of the trades assembly of Western Pennsylvania for the purpose of taking prompt action in regard to a bill now pending before Congress entitled "A bill to regulate the manufacturing and sale of butterine or oleomargarine."

RICHARD ENNISS,
President of Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.
THOMAS J. DICUS,
Secretary Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.

Mr. PALMER presented a petition of Mrs. N. K. Hill and other ladies of Hillsdale, Mich., praying for legal protection for young girls in the District of Columbia and other places under the jurisdiction of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. VEST presented the memorial of C. M. Shuster and other citizens of Saint Joseph, Mo., and the memorial of James T. Thornton and other citizens of Kansas City, Mo., remonstrating against the passage of the oleomargarine bill; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VEST. I present the petition of certain Indian chiefs in the Territory of Montana—Under Bull, chief of the Gros Ventres; Medicine Bear, chief of the Assinaboines; Crow Chief, Sits High, White Bird, Bushy Head, Enemy-Killer, Whitan, Sleeping Bear, Blackbird, Black Crow, and Tere Running-Fisher, head chief of the Gros Ventres and Assinaboines, asking that they may be removed to the country known as the "Little Rocky Mountains," and that they may have farmers to educate them in husbandry, and that their children may be educated to speak English and how to live like the white man.

This petition comes to me addressed to "The President and his great council;" I suppose it means the Congress of the United States. It is prepared by Father Frederick Eberschweiler, a Jesuit missionary of the Assinaboines and Gros Ventres.

Three years ago as a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs I had a council with these Indians at Fort Assinaboine. I introduced a bill at the beginning of this session to carry out what I believe to be the best measure for their interests on the part of the Government, and that is to let them dispose of a large portion of their reservation and remove what is left of these two tribes to what is called the Little Rocky Mountains, which is a much more favorable reservation than their present one, and is one to which they are very anxious to go.

These are the Indians a large number of whom in the winter of 1883–'84 starved to death; and the story they tell of their suffering is the most pitiful one that I have ever read in the English language. They were compelled to bring in their children, their daughters, and sell them at the fort. They sold them at 25 cents apiece in order to get food, and then a large number of them died from starvation.

These Indians inhabit what is known as the buffalo country, but there are no buffalo left. They are unused entirely to husbandry, and they are dependent upon the rations issued by the General Government.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DAWES. Before it passes from the consideration of the Senate I think it well that the Senator from Missouri should assure those Indians that a law has been passed at this session authorizing the President to appoint a commission of three, clothed with authority to visit those Indians and that reservation and agree with them upon the terms and upon the place of their removal from their present inhospitable region of country to some more propitious and desirable locality.

Just what they desire the Congress of the United States has met by a bill which has already become a law. I hope it will prove successful, because I agree with the Senator and I am in sympathy with all that idea.

Establishing upon the border of the British possessions a reservation 31,000 square miles, in which it is reported there are but 10 acres of land under tillage, and keeping those Indians there after all their game has disappeared in the frosts and snows of three-quarters of the year, is cruelty past all consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The petition will be referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. DOLPH presented the petition of John Beeson, praying that a commission composed of women and men be nominated by the Universal Peace Union and appointed by the President to visit the Apache Indians and investigate their grievances and negotiate terms; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

Mr. HALE. I present a petition in the form of resolutions of the city council, of Portland, Me., praying that prompt action be taken for the protection of American citizens engaged in the fisheries, and for indemnification to such citizens as have already suffered injuries at the hands of Canadian authorities. I ask that the petition be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The petition was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Resolutions of city council of Portland, Me.

Whereas, by order of the government at Ottawa, the schooner Ella M. Doughty, from this port, has been seized while in the prosecution of her legitimate business, and thereby an issue is compelled to be joined in relation to commercial law and comity, since the said government is disposed to execute the provisions of the treaty of 1818 in a harsh and unreasonable manner: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the city council of the city of Portland in joint convention assembled, in behalf of the citizens of a port largely interested in the fishing industry, hereby protest against the illegal seizure of our vessels as an insult to the flag they carry, and an outrage against the rights which we have in common with all other nations to carry on a peaceful commerce with a friendly nation.

Resolved, That immediate reparation should be demanded by the Government at Washington for the injuries inflicted upon the owners of said vessels, and if this demand is not at once complied with, that Canadian vessels be denied all rights and privileges which are refused to our vessels in Canadian ports.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to United States Senators FRYE and HALE and Representative REED, and that they be requested to urge upon the Government prompt action in the matter.

CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF PORTLAND,
In joint convention, May 22, 1886.

Unanimously passed.
Attest:

GEO. C. BURGESS, City Clerk.

Mr. SPOONER presented resolutions adopted by the Chamber of Commerce of Milwaukee, Wis., remonstrating against any action by Congress tending in any way to depress or discourage the manufacture and sale of butterine and oleomargarine; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

He also presented resolutions of the Sheboygan County (Wisconsin) Dairy Board of Trade, in favor of the bill now before Congress for the taxation of imitations of butter; which were referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

POTOMAC RIVER BRIDGE.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I desire to present a conference report on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, District of Columbia, commonly known as the free-bridge bill.

I will save time by stating that all the amendments named in the report relate to one change, and that is that the District of Columbia shall bear one-half of the cost of the construction of the bridge instead of one-fourth, and the Senate amendment adding the word "piers" after the word "bridge;" so as to make it read: "Purchase the bridge and the piers thereof." Then there is one additional amendment providing that in regard to the abutment on the north side of the Potomac River, about which there is some doubt as to the ownership, it is proposed to give the power of condemnation.

Those are the only amendments. They do not alter the text of the bill in any respect except that the District of Columbia shall pay one-half instead of one-fourth, as the Senate bill originally provided.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia submits a report from a committee of conference, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to Senate bill No. 200 recommend as follows:

That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate, as follows: Page 1, line 4, after the word "bridge," insert the words "including the piers thereof."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 1, line 12, strike out after the word "same" all down to and including the word "bridge," in line 15.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 1, line 20, strike out the word "one-fourth" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 1, lines 22 and 23, strike out the word "three-fourths" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 2, line 25, strike out all after the word "survey" down to and including the word "bridge," in line 26.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 2, line 27, strike out the word "one-fourth" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 2, line 29, strike out the word "three-fourths" and insert the word one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "and the length of draw."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "and" after the word "Illinois."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 3, line 8, after the word "Virginia," insert the words "Saint Louis, Missouri."

SEC. 3. That if in the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge under the first section, at any time, it shall be deemed necessary to obtain from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, or its grantees, any release or conveyance of any portion of the ground upon which the northern abutment of the Aqueduct Bridge rests, or right to cross the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal from the abutment to Bridge street, or if a good title can not be procured by contract to any property required in the construction of a bridge under the second section, the same shall be acquired by the Secretary of War by condemnation in the manner provided by the act approved May 8, 1872, entitled "An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expense of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes:" Provided That the condemnation proceedings, if any such proceedings are necessary, shall not prevent the taking possession, on payment of the purchase-money, of the Aqueduct Bridge by the United States, and opening the same to the public as a free bridge, if the same shall be acquired under the first section: Provided further, That the sum of $10,000 of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available to meet the payments under condemnation proceedings, if any shall be had.

SEC. 4. The act approved February 23, 1881, entitled "An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River, at or near Georgetown, in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," is hereby repealed.

H. H. RIDDLEBERGER,
Z. B. VANCE,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

JOHN S. BARBOUR,
J. H. ROWELL,
WM. L. WILSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I should have stated that the report provides also for the advertising for proposals in Saint Louis, Mo. That is the only other change that I omitted to mention.

The report was concurred in.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PLUMB, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment:

A bill (H. R. 248) for the relief of Henry Gee; and

A bill (H. R. 5175) extending the provisions and benefits of the preemption law to John E. White.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1418) for the relief of Henry Martin, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. I wish to say that all of these bills are for the relief of private parties in regard to entries of public lands. Two of them contain some unfortunate phraseology, but the committee did not deem it advisable to correct it and so require the bills to go back to the other House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bills will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. WILSON, of Maryland, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6721) granting a pension to John H. Westerhouse, late of Company F, First Regiment Potomac Home Brigade (Thirteenth) Maryland Volunteers, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1903) granting a pension to Mrs. A. M. Smith, submitted an adverse report thereon; which was agreed to; and the bill was postponed indefinitely.

Mr. MILLER, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2533) for the relief of E. Remington & Sons, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7773) for the relief of Capt. Hollister E. Goodwin and his sureties, reported it without amendment.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 4689) for the relief of the children of the late Surgeon Alfred M. Owen, and to increase their pensions;

A bill (H. R. 6170) granting a pension to Mary A. Van Etten;

A bill (H. R. 4552) for the relief of Susan Smith;

A bill (S. 2463) granting a pension to H. D. Hobbs; and

A bill (S. 2502) granting a pension to Louise Paul.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2301) granting a pension to Lucy E. Anderson, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the petition of Horace W. Brownell praying to be allowed a pension, submitted a report thereon, accompanied by a bill (S. 2570) granting a pension to Horace W. Brownell; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. TELLER, from the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1073) to establish a public park at Pagosa Springs, in the State of Colorado, reported it with amendments.

H. H. FAULKNER AND MARY WOODLEE.

Mr. HARRIS. The Committee on Finance, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 2357) for the relief of H. H. Faulkner and Mary Woodlee, have instructed me to report it favorably without amendment.

I will ask the consent of the Senate to consider the bill at this time, as I am sure it will not take a minute to dispose of it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Tennessee asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mr. CAMERON and others. What is the bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length for information.

Mr. HARRIS. If it consumes any time I shall not insist upon its consideration now. I think it will not consume a moment.

The Chief Clerk read the bill, and, by unanimous consent, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider it. It proposes to pay to H. H. Faulkner, of McMinnville, Tenn., $120.60, the amount paid by him for three internal-revenue stamps in January, 1882, with interest thereon, the stamps having been purchased to be placed upon three barrels of apple brandy purchased by H. H. Faulkner from Mary Woodlee, and the brandy being seized by a revenue officer before the stamps were attached to the packages.

Section 2 proposes to pay to Mary Woodlee, of Grundy County, Tennessee, $81.38, the net proceeds of the three barrels of brandy she had sold to H. H. Faulkner, but which were seized, condemned, and sold unlawfully by a United States revenue officer, and before delivery to Faulkner.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. PLATT. The bill provides for the payment of interest.

Mr. HARRIS. It provides for the payment of interest upon the $120 paid for these stamps. The stamps are in the files. The goods were seized the very day that the stamps were procured to be put upon the brandy and the stamps are sent here for redemption. It is a House bill, and I did not choose to amend it at all in that respect.

Mr. PLATT. It was reported by the Finance Committee?

Mr. HARRIS. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I do not like the idea of paying interest, but I make no objection to the passage of this particular bill.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HOUSE PENSION BILLS.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 921) granting a pension to Clara L. Preuss;

A bill (H. R. 1584) for the relief of Mrs. Aurelia C. Richardson;

A bill (H. R. 1860) granting a pension to Frederick Robertson;

A bill (H. R. 2358) granting a pension to Mary Renfro;

A bill (H. R. 2626) granting a pension to Silas K. Haines;

A bill (H. R. 2964) to restore to the pension-list the name of Abel Mishler, of Pennsylvania;

A bill (H. R. 3363) granting a pension to Jennette Dow;

A bill (H. R. 3379) granting a pension to George G. Early;

A bill (H. R. 4527) granting a pension to Elizabeth Slenbaker;

A bill (H. R. 4816) granting a pension to Mrs. Letitia J. Garrard;

A bill (H. R. 5715) granting a pension to Mary Sprague;

A bill (H. R. 6606) granting a pension to Sallie B. Bent;

A bill (H. R. 6952) granting a pension to Charles Riddle;

A bill (H. R. 7721) granting a pension to Ellen J. Welch;

A bill (H. R. 7750) to place the name of John W. Payton on the pension-roll;

A bill (H. R. 8142) granting a pension to Mrs. Annie S. Webb;

A bill (H. R. 8351) for the relief of Edward Coleman; and

A bill (H. R. 8556) granting a pension to Abraham Points.

The above eighteen pension bills were severally read twice by their titles, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2571) granting a pension to Lewis Haas; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. McPHERSON introduced a bill (S. 2572) for the relief of Michael Sutton; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2573) for the relief of William S. Warrington; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. HARRIS introduced a bill (S. 2574) for the relief of Mrs. Eliza A. Brownlow; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa (by request), introduced a bill (S. 2575) authorizing the Postmaster-General to issue double or return postal cards, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2576) for the relief of William J. Martin, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2577) for the relief of J. R. Frierson, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. BECK introduced a bill (S. 2578) to prohibit members of Congress from acting as attorneys or employés for railroad companies holding charters or having received grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States; which was read the first time by its title.

Mr. COKE. I ask for the reading of the bill in full.

The bill was read the second time at length, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That it shall be unlawful for any member of either House of Congress to accept employment as attorney at law or payment for services of any kind from any railroad company, or any officer or agent thereof, which obtained its charter or any grant of lands or pecuniary aid from the United States, and any person who violates this provision shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction be fined in any sum not exceeding $5,000 and imprisoned not more than one year, in the discretion of the court.

Mr. BECK. There has been a good deal of crimination and recrimination and suggestion backward and forward about members of both Houses being employed by railroad companies to obtain their charters. While it may have been lawful heretofore I think it ought to be stopped, and I have introduced the bill, and ask that it be laid on the table. I do not think any committee can give any information about it, and I shall endeavor to call it up at an early day and see if we can not pass it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will lie on the table.

Mr. STANFORD introduced a bill (S. 2579) for the relief of Jonathan D. Stevenson; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2580) to prevent the issue of passes to official persons, and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. PLUMB. I desire to call the attention of the committee to the bill, and to say that I hope they will report it either favorably or adversely at a very early day.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills:

A bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers;

LABOR OF LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. MILLER. I desire to take up Senate bill 2076.

Mr. DOLPH. Let the bill be read for information.

Mr. MILLER. It will only take a moment.

Mr. BUTLER. Before that is done I should like to appeal to the Senator from New York to allow me to take up Senate bill 371, of which I have given notice two or three times, which is a bill for the purpose of restoring certain naval cadets to their proper places in the Navy. There are two reports, one made by the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] and one by myself. I dislike to be so importunate about it, but this is the third time I have asked it, and I hope the Senate will take the bill up and dispose of it in the morning hour, if my friend will yield for that purpose.

Mr. MILLER. I should have no objection to yielding if it would not lead to any debate; but I am informed that it will. The bill which I wish to call up I think will take only the reading of the bill, and then the Senator's bill may come in just after that. If his bill would lead to no debate I should have no objection to yielding.

Mr. BUTLER. It will take some debate, I am very frank to say.

Mr. MILLER. Then I hope the Senator will allow me to pass this bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Debate is not now in order.

Mr. DOLPH. I should like to say a word.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not in order to say anything.

Mr. DOLPH. I understand, but there has been a little debate between the Senator from New York and the Senator from South Carolina.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair has been endeavoring to restrain it. If there be no objection the Senator from Oregon will be recognized to debate the question.

Mr. DOLPH. Merely to say a word, not to debate the question. I wish to say that I desire this morning to take up the bill which was under consideration Thursday and Friday mornings with a view to try to conclude it. I was not fortunate enough to get the floor when the morning business was concluded, but I will say to the Senators that I hope they will not press the consideration of the bills they have mentioned but will let us take up the one to which I referred, which has been partly considered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York moves to proceed to the consideration of a bill which will be read by its title.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, relating to hours of labor.

Mr. ALLISON. Is that an eight-hour bill?

Mr. MILLER. It is the eight-hour bill for letter-carriers.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill. [Putting the question.] The noes appear to have it.

Mr. MILLER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from New York explain what the bill is?

Mr. MILLER. The bill simply puts the letter-carriers of this country in the same condition as all other employés of the United States Government, to labor eight hours a day. The Department heretofore has ruled that under the peculiar wording of the language letter-carriers were not entitled to come under the law. This bill simply does this, nothing more and nothing less. It is certainly just that they should be put on an equality with all other employés of the Federal Government. That is all there is of it.

Mr. BUTLER. I have no objection whatever to that, but if there is no arrangement made for the additional time within which letter-carriers now discharge duties it might put certain localities to a very great inconvenience to have them work only eight hours a day.

Mr. MILLER. There is nothing in the bill that prevents the Postmaster-General or the postmasters of the various cities from regulating the time of beginning work or ending it on the part of any letter-carrier. It is entirely within their discretion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll. Debate is not in order.

Mr. CONGER. What is the question?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on proceeding to the consideration of the bill moved by the Senator from New York, on which the yeas and nays have been ordered.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN] who is absent.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. MAXEY. I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY] who is absent.

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is absent in the discharge of duties imposed upon him by the Senate.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], who was called away from the Senate on business, and as I do not know how he would vote, I withhold my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 32, nays 13; as follows:

YEAS—32.

Beck,	Conger,	Ingalls,	Stanford,
Berry,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Vance,
Blair,	Eustis,	Kenna,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	George,	McMillan,	Vest,
Butler,	Gray,	Miller,	Voorhees,
Call,	Hampton,	Palmer,	Walthall,
Cameron,	Harris,	Pugh,	Whitthorne.
Coke,	Hearst,	Sherman,	Wilson of Md.

NAYS—13.

Aldrich,	Dolph,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Wilson of Iowa.
Allison,	Edmunds,	Morrill,
Chace,	Hale,	Riddleberger,
Cullom,	Hoar,	Teller,

ABSENT—31.

Blackburn,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Plumb,
Bowen,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Ransom,
Camden,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Sabin,
Cockrell,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Saulsbury,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Morgan,	Sawyer,
Evarts,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,	Sewell,
Fair,	Logan,	Pike,	Spooner.
Frye,	McPherson,	Platt,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It provides that eight hours shall constitute a day's work for letter-carriers who are now or who may hereafter be employed by or on behalf of the Government of the United States; and there shall be no reduction in compensation paid for services rendered by reason of this limitation of the hours of labor.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I now move to take up for consideration the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the bill having been under consideration heretofore in the morning hour.

Mr. BUTLER. Before action is taken upon that motion I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 371.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That motion is not in order. One proposition can not be substituted for another in that way under the rules. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill he has indicated.

Mr. BUTLER. Upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays, and give notice that if the proposition is voted down I shall ask the Senate to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 371.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On the question of taking up the bill the Senator from South Carolina asks for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. Not knowing how he would vote, I decline to vote.

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN], who has been called home, and my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] is paired for the day with the Senator from Texas [Mr. MAXEY], as has already been announced.

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN]. Not knowing how he would vote on this question, I withhold my vote.

Mr. TELLER (when his name was called). I am paired on all political subjects with the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. GIBSON], but I do not consider this as a political question, and therefore I shall vote. I vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is absent from the city, and is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I announce again my pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON], who is absent on official business.

The result was announced—yeas 35, nays 9; as follows:

YEAS—35.

Aldrich,	Coke,	Harris,	Spooner,
Allison,	Conger,	Hoar,	Teller,
Beck,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Vance,
Berry,	Dawes,	Kenna,	Van Wyck,
Blair,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Voorhees,
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Cameron,	George,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Gray,	Palmer,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Hale,	Sherman,

So the motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VAN WYCK, in line 10 of section 1, after the word "main," to strike out—

Line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, except such of said lands as appertain to and are coterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished on the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the section read:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are coterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished on the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, when this bill was taken up on Friday last on my motion I did not intend to discuss its provisions unless it should become necessary to make explanations in regard to some of its features, and what I did say on Thursday and on Friday last was the briefest possible statement of what I considered it my duty to lay before the Senate. I had the floor on the bill which was taken up at 2 o'clock on Friday, the bill to provide for the taxation of railroad lands, and was about to proceed and conclude my remarks commenced on the previous day when I was induced to give way to the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] from an incidental observation, stating to him distinctly that if he intended to make a speech I would not give way as I wanted to finish my own.

I do not know that I ought to complain, however, as for nearly two hours I was delighted with the music of his voice, with his rhetoric, his logic, his continuity, and the skill with which he discussed four bills in one speech. That was some compensation for what I should otherwise have regarded as a tedious infliction waiting for him to conclude in order that I might resume the floor. The Senator took occasion during the progress of his speech to say—and I see that some of the newspapers have taken up and reiterated and enlarged his statements—that the history of this bill for the forfeiture of the North Pacific grant would show that it was in the interest of the railroad company.

Mr. President, if the gentleman intended to insinuate what I see has been substantially claimed by some of the newspapers, that I am in any manner connected with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company or any other railroad company incorporated by an act of Congress, or to which any Congressional grant was ever made or which has any interest whatever before or likely to come before Congress, what he stated was wrong and very unjust. I never had a dollar's worth of interest in the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in either its stock or bonds. I never had any official connection with that railroad company. I have not since I have been a member of this body been of counsel for or in any way or in any manner connected with that railroad company or any other company interested in any measure before this body, and I would consider such a thing highly improper.

I will say further that I am ready to support the bill introduced this morning by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], as it is a proper measure. The fact that by the bill reported by me from the Committee on Public Lands it is proposed, as was asserted here on Friday last, to forfeit something like 3,000,000 acres of land claimed by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company is sufficient to show that the allegation that the bill is in their interest or desired by them is an absurdity. Compared with the lands which it is proposed to forfeit by this bill, the amount of the lands which appertain to the uncompleted portion of the Cascade branch is small. Compared to their value the value of the lands which appertain to the Cascade branch is insignificant.

As I stated on a former occasion, the gap now uncompleted of the Cascade branch is only 75½ miles; that extends through the Cascade Mountains, where all the lands are of very little value, so that the question is one of sentiment only as to whether those lands should be forfeited.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Oregon allow me to ask him a question for information?

Mr. DOLPH. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. What is the distance from Wallula to Portland?

Mr. DOLPH. I will state the distance—214 miles.

Mr. GEORGE. Is there not a railroad already built from Portland to Wallula?

Mr. DOLPH. There is one already built, as I have stated in my remarks heretofore.

Mr. GEORGE. Built by a company who had no subsidy?

Mr. DOLPH. There is a railroad built by such a company.

Mr. GEORGE. That had no subsidy from the Government?

Mr. DOLPH. That had no subsidy from the Government or anybody else.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Northern Pacific Railroad Company now propose to build another road on that line?

Mr. DOLPH. I will come to that in a moment. It will be necessary for them to build it in the near future. Anybody who is acquainted with the geography of the country knows that the Northern Pacific for its own protection and to meet the increasing demands for transportation will be compelled to build that road in the near future.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] asked me on Thursday what the distance of the completed road was on the Cascade branch. I told him probably 100 miles. I can now inform him that there have been on the east side of the mountains 137½ miles constructed and on the west side of the mountains 50 miles, making 187 miles built of the Cascade branch, and only 75½ to build, and on that 75½ miles a tunnel is being constructed and the contract is let, and the road is being graded as I understand. I mention this to correct my former statement in regard to the length of the road which has been constructed; the distance, the Senator will see, is very much greater than I stated on Thursday. The tunnel is $1\frac{9}{10}$ miles in length.

I will say further that I am informed that on Friday last the President of the United States accepted 50 miles of that road constructed on the east side of the mountains extending to Ellensburg.

I say, therefore, that the proposition that this bill as it came from the committee, which proposes to forfeit the land grant for 214 miles, lands which are claimed by the company and which they contend are not forfeitable, is in the interest of the company is so absurd on its facce as to need no answer.

As this bill came from the committee it did not touch the Cascade branch, because the majority of the committee did not believe that it would be wise to include that branch and stop construction upon it, inasmuch as the lands for the uncompleted portion were comparatively valueless and the line of road an important one. The interest of the Government does not require that it shall be forfeited. The interest of the settlers does not require that it shall be forfeited. I repeat, the majority of the committee believed it would be unwise to interfere with the completion of that branch, and they thought it was better to attempt a practical thing, to forfeit the lands for the 214 miles from Wallula to Portland on which no work has been done and where the lands are valuable and where the grant is in the way of settlers. The committee believed it was better to do that than to load down the bill with the amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska.

While I do not believe that the ipterests of the Government require the forfeiture of the lands on the line of the Cascade branch, or that the interests of the settlers do, there are interests that demand the forfeiture of the grant on that branch. There are corporations that are necessarily interested in forfeiting that grant, and among them is the Canadian Pacific Railroad Company, whose road is already completed to Puget Sound, and they are not the only corporation. The Senator from Nebraska acknowledged on Friday that the bill introduced by him to enable the Union Pacific Company to construct branches was proposed legislation desired by the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and that insofar as they desired the passage of that bill he represented their interests here.

Now I will tell the Senate another thing that perhaps is not understood here. One object of the bill introduced by the Senator is to give the Union Pacific control of a direct line to Portland. They already control the Oregon Short Line, commencing at Granger, on the Union Pacific, and extending up to the boundary line of Oregon at Snake River, where they connect with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, one branch of it, and have a through line down to Umatilla to the junction with the branch that extends to Wallula Junction and then on to Portland. The Union Pacific Railroad Company is reaching out to get control of this Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's road, which is built from Portland to Wallula. It is reaching out for the trade of that region in competition with the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, and the Union Pacific Railroad is the most powerful interest that would naturally be opposed to the completion of the Cascade branch.

The amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is directly in the interest of the Union Pacific Railroad Company; it is directly in the interest of the Oregon Short Line Company; it is directly in the interest of the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company, because if the Union Pacific Company can secure that route directly to Portland, then they would like to cut off the Northern Pacific Railroad Company from connection with Puget Sound.

The Senator read to my colleague and myself a resolution of the Republican convention of Oregon passed two years ago, and intimated that we are not carrying out the wishes of the Republicans of Oregon as expressed in convention. As was well said by my colleague, that resolution only declares in favor of the forfeiture of unearned land grants in the State of Oregon.

The people of Oregon want something practical done; and this bill, as it was introduced by me and as it was reported from the Committee on Public Lands, is to carry out the wishes of the people as expressed in that convention and is in accordance with the resolution; and I will tell the Senator from Nebraska that if by the effect of this amendment, should it be adopted, or of any other amendment put upon this bill, the forfeiture of the grant from Wallula to Portland is delayed and this bill is defeated, he will not be able to make the people of Oregon believe—and I will not say that that is the intention of it—that the amendment is not intended to defeat the forfeiture of the grant from Wallula to Portland where there is no question but that the grant ought to be forfeited.

Since this bill was reported I have received numerous communications from all parts of my State interested in the forfeiture of this grant, expressing satisfaction with the provisions of the bill, and especially with the provisions which are made for settlers. The bill is in accordance with the wishes not only of the Republicans of my State but in the interest of the people of Oregon. They desire that we shall go directly at this matter and forfeit this land grant for 214 miles of road where no work has been done.

Then the Senator stated that the Republican convention in Washington Territory had resolved in favor of the forfeiture of this grant. Well, it is true that in the Republican convention held at Seattle last year such a resolution was adopted. But I have presented here and had referred to the committee resolutions of the boards of trade of the cities of Walla Walla and Tacoma, and petitions and papers repressing the will of the people in regard to that matter protesting against the forfeiture of the grant for this branch. The Senator should remember also that the resolutions he referred to were adopted before sufficient work had been done on this branch to indicate a present intention on the part of the company to complete it, when the people of Washington Territory believed that this branch was not to be completed over the Cascade Mountains, and that they were to be indefinitely tied up to Oregon, and that all transportation between the two portions of the Territory must be by the Columbia River. The sentiment of the people of the Territory has changed, so that to-day there is not one man in five of either party in the whole Territory but would protest against the forfeiture of this grant for the uncompleted gap in the Cascade Mountains. They are looking forward to the early completion of that branch and to direct communication with the East.

The Senator also said it was evident this bill was in the interest of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company because no attorney of the company had been before the committee. The Senator knows I introduced the very same bill at the present session that I introduced two years ago. He knows that the bill I introduced last Congress was pending for a considerable time before the Committee on Public Lands. He knows that Colonel Gray, the general counsel for the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, appeared before that committee and others, I think, and wearied the committee with their arguments against the forfeiture of this grant, alleging that it was not forfeitable. And it was my understanding at the commencement of this session that the Committee on Public Lands did not desire to hear long arguments from lawyers representing these corporations in regard to the forfeiture question, and felt themselves able to consider it without the aid of counsel.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Did they attend?

Mr. DOLPH. I will not yield for any suggestion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Did they ask to be heard before the committee?

Mr. DOLPH. I will not yield to a "single suggestion," because I recollect my experience on Friday last.

Then the Senator says that this bill as introduced provided for an extension of time for the construction of the Cascade branch. To be sure it did, and it provided something further that the experience of the future will demonstrate was a proper provision. It provided that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in order to obtain this extension of time should assent to the conditions of this bill, in other words should give up this grant from Wallula to Portland.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST] read from section 8 of the granting act to show that this whole grant if the road was not completed within the time prescribed was forfeitable. He read as follows:

And be it further enacted, That each and every grant, right, and privilege herein are so made and given to and accepted by said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, upon and subject to the following conditions, namely: That the said company shall commence the work on said road within two years from the approval of this act by the President, and shall complete not less than 50 miles per year after the second year, and shall construct, equip, furnish, and complete the whole road by the 4th day of July, A. D. 1876.

In sixty grants which had been made by Congress prior to the passage of this act it was provided in substance that if the road was not so completed at a certain time the lands should revert to the United States and become a part of the public domain; but this grant is an exception. Now I will read the ninth section to ascertain what Congress agreed with the company should be done if the railroad was not constructed within the time limited in the eighth section. The ninth section is as follows:

SEC. 9. And be it further enacted, That the United States make the several conditioned grants herein and that the said Northern Pacific Railroad Company accept the same, upon the further condition that if the company make any breach of the conditions hereof and allow the same to continue for upward of one year, then in such case, at any time hereafter, the United States, by its Congress, may do any and all acts and things, which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of said road.

That is what Congress agreed with the company should be done if they were in default for a year, if they failed for a year to construct the road within the time limited in section 8, Congress might do whatever was necessary to secure the speedy completion of the road; and the same idea is contained in section 20, the last section of the act, which reads as follows:

SEC. 20. And be it further enacted, That the better to accomplish the object of this act, namely, to promote the public interest and welfare by the construction of said railroad and telegraph line and keeping the same in working order, and to secure to the Government at all times, but particularly in time of war, the use and benefits of the same for postal, military, and other purposes, Congress may at any time, having due regard for the rights of said Northern Pacific Railroad Company, add to, alter, amend, or repeal this act.

This act is sui generis. There is no such provision contained in any of the previous sixty acts which had been passed by Congress. Congress agreed, it is claimed, that in case of default the only penalty should be that Congress might interfere and apply this railroad grant to the construction of the road. That is not simply my unsupported suggestion——

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. DOLPH. I will yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to know whether as a lawyer the Senator thinks that the ninth section of the granting act prevents the operation of the law of forfeiture in case of a grant on condition-subsequent; and if he believes that it does prevent the operation of the law of forfeiture as he understands it and as it has been expounded by the Supreme Court in a case of a failure to comply with the condition, then upon what grounds can we pass this bill?

Mr. DOLPH. I am coming to that directly. I am now answering a suggestion made by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK].

Mr. GEORGE. I want an answer to my question.

Mr. DOLPH. I am coming to that.

The Senator from Nebraska said the original bill introduced by me contained a provision that the railroad company might have a certain number of years, three years, to complete the Cascade branch. I said that was true; but it was connected with a provision that in order to obtain the time the Northern Pacific Railroad Company should assent to the provisions of the bill, and we would be able in that way to get the railroad company out of the way of the forfeiture of this grant, so that there might be no uncertainty left concerning the matter after the act has been passed.

As I said, I am not unsupported in this view of the grant, and I pass up to the Secretary a paper which is an extract from a speech made by me nearly two years ago, on the 3d of July, 1884, on the bill for the forfeiture of the Atlantic and Pacific grant, and I ask him to read a quotation from a decision rendered by Judge Deady in the United States circuit court for the district of Oregon, in 1883, in the case of Hughes vs. The Northern Pacific Railroad Company.

But the condition imposed upon the defendant by section 8 of the act is even modified by the provisions of section 9, from which it plainly appears that so far from Congress intending that the powers of a corporation should cease or become forfeit in any particular by reason of its failure or inability to keep any of the conditions imposed by said section 8, it expressly reserved to itself the right, in case of such failure for the period of one year, to "do any and all acts and things which may be needful and necessary to insure a speedy completion of the said road."

In this way Congress undertook to secure the completion of this great national work in any event, and so plainly declare in advance what otherwise might have been left to inference and argument from analogous cases, that it reserved to itself the right to deal with the defendant for any failure to comply with the conditions of the grant, and to excuse or enforce the same as it might under all circumstances deem just to the defendant and best for the public good. Indeed, in view of the magnitude and hazard of the undertaking it was expressly provided that even Congress should not take advantage of a failure to perform any of the conditions for any period less than a year. And even the land set apart by Congress to aid in the construction of the road was not left liable to revert to the public domain or be otherwise disposed of by Congress for the failure of the company to construct or complete the work as required by the act, but, as was said in United States vs. Childers (8 Sawyer, 174), it was devoted to the construction of the road in any event, and it is the duty of Congress to see that it is so applied. (See, also, on this point Southern Pacific Railroad Company vs. Orton, 6 Saw., 178.)

And this position is fortified by the fact that when Congress intended that the corporate existence of the defendant should be forfeited or affected by its failure to keep a condition imposed upon it, it has expressly said so, as in section 19, where it is provided that unless two millions of the stock is subscribed and 10 per cent. paid thereon within two years from the passage of the act, "it shall be null and void." (18 Federal Reporter, 106, 108.)

Mr. DOLPH. I will also submit an extract from an opinion of Hon. J. S. Black which is contained in the same speech:

Hon. ROBERT M. MCLANE,
Chairman of the Committee on Pacific Railroads,
House of Representatives:

* * * * * * *

Now, let us look and see if there is anything in this act of incorporation which declares that the land grant may be forfeited, or declared void, or resumed in any event.

In the first place it will be observed that the grant is in verba de præsenti—the title is vested in the company at the moment when the charter is accepted. Unlike some other grants, it does not provide that the title is to be vested as the work goes on.

It gives it all at once; and when the road is made patents may issue, not to create the title, but to confirm it. If, therefore, the right of the company is now to be taken away, the thing must be done by forfeiting a title already vested, not by refusing to make a title where none existed.

The eighth section declares that the grant shall be held upon conditions, &c., one condition being the completion of the road within a certain time, afterward extended. This I admit would, if there were nothing more, make the estate conditional, and the grantor might exact a forfeiture for condition broken.

But there is something more.

The ninth section prescribes what the penalty shall be for a breach of the condition, and that penalty is not forfeiture. In case of such breach the right is reserved to do what may be necessary to insure the speedy completion of the road. By the terms of the contract this is the only thing that the United States can do.

It excludes the conclusion which might have been drawn from the naked statement of the conditions of the eighth section.

It has been argued (I do not know by whom) that the right to "do any and all acts and things which may be needful to insure a speedy completion of the said road" includes the power to resume the land grant by legislative act. I hope this has never been asserted by any respectable lawyer, for I must say that it is absurd. I am not afraid that any gentleman on this committee will believe it.

The power to deprive a man of his property without process of law is a very different thing from the power to hurry him up in his work. This privilege to speed the making of the road, in case it did not go fast enough, was put in on purpose to negative the right of resumption and furnish another—a specific and exclusive—remedy for the public injury which might be caused by delay or negligence. Besides, the resumption of the land grant is very far from being needful as a means of hastening the work. It is just exactly the contrary. Here is a company moving rapidly along toward the completion of the greatest railroad in the world, and you propose to disable it utterly by taking away its means of going on. Call you that insuring the speedy completion of the work? You might as well cut the hamstrings of a race-horse to insure his fleetness.

J. S. BLACK.

YORK, PA., April 19, 1881.

My object, therefore, in providing affirmatively in the bill as I introduced it, that the Northern Pacific Railroad Company might have three years in which to complete the Cascade branch was to induce them to give their assent to the bill. Having the action of Congress and the assent of the railroad company which I proposed to get in that manner to the forfeiture of the grant from Wallula to Portland, I thought to avoid the question as to whether the lands were forfeitable. I did not intend to say in my remarks, as the Senator seems to have understood me, that I am satisfied that this is the correct legal interpretation of the grant; but it is an interpretation which has been placed upon it and raises a question which I desired to avoid and which I attempted to avoid in the bill introduced by me.

I did not want when the act had been passed and the grant forfeited so far as an act of Congress could do it and the land restored to the public domain that there should still be hanging over these lands and over all settlers upon them a question as to whether the grant was forfeitable or not if I could avoid it; and I believe still, though the committee differed with me, and the provision extending the time was stricken out in committee and the bill reported by me in accordance with the views of a majority of the committee—I believe time will demonstrate the wisdom of what I attempted in the bill as it was introduced of obtaining the assent of the company to the forfeiture. So much in explanation of that provision.

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to ask the Senator how he can avoid the construction which he thinks might be put upon the act by virtue of the ninth section except by getting the consent of the railroad company to a waiver of its right?

Mr. DOLPH. If the construction put upon the grant by the railroad company is correct, I do not think we could do it. I will not say that I think it is correct, but it requires serious consideration; and looking only to the interest of settlers on the lands we propose to forfeit, working in the interest of the people of my State, and being familiar with the decision of Judge Deady as to the forfeitability of this grant, I had considered that question and undertaken to provide against it so far as was possible.

In other words, I proposed to treat with the Northern Pacific Railroad. I proposed two years ago last winter when I introduced the bill, before any considerable portion of this Cascade branch had been constructed, to say then to the company, "we will give you time to construct the Cascade branch if you will waive any claim to the land from Wallula to Portland;" and I believe still that that was a wise position, a wise forethought on my part looking to the protection of the interests of settlers, at least calculated to prevent litigation which may extend through years and be a cloud on their titles.

I ought to say also that a bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands more than two years ago which included the Cascade branch. It was reported by my then colleague in the Senate. It would not have been courteous for me to have moved its consideration in this body, and the zeal of the Senator from Nebraska was not sufficient to induce him to move its consideration. It slept on the Clerk's desk, and the result has been that nearly 200 miles of the road on that branch have been constructed, until there is nothing valuable left to forfeit of the entire grant on that branch.

The very first day of this session I introduced a bill to forfeit this land grant, and I urged it upon the attention of the committee to receive consideration before other important measures were considered that were demanding the attention of the committee. I reported the bill under consideration. For the third time, on my motion it has been taken up for consideration. I stand by the record.

I said I desired to aim at something practical. I would rather not antagonize more than is necessary any interest which opposes the forfeiture of this grant from Wallula to Portland. These are the most valuable lands. That is a line upon which another road has been built by which the public are now accommodated, but nevertheless I do not attempt to conceal my position on this matter. I am not in favor myself, as I said on Friday, at this last hour when so great a portion of the Cascade branch has been completed, and looking upon the construction of this branch as I do as a very important commercial enterprise, of putting any obstacle in the way of its completion. It is not in the interest of either settlers or the United States to forfeit the grant, but is in the interest of rival railroad corporations and of rival towns to those that are springing up on Puget Sound. But at the same time I believe we shall be more likely to accomplish what ought to be done, that concerning the propriety of which there is no question, the forfeiture of the grant from Wallula to Portland, by not loading this bill down with amendments.

Mr. President, I do not believe that anything should be done by Congress for the interests of the railroad company alone. We ought to do right, we ought to be just, we ought to be just to a railroad company as well as to individuals. But that is not the controlling question with me in this matter of land-grant forfeitures. Nearly two years ago in this speech, already referred to, I stated my views of the considerations which should control our action in such cases, and I ask the Secretary to read a quotation from my speech. That position I stand by to-day.

The Secretary read as follows:

So far as questions of vested rights are concerned, the railroad companies stand before the courts and before Congress upon an equality with the Government, protected by law. The grant to a railroad company or other corporation is a contract between the Government and the company, and the right to modify, alter, or repeal it so as to affect property and rights of property does not exist unless reserved in the charter. These grants were not intended as gifts to the companies, and ought not to be continued for their benefit alone. The grants were made for the benefit of the public, in consideration of public benefits to be derived therefrom; and if proper to be made at the time, and the public interests demand their continuance, they should be continued. So far as rights of property have become vested by compliance with the conditions of the grants such rights are beyond the power of Congress. So far as equities have arisen by reason of circumstances that may have caused or may excuse the delay, such equities are proper matters for consideration.

As between the Government and the corporations, unless the public interest requires the continuance of the grants, I am prepared to vote for the forfeiture of every unearned land grant, and for the forfeiture of the unearned portion of every grant. But, until I am ready to condemn the policy inaugurated under the administration of Washington, and which received the sanction of nearly every subsequent administration until the Republican party came into power and the ardent support of the leading statesmen of every administration, I am not ready to admit that all unearned land grants should be forfeited upon the principle that grants of land in aid of internal improvements are wrong per se. The interest of the railroad company ought not to be a controlling question in determining the question of forfeiture. The test in my opinion ought to be, will the public interest be better subserved by the forfeiture of an unearned grant and the restoration of the land to the public domain than by permitting the grantee to comply with the conditions of the grant by the construction of the road and earn the grant? And as in the first instance the grant was made for the benefit of the public, the question whether it ought to be forfeited should be determined with a view of protecting the public interest.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, there are some people so constituted that you can not mention the word "corporation" or "monopoly" in their presence but it has the same effect as shaking a red rag before a bull. They come at you with horns down and and tail up, pawing the ground and bellowing. I am not one of that sort. As I said before, I would treat in matters of legislation every corporation justly, every corporation fairly, and undertake to protect equally the rights of all.

The Republican party is not, as has sometimes been asserted here, alone responsible for land grants to railroads. Between March 4, 1850, and March 4, 1861, a period of sixteen years, there were forty-seven grants made to railroad companies. Since that time there have been only forty-four grants, three less grants to railroad companies made under Republican administration than under Democratic administration. It is not a party question. The policy of granting lands to railroad companies may have been a mistake; but even now, after all that has been said upon it, in the light of experience I do not so believe.

I do not believe the grant to this company was a mistake. Look at the transformation which has been wrought in the country which this road traverses. When this grant was made it was a wilderness inhabited by hostile bands of Indians. The United States Government was constantly called upon for protection to the citizens. Now there is no longer a frontier on the line of the road. Thriving cities and towns and cultivated fields and mines which are being worked have taken the place of what was then a wilderness. The United States has received the benefit which it was to receive for this grant in the opening of the country and in the development of it. Passing over the line of this road the hardy pioneers have occupied the best lands in every quarter made accessible by it.

I hold in my hand another extract from the speech before referred to in which I discussed the question of the propriety of forfeiting that portion of this grant from Wallula to Portland and the propriety of extending the time for the construction of the Cascade branch. As it was made after more deliberation and more preparation than I am able to command in the presentation of the facts to-day, I ask that the Secretary read what I send to the desk in order that it may be incorporated in my remarks.

The Secretary read, as follows:

Mr. DOLPH. I need not to this body detail the history of this company. Nor need I state with what energy, since the company recovered from its financial embarrassments caused by the financial crisis of 1873, the construction of its road has been pushed across the continent. The rapidity with which this road was constructed attracted the attention of the whole country, but the interest in the progress of the work in other portions of the Union was slight compared with the interest with which the people of the Pacific Northwest watched its progress. All eyes were turned with expectation toward it. We waited and hoped and at last rejoiced greatly when the last spike was driven and the main line from Lake Superior to Wallula was completed, and Oregon was connected by rail with her sister States.

Wallula is about 214 miles from Portland. The Northern Pacific there connects with the Oregon Railway and Navigation Company's road, which forms a part of the through line from Lake Superior to Portland. From Portland along the south side of the Columbia to a point just below Kalama, which is upon the north or Washington side of the River, and thence to New Tacoma, on Puget Sound, the road is completed. There is also railroad connection between New Tacoma and Seattle, partly by the constructed portion of the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad and partly by a railroad constructed by another company. There is also completed and in operation over 25 miles of the Cascade branch from New Tacoma eastward, and the construction of that branch is being carried on from the Columbia River westward. It will cost a large amount of money and require considerable time to construct the Cascade branch. If the land grant of the company should now be forfeited I have no doubt that the effect of the forfeiture will be the necessary suspension of the work of construction upon this branch as well as upon the main line.

As to that portion of the grant between Wallula and Portland, applying the rule by which, as I have before stated, I think the question should be determined whether a grant should be forfeited, I think the time has come when the people will be benefited more by an immediate restoration of the granted lands to the public domain and to the operation of the land laws of the United States than by longer holding them from market in order to secure the construction of the road. I am informed that the company during last year did some work along the north side of the Columbia River upon this line, but the work has not been pushed with an energy which indicates an intention and ability of speedily completing that section of the road.

Another company has constructed a road from Portland to Wallula, which gives the public the benefit of a through line, and to that extent lessens the public benefits to be derived from the construction of the Northern Pacific road, and by causing the rapid settlement of the country along the line of the road, has increased the inconvenience and injury to the community which will be caused by the further withholding of the lands from market. Many persons have settled upon these railroad lands and are anxious to secure title. As I have before said, if it appeared certain that the road would be built at once, the most satisfactory way to secure the rights of these persons, in my judgment, would be to permit the lands to be earned and the settlers to secure their title from the company.

In considering what should be done for the relief of these persons there is a question worthy of consideration as to the power of Congress to divert the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company from the object of the grant, namely, the construction of the road, which I have already discussed. The bill offered by myself for the forfeiture of this portion of the grant avoids this question, and if it should become a law would at once, no doubt, settle the question of title to all the forfeited lands. It requires the company to assent to the provisions of the bill. The company agreeing for itself, its stockholders, and bondholders, and the United States agreeing for the public, to the forfeiture, the title to the lands and the power of Congress to dispose of them would be finally settled, whatever may be the power of Congress without such assent to declare a forfeiture of the grant.

As a condition upon which an extension of time is granted for the completion of the Cascade branch, I have no doubt that the company would assent to the provisions of a bill for that purpose by which the grant for a portion of its main line from Portland to Wallula would be forfeited. Should the bill reported from the Committee on Public Lands become a law the courts would be called upon to determine whether Congress had the power to divert the grant from the objects to which it was made. But in the mean time, and until some final adjudication of the question could be had, the title of the settlers to the lands would be under a cloud, and their value would be greatly impaired.

Looking at this question from my standpoint, unless the act to forfeit this grant should be passed in such a shape as to secure the assent of the company, I should be in favor of providing for the institution of a suit at once by the United States against the company, and all parties claiming under it whose rights are not provided for in the act, to settle finally and within the shortest practicable time the question of title at the expense of the United States, instead of leaving it to be settled at the expense of settlers under the land laws, and providing for an early final decision of the case by giving it preference on the calendars of all courts, requiring the courts to hear it, and shortening the time for appeal.

The circumstances are quite different in regard to that portion of the grant for the Cascade branch. That part of Washington Territory lying west of the Cascade Mountains is entirely cut off and separated from Eastern Washington by the Cascade Mountains. Without the construction of the Cascade branch, which is in fact the direct line, the only communication between the two portions of the Territory is by way of the Columbia River Valley. The lines of transportation and travel pass through or connect at Portland. Western Washington contains about 30,000 square miles, and is about three and a half times as large as the State of New Hampshire. It contains the great Puget Sound, with its fertile islands, capacious harbors, and its 2,000 miles of shore indented by bays and inlets. It probably now contains the most extensive and valuable forests of timber in the United States.

Underlying these vast forests of fir, pine, and cedar are inexhaustible mines of iron and coal. It has considerable tracts of the finest agricultural land. Its waters teem with fish. In short, it is a valuable portion of the great Northwest, destined to be the future home of millions of people. It was, until the establishment of the civil government for Alaska, the extreme northwestern portion of the organized territory of the United States. The citizens of Washington Territory were among the earliest and most intelligent friends of the Northern Pacific Railroad. They believed that they are entitled to direct railroad communication with the eastern portion of the Territory and with the main line of the Northern Pacific Railroad by way of the Cascade branch.

I believe they are so entitled. I am frank to say that in my opinion the construction of the Cascade branch would not be immediately advantageous to Oregon, or to Portland, its chief city, and I even doubt whether its present construction would be profitable for the company itself. I base my action in this matter upon broader grounds than the interest alone of the people of my State. I believe I should be false to my duty if I permitted myself to be governed by such a consideration, and by my silence, my voice, or my vote helped to place an obstacle in the way of the completion of this branch. I shall be governed in this matter by what I conceive to be the interest of the whole Northwest and of the whole country, and will not without a protest see so large and promising a section of the country cut off from direct communication with the railroad system of the Union at a time when the long-deferred hopes of its people seem about to be realized.

Illinois, Mississippi, Alabama, Florida, Louisiana, Arkansas, Missouri, Iowa, Michigan, Wisconsin, Minnesota, and Kansas have all received from the Federal Government valuable lands for the purpose of aiding the construction of railroads, and many other States and Territories have received the benefits of valuable grants made to corporations to aid the construction of railroads within their limits. By the liberality of the Government they have been given the facilities of railroads and telegraphs, daily mails and schools; their resources have been developed, their unoccupied lands settled and cultivated, and they have grown strong and independent of further national aid. Are the representatives in this body of these States which have been heretofore so highly favored by the General Government, and whose Senators and Representatives were once suppliants for aid from the Federal Government for railroads for their States, willing to deprive far-off Washington Territory of the aid heretofore granted to secure to her a single direct railroad connection with the railroad system of the country?

It is said that the time is past when it is necessary for the Government to aid in the construction of railroads. That may be true in most of the States and Territories, but it is not true as to Washington Territory. The condition of that Territory to-day is practically the same as was the condition of the Territories of the West when they received liberal Government aid for the construction of their railroads, and which now, by reason of the settlement of their territory and the development of their resources, no longer require assistance. The sparse population of the great Northwest, the difficulties of constructing railroads, the great cost of the transportation of railroad material, the high prices of labor, render the cost of railroad construction very great.

To the Government itself the question as to whether the land grant of the Northern Pacific shall be forfeited and restored to the operation of the land laws, or earned by the railroad company and sold to settlers, is of no great importance. I am not concerned about the sum that would find its way into the public Treasury if the lands were restored to the operation of the land laws. My concern is to know what is for the best interest of the people of Oregon and Washington Territory and of the whole country. If any people deserve liberal treatment at the hands of Congress it is the people who braved the dangers and endured the tolls and hardships incident to pioneer life in that country, and who have waited so long for the tide of immigration just now setting toward it.

I am asking of Congress in behalf of Oregon, in view of our great extent of territory, our great and rapidly increasing internal, interstate, and foreign commerce, our great rivers, our extended seacoast, our rapidly increasing population and development, liberal appropriations for the improvement of our rivers and harbors. I should feel in a measure estopped from asking such liberal treatment in this regard as our people deserve if the reasons for doing so were not strong enough to prevent me from assisting in depriving the people of Washington Territory of the aid heretofore granted by Congress for the construction of the great highway across the continent which for the last quarter of a century has been the object of their hopes by day and the subject of their dreams by night.

I briefly call attention to another matter which I deem worthy of careful consideration in connection with the proposition to forfeit the land grant for the Cascade branch of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. The Canadian Government has expended large sums of money in the improvement of the St. Lawrence River, and is making a great effort to secure the trade of the Northwest. The Canadian Government has also already expended and is expending fabulous sums in pushing the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railroad. It seems certain that in a comparatively brief period we may look for the completion of that road, and when that time arrives there is scarcely a doubt but that Great Britain will subsidize a line of steamships between the city of Victoria and Hong-Kong and other ports of China and Japan, and Victoria will become a competitor for the trade of the East, not only with Portland and the cities of Puget Sound, but with San Francisco, which has hitherto enjoyed a monopoly of that trade on the Pacific coast. In view of this fact it is not alone Western Washington or the people of the Northwest or the stockholders and bondholders of the Northern Pacific that are interested in securing a through line of railroad for the Northern Pacific from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, but such a through line is a national necessity to enable us to fairly compete with Great Britain for the commerce of China and Japan.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, I have felt it incumbent on me, in view of the character of the discussion on Friday last, to say this much in regard to my position on this bill, to state this much of its history and the history of the legislation which has been proposed on this subject. I have quoted from my speech of 1884 to show that my position to-day is my position of two years ago. This speech from which I have quoted was circulated among my constituents all over the State. So that the Senator from Nebraska need not concern himself about the people of my State or ask whether I am carrying out their wishes or not. I am representing their wishes, and if I were not it would not affect my action. I respect the people of the State who have honored me with a position in this body, the highest within their gift.

Every suggestion made by a representative body or by an individual of that State receives careful consideration. I recognize that I am, in a measure, a servant of theirs, their agent here, and I think no member of this body will accuse me of not having served them with zeal and diligence since I have been a member of this body, whatever may be said in regard to the ability and the discretion with which it has been done. But I have other duties to perform here; there are other duties which require the attention of a United States Senator, and when the time comes that upon a great national question, a great commercial question, I can not speak and vote for what I think is right and just and for the advancement and prosperity and glory of this great nation, I will no longer act at all. A man may be a successful politician for a time who is willing to trim his sails to every wind of popular opinion, but in my judgment he will not serve at all times the interests of his country.

Having said this much, I submit, so far as I am concerned, the amendment to the Senate.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi desire to proceed now, as there are but ten minutes of the morning hour left?

Mr. GEORGE. I will go on. I have some facts to present.

Mr. HOAR. If the gentleman having this bill in charge prefers and the Senator from Mississippi prefers, I will ask that the Senate proceed with the bankruptcy bill now, and let his remarks be made consecutively to-morrow. But I will not force such a suggestion on anybody.

Mr. GEORGE. I prefer to go on at this time until the morning hour expires. I have some facts that I desire to present to the country and the Senate in relation to this railroad forfeiture, and they may as well be gotten in now as at any time hereafter.

I desire to say in the outset of the remarks I propose to make that I would not have voted as I did this morning to take up this bill if I had regarded the action of the Senate on railroad-land forfeitures was to be confined simply to the passage of this bill. I regard this bill as really insignificant. I regard it as really doing nothing in the discharge of the great duty which the American Congress owe to the American people in reference to railroad land forfeitures. I understand that this line of railroad, on that part of it which lies between Wallula and Portland, Oreg., and along the line of which this forfeiture is to take place, and only along that line, has already been preoccupied by another railroad whose charter was granted by the State of Oregon.

It also appears that this Northern Pacific Railroad, with its magnificent grant of land equal in area to the States of Indiana and Massachusetts combined, with all this backing on the part of the Government, and with obligation, as was supposed by the law making the grant, to build a railroad from Wallula to Portland as a part of the whole line required to be built, was unable or unwilling to build it within the time fixed by the law, and that another railroad company, without a dollar of subsidy from anybody, without an acre of land or a bond or anything of that sort, as a mere commercial speculation because it was a good investment for the money, built the road before the Northern Pacific Company reached Wallula; so that its road, when it reached the point in the long and dilatory years in which it neglected to build it, found this part of its line already preoccupied by another railroad company. And of course, finding the territory already occupied, it did not undertake to build its road, and so far as I know now, so far as any evidence has been produced to the Senate, the Northern Pacific Railroad Company does not propose to build the road by which it could earn the the lands attempted by this bill to be forfeited. So all of our legislation as now presented in this bill in favor of enforcing the rights of the United States and the rights of the people of the United States in reference to railroad forfeitures amounts simply to this, that we propose to declare that forfeited to which the railroad company does not even pretend to have any right.

Then I was justified in saying that if that was all that was proposed to be done when we act upon this bill, I should not have voted to take it up. I think it is wholly immaterial to the rights of the United States whether this bill in the shape in which it was reported by the committee is passed or not. Amendments have been offered, and I am in hopes that other amendments will be offered, as we have the question up, by which the sense of the Senate will be tested on the general question of the forfeiture not only of the grant for this railroad company, but of all grants to railroad companies that have been made in the last twenty years.

And right here before I go further I will allude to a remark made by the Senator from Oregon just before he took his seat in reference to the policy of the two parties on the subject of railroad grants. He said the policy of making grants to railroad companies did not originate with the Republican party. True it did not; it originated with the Democratic party, but the difference between the two parties as I understand it and as the history of the country shows is that under Democratic rule a very small, a very moderate, and a very just donation was made by the General Government in aid of the building of railroads. In no instance so far as I remember were more than six sections per mile, amounting, I believe, to three thousand eight hundred and some odd acres to the mile, ever granted by the Democratic party. The people of this country were satisfied with that. It was but a fair and just encouragement to the building of railroads in sparsely settled localities and in which the United States was a great landed proprietor.

But in this case there was a departure from that. The grants here are enormous. They extend in the States to ten sections per mile, 6,400 acres per mile; in the Territories to twenty sections per mile, 12,800 acres per mile. And this very railroad company whose case is now before the Senate received a grant of 42,000,000 acres of land. Think of that, an area larger than the States of Indiana and Massachusetts combined. The company received it on a condition. The act was passed the 2d day of July, 1864. The condition was that they should commence the work within two years and finish it within twelve. They made no effort so far as appears; not a spade was put in the ground, not a bush or tree was cut away from the right of way by the railroad company; the whole time elapsed; and in July, 1868, they came in here and got another privilege, and that was that they should have two years more in which even to make a commencement. The original grant was made during the war, when it was regarded as a means of national defense, in 1864. After the war and the time had expired they had done nothing up to July, 1868.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair must call the attention of the Senator to the fact that the hour of 2 o'clock has arrived, and it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, which is the bankruptcy bill.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to move certain amendments, to which I think there will be no objection, and I will simply say that nearly all of them are in the line of striking out what seem to be regarded as the harsher features of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Massachusetts yield a moment to me? I should like to inquire if the Senator from Mississippi has any wish to go on and finish his remarks at this time?

Mr. GEORGE. I should like to go a little further.

Mr. HOAR. I consider myself rather bound to go on, having yielded to these land bills three or four times, and I am as anxious as anybody that they should maintain their precedence. I suggested in private to my honorable friend from Mississippi that I thought we ought to go on with the bankruptcy bill, and I want to try and finish the bankruptcy bill in a very short time, I hope to-day; so that, perhaps, the Senator may have an uninterrupted time to-morrow.

Mr. GEORGE. The Senator may go on with the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. HOAR. In line 23 of section 15 I move to strike out "six" and insert "twelve."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 15, line 23, it is proposed to strike out "six" and insert "twelve;" so as to read:

The supervisor shall visit and inspect the office of every clerk and commissioner within his circuit as often as once in every twelve months.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Now I move to strike out the first paragraph of section 26, down to line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, in the chair). The Senator from Massachusetts moves to strike out part of section 26, which will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be stricken out, as follows:

That at any time before or within three months after the adjudication, upon proof being made by affidavit, to the satisfaction of the judge, that any bankrupt or person against whom proceedings in bankruptcy are pending is about to leave the district, and that his departure will hinder, impair, or delay the proceedings therein, the judge may issue his warrant to the marshal directing him to arrest said bankrupt, or supposed bankrupt, and him safely keep until he shall give bail or recognizance, in a sum to be specified in said warrant, for his appearance, from time to time, as required by the court, and for his obedience to all lawful orders of the court in said proceedings.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I now move, in section 30, line 10, after the words "the Fourth of July," stating what days shall not be counted in enumerating time, to insert the words "or other day made a legal holiday by act of Congress."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 30, line 10, after the word "July," it is proposed to insert "or other day made a legal holiday by act of Congress;" so as to read:

Or on any day appointed by the President of the United States as a day of public fast or thanksgiving, or on the Fourth of July, or other day made a legal holiday by act of Congress, in which case the time shall be reckoned exclusive of that day also.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 33, line 15, I move to strike out the words "or open accounts made, passed, or contracted in the course of his business;" and in line 17 to insert the word "was" instead of "were," which is required to make the sentence grammatical if the first amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 33, lines 15 and 16, it is proposed to strike out the words "or open accounts made, passed, or contracted in the course of his business;" and in line 17 to strike out "were" and insert "was;" so as to read:

Or has suspended and not resumed payment of his commercial paper for a period of thirty days after the same was payable.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 34, line 8, I move to strike out the words "by the next mail" and insert "forthwith."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 34, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "by the next mail" and insert in lieu thereof the word "forthwith;" so as to read:

In all cases, voluntary or involuntary, the petition for adjudication may be filed with a commissioner, who shall send the same forthwith to the clerk of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 35, line 36, I move to insert, before the word "the," where it occurs the first time, the word "all;" and in the same line to strike out the words "consenting are the only parties;" and in line 37, after the word "interested," to insert the words "have had opportunity to appear and prosecute the petition;" so as to read:

All parties interested have had opportunity to appear and prosecute the petition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 35, line 36, after the words "satisfied that," it is proposed to insert "all;" and after the word "parties," where it first occurs in the same line, to strike out the words "consenting are the only parties;" and after the word "interested," in the next line, to insert "have had opportunity to appear and prosecute the petition;" so as to read:

If the issue is found against the petitioners, the petition shall be dismissed, but it shall not be dismissed for want of prosecution, or by consent of parties, unless the judge is satisfied that all parties interested have had opportunity to appear and prosecute the petition, or that the acts of bankruptcy have not been committed, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 42, line 21, I move to strike out the words "levy, seizure;" so as to read:

And every attachment, garnishment, charge, or lien existing upon the property of the bankrupt," &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I should go back and strike out, in lines 16 and 17 of the same section, the words "and this whether judgments have been obtained or not." I move that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Now, in line 23 of the same section I move to strike out the word "judgment."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In line 25, of the same section I move to strike out the word "levied."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Then I move to strike out, in line 29, all after the word "appointment," down to and including the word "trustee," in line 30. In the print of the bill that I have line 29 follows line 27 in number, but not in the text. The amendment begins, "And the money or property in the hands of any officer," &c.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 28 of the same section it is moved, after the word "appointment," to strike out all down to and including the word "trustee," in line 30; as follows:

And the money or property in the hands of any officer arising from such levy or seizure, before payment to the creditor, shall be the property of the trustee.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move, in line 32 of that section, to strike out "levy."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out the words "judgment or seizure," in line 33, and insert the word "or" after "lien;" so as to read:

Any such lien or attachment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. I move to strike out, in line 34, the words "was levied or," at the beginning of the line.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPOONER. Let section 42 as amended be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The section as amended will be read.

Mr. HOAR. Let the reading begin at line 13, where the amendments begin.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And the trustees shall have the right to avoid any transfer which the judgment creditors or other creditors of the bankrupt, or any of them, might, by any way or means, have avoided; and the estate in his hands shall not be subject to any liens, charges, or incumbrances which, for want of record or otherwise, would not then have been valid as against the creditors of the bankrupt, or any of them; and every attachment, garnishment, charge, or lien, existing upon the property of the bankrupt, by virtue of any process, or proceeding against him by any creditor or creditors, at law or in equity, entered, or laid within three months before the bankruptcy, such period to be reckoned as herein provided in relation to acts of bankruptcy, shall be dissolved by such adjudication and appointment: Provided, That all the lawful and taxable costs and charges of the creditor and officer in respect to any such lien, or attachment, or of the suit in which it was laid, incurred in good faith, shall be a first lien upon the property affected thereby.

Mr. HOAR. Now, in section 45, line 8, I move to strike out the words "the wife of the bankrupt or" and all the rest of the section after the word "manner," in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 45, line 8, it is proposed to strike out the words "the wife of the bankrupt or;" and in line 12, after the word "manner," to strike out all down to and including the word "attendance," in line 15, as follows:

If the bankrupt's wife fail to attend after due notice, the bankrupt shall not be entitled to a discharge, unless he proves to the satisfaction of the court that he was unable to procure her attendance.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Now in section 67 at the end of the section I move to add these words:

And may admit any claim which may be duly established by competent evidence in cases where the proof required by section 66 can not be had.

I will state that section 66 requires an oath to be administered to the creditor or some duly authorized agent or attorney of his as preliminary to the proof. Now, suppose a man were absent in the East, or were where he could not be reached, his then place of abode not being known, and a promissory note against the debtor were left in the hands of some one, unless he made him an agent to prove his claim there might be doubt whether that claim could be proven at all without the form of oath prescribed in section 66, a searching oath to the conscience of the creditor. So it seems proper to provide that the court may admit a claim which is proved by competent evidence.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 78 I move to strike out all the section after line 30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The fact that a transfer was not made in the ordinary course of the debtor's business shall be prima facie evidence of fraud on his part and of a reasonable cause of belief thereof by the other party.

The period of six months shall be reckoned in the same manner as herein provided in respect to acts of bankruptcy.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. Now, in section 82, line 10, I move to strike out after the word "or" the words down to "he," in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 82, line 10, after the word "or," it is proposed to strike out all down to and including the word "he," in line 12, as follows:

Being a trader whose annual transactions exceed $5,000, he has failed to keep proper books of accounts, or that he.

So as to read:

Or has without valid excuse failed to obey any order of the court.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In the same section I desire to amend a mistake in the printing simply. In line 17 there should be a period after the word "credit," and the next word "the" should begin with a capital letter.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That correction will be made unless there is objection.

Mr. HOAR. In section 102, line 4, after the word "shall," I move to insert the words "knowingly and fraudulently." I think that is the intent of the section now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The proposed amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of section 102, after the word "shall," it is proposed to insert the words "knowingly and fraudulently;" so as to read:

That any person who shall knowingly and fraudulently present any false or fictitious or substantially exaggerated debt or claim for proof against the estate of a bankrupt, or who shall knowingly and fraudulently use any false, fictitious, or exaggerated claim in composition, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HOAR. In section 108, I move to strike out after the word "person," in line 7, all down to the word "chancery," in line 12.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The words proposed to be stricken out will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

And no judge shall appoint any person to office under this act who holds any other office of profit or emolument under the laws of any State or under the laws of the United States, excepting justices of the peace, notaries public, commissioners of deeds, and masters in chancery.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move to strike out sections 33, 34, 35, and 36, being all that part of the bill which provides for involuntary bankruptcy.

I am ready to vote for a bill which allows the unfortunate debtor to start again in life by a surrender of all his estate and getting a release from his debts; but I am not prepared to vote for an involuntary scheme of bankruptcy, especially if it be characterized as this is by very harsh proceedings. I call the attention of the Senate to some of them, so that we may know exactly what we are doing.

I will premise what I have to say, however, by stating that I have no very strong faith I shall succeed in the motion which I have made; but I believe it to be my duty to make it and present my reasons to the Senate for the adoption of the amendment as being just and proper.

In the first place, Mr. President, the whole theory of these sections is based upon a fallacy which I believe to be a great wrong to the people of this country. That fallacy, as claimed by the Senator from Massachusetts, is this, that when a man becomes insolvent he ceases to be the owner of his property; that it then becomes the right and the proprietorship of those whom he owes. That is not true by our law as it now is, and it is such a wrong that it ought not to be enacted into a law. It is peculiarly wrong in America, it is peculiarly contrary to the genius of our institutions and to the habits, the history, and the aspirations of our people. The common law is sound and good enough for us. I do not desire to change it. That law is that when a man becomes indebted and is insolvent he still remains the owner, the absolute proprietor of his property.

It is true that that proprietorship is clothed with an equitable trust which he is obliged to preserve, but the ownership of his property, the management of the property, the disposition of the property within legal rules belongs to him and not to his creditors, so that a man being in insolvent circumstances has no right to be generous at the expense of the creditor. He can not give away that which belongs to him so as to affect their rights; but he has the right in nearly every State in the American Union to so manage and control that property, without depriving any of his creditors of the benefit of it, without secreting it for the benefit of himself and family; with these exceptions he has the right to manage it as a trust for the benefit of his creditors.

This bill steps right in and says that when a man becomes insolvent he is either a knave or a fool; that he is not after that time to be allowed his ordinary rights secured to him by the law of the land to manage his property. It is to be taken out of his hand and put where? Put in the management of a court, which of all places, of all tribunals, of all agencies known to the human race, is the least fit to manage it with success. It is proposed to put it in the hands of a judge, and to put it in the hands of men who feel no interest in the preservation of his honor or in the increase of his assets, whose sole interest is official. Complying with the law, they think they have discharged all that is incumbent on them.

Now, I say that idea is the foundation of this bill; that when a man becomes insolvent he is to be treated either as a knave who will rob his creditors, who will not make a fair and just disposition of his property for the benefit of those to whom he is indebted, or that he is a fool and incapable of so doing.

I am not willing to vote for a bill which is founded upon any such principle. I am not willing to say to the people of America that when misfortune overtakes them, when they are unable by reason of some calamity over which they have no control and for which they are not responsible, some calamity produced it may be by the Government itself perhaps, sometimes produced by the agents of the Government, the banks—I say I am not willing to say to the people of America when thus circumstanced, when they find themselves unable to meet at the day or within thirty days thereafter their obligations, that they shall no longer be trusted, that the management of their affairs shall be taken from them and given to a court.

A man who has the slightest knowledge of the habits, of the private history of the American people knows that it is a part of the history of every successful man, every energetic, pushing man, that some time in his life, for causes for which he is not responsible and over which he has no control, he may be unable to meet his obligations according to their letter, and yet that same man being left to manage his own property, to devote his own talents, his own energy, his own management to it, may be enabled afterward to pay every debt he owes and save the estate for himself. That is true; and it is a part of the glory of our institutions, of the blessings by which we are surrounded, that men thus circumstanced have the power, the ability to wrestle with adverse fortune and finally save themselves. This bill prohibits this. It says to the trader, "Whenever you remain thirty days in default on your commercial paper or on open accounts"——

Mr. HOAR. That is stricken out.

Mr. GEORGE. When?

Mr. HOAR. Just now.

Mr. GEORGE. Struck out this morning? How is it now?

Mr. HOAR. "Open accounts" are stricken out altogether.

Mr. GEORGE. Then on his commercial paper; and I can not see any justice in striking the one out and leaving the other to stand. If it is a debt, it is a debt. If he has agreed to pay it orally and it rests on an open account, he is as much bound in law, in honor, and in decency to pay it as if he had given his note. It is only a difference in evidence, as my friend from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] suggests.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me for saying a word at that point? I do not wish to interrupt his speech or engage in a debate.

The difference is precisely this: that when the commercial paper is given both the creditor and the debtor know that they are putting the debt into a form which is privileged within the operation of the bankruptcy law. If they have an open account they know that it is not.

Mr. GEORGE. If an open account is by this bill brought within the operation of the bankrupt law, each party would know it just as much as he would in the case of commercial paper. It is only a question of knowing the law, and under our system every man is presumed to know the law.

A man then having given his note, if he is thirty days in default he is put into bankruptcy. It is understood and was decided by the Supreme Court of the United States under the old bankruptcy law that a default on commercial paper for the time specified in the act constitutes legal insolvency, and if a man were worth $100,000 and went to protest and remained under protest for thirty days for but $10,000, he would be no longer entitled to manage his estate—he became legally insolvent.

That does not suit the people of this country. It does not suit the agricultural people of this country, of any part of it. Especially it does not suit the agricultural people of the South and West. I will state to the Senate how those traders carry on business in the Southern States so that they may know how unjust the provision of this bill is. I will take my own State, which I suppose illustrates all of them. A large portion of the agricultural laborers there are colored people. They rent lands; they do not hire themselves to work. There are very few laborers in Mississippi working on the farms as laborers for wages. They rent lands, and a great many of them rent mules and agricultural implements; and then they get their supplies from the country merchant, commencing in the beginning of the year. He supplies them from time to time until the crop is gathered, when his debt is paid.

The country merchant buys goods from the North. A bad season comes; the price of cotton falls, as it did this year, from 10 to 7 cents a pound. His country customers are unable to meet their debts this year, though perfectly good, and he is unable to keep his engagements in New York and Boston. Yet he is perfectly solvent. There are no banks there to loan him money. There is no extra money in the country to borrow; what is to be done? He defaults on his note, and he is a bankrupt, when he is worth three or four or five times the amount of the debt for which he is put into bankruptcy. He has started with these colored people to supply them through the year. He fails in June.

He has advanced them half enough to make the crop. His store is closed. He has mortgages on these crops. The result is that failing to be able to furnish supplies until the end of the season he fails to collect one dollar from his customers. They must resort to some one else or they must abandon the fields they have undertaken to cultivate. Either one thing or the other must be done; either these laborers, these tenants who have rented these lands must, when the merchant who has undertaken to supply them for the year fails and is unable to supply them further, abandon the crop which they have planted or they must get somebody else to supply them. Nobody else will supply them as long as this prior lien exists on the crops.

Then again other calamities occur. An overflow comes, a storm, a long drought comes, and the country merchant who has his credit out among the agricultural people fails on that account to be able to get the means to keep his engagements, and yet with another crop, with another season, the debts are made good and very nearly all made good. But under this bill, whenever an occasion of that sort occurs, there is trouble. The merchant's credits are taken and sold by the trustee in bankruptcy; he pays, perhaps, 50 cents in the dollar and is ruined himself.

Then I object to this bill because it makes it an act of bankruptcy for a man to exercise his right accorded to him by the law of his State to prefer one creditor to another. It is not necessary for me to remark to the Senate how essential it is sometimes for a man in failing circumstances, how his honor requires, that he should pay one man in preference to another. At all events it is a right accorded to him by the law of nearly every State in this Union, and yet if he does anything of that sort he is made subject to these involuntary proceedings.

But then again, upon a point on which the Senator from Massachusetts and myself disagree materially, there is a provision in this bill of this very extraordinary character:

Or who, being insolvent, makes a preference to any creditor as hereinafter defined, or makes an assignment for the benefit of existing creditors, with or without preferences, shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy.

When the question was up a few days ago the Senator from Colorado [Mr. TELLER] animadverted with some severity upon this provision of the bill. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in response to that said that an assignment of that sort was void by the common law. I took issue with him upon that point, and I propose now to show that I was right and that the Senator from Massachusetts was wrong. I first read a well-recognized authority upon this subject; I read from Bump:

The creditors may reject the beneficiary interest given to them by the assignment, and if they do it falls to the ground and becomes a resulting trust for the debtor. But if the trust is for their benefit, the law presumes their assent to it until the contrary is shown.

That is where all the creditors reject it, upon the plain principle that you can not convey anything to anybody without his consent. You can not create a debt without the consent of the creditor; you can not make a conveyance of land without the consent of the grantee; you can not even pay a debt already created, to pay which you are under a legal obligation, without the creditor's consent. You may tender it to him and he may reject it. The debt is not paid by the tender. The only legal consequence resulting from a tender is simply a suspension of the interest until such time as the creditor accepts it. But says this same author:

The refusal of one or more creditors to accept does not render the deed invalid as to other creditors who desire to claim a benefit under it.

So, Mr. President, an assignment for the benefit of creditors, which is condemned by this bill even when made without any preference, is not void at common law as asserted by the Senator from Massachusetts. It is good at common law, and has so been pronounced by every jurist of any prominence in this country who has spoken on the subject. I read next from a decision made by Chief-Justice Marshall:

The first inquiry is into the validity of the general assignment to Mifflin and others, trustees for the creditors of West.

This instrument conveys to Samuel Mifflin, John Lapsley, and Henry Nixon all his estate, real, personal, and mixed, in trust, to sell the same as soon as conveniently may be, and to collect all debts due to the said West, and to pay and discharge the debts due from him, first to certain preferred creditors, and afterward to creditors generally.

Here is what Chief-Justice Marshall says upon that:

That a general assignment of all a man's property is per se fraudulent has never been alleged in this country.

Much less decided.

The right to make it results from that absolute ownership which every man claims over that which is his own.

Recognized everywhere except in this bankruptcy bill, which says that when a man becomes insolvent he does not own his property.

Mr. MAXEY. Allow me to suggest that at common law a debtor has a right to make preference to creditors, if he does so in good faith. The question is of good faith and not of right.

Mr. GEORGE. That is very true. The Senator from Massachusetts, however, charged that an assignment for the benefit of creditors with or without preference was void at common law. Chief-Justice Marshall says:

The right to make it results from that absolute ownership which every man claims over that which is his own. That it is a circumstance entitled to consideration, and in many cases to weighty consideration, is not to be controverted.

Here is another decision, the case of Mayer et al. vs. Hellman, decided in 1875, and under the operation of the old bankrupt law, in the Supreme Court of the United States:

The validity of the claim of the assignee in bankruptcy depends, as a matter of course, upon the legality of the assignment made under the laws of Ohio. Independently of the bankrupt act there could be no serious question raised as to its legality. The power which every one possesses over his own property would justify any such disposition as did not interfere with the existing rights of others; and an equal distribution by a debtor of his property among his creditors, when unable to meet the demands of all in full, would be deemed not only a legal proceeding, but one entitled to commendation.

Condemnation, however, by the bill now under consideration—"commendation" in the opinion of the Supreme Court of the United States, but condemnation in the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts and the bill which he is now pressing before the Senate. Then says the court:

Creditors have a right to call for the application of the property of their debtor to the satisfaction of their just demands; but, unless there are special circumstances giving priority of right to the demands of one creditor over another, the rule of equity would require the equal and ratable distribution of the debtor's property for the benefit of all of them. And so—

Here is the very point of it:

Whenever such a disposition has been voluntarily made by the debtor, the courts in this country have uniformly expressed their approbation of the proceeding. The hinderance and delay to particular creditors in their efforts to reach before others the property of the debtor, that may follow such a conveyance, are regarded as unavoidable incidents to a just and lawful act, which in no respect impair the validity of the transaction.

And so on. I will read some more:

It would be—

Says the Supreme Court in the case from which I am reading—

It would be in the highest degree injurious to the community to have the validity of business transactions with debtors, in which it is interested, subject to the contingency of being assailed by subsequent proceedings in bankruptcy. Unless, therefore, a transaction is void against creditors independently of the provisions of the bankrupt act, its validity is not open to contestation by the assignee, where it took place at the period prescribed by the statute anterior to the proceedings in bankruptcy. The assignment in this case was not a proceeding, as already said, in hostility to the creditors, but for their benefit.

There an assignment for the benefit of the creditors generally and equally, which the Senator from Massachusetts says the common law condemned and which the Supreme Court says the law does not condemn, was actually commended as a just and righteous and proper proceeding. That is a case in 91 United States Reports. Now I will read another, because the Senator from Massachusetts is a distinguished lawyer and generally very accurate in his statements and he gave a very positive opinion against what I regard as the law, and I desire to show where the truth is. In the case of Reed vs. McIntyre, 98 United States Reports, 509, an assignment made by one William H. Shuey was there attacked. The court say:

The right of a debtor at common law to devote his whole estate to the satisfaction of the claims of creditors results, as Mr. Chief-Justice Marshall declares, "from that absolute owership which every man claims over that which is his own."

Citing the very case to which I have already called attention.

Assignments of property for such purposes, not made with the intent to hinder, delay, or defraud creditors, were upheld at common law, even where certain creditors were preferred in the distribution of the debtor's effects. Nor, according to the doctrines of the common law, could the validity of the assignment to Combs he assailed, simply because its effect was to prevent the appellant from obtaining by judgment and execution a priority and preference over other creditors.

And a great deal more to the same effect. So that this provision of the common law, that it is just and right when a man is in failing circumstances to allow him to make an assignment for the benefit of his creditors equally is, as the Supreme Court say, a just, right, and commendable action; but it is by this bill made a ground of putting a man into bankruptcy, fixing as a rule for the free citizens of this country that when they become insolvent they shall not have the right to do of their own will and by their own action that which the bankrupt law says shall be done for them. In other words, by the common law of this land a debtor in failing circumstances may divide his property out among his creditors equally—it is his duty to do it—and yet this bankrupt bill, which has the reason for its being that there shall be an equal distribution of the debtor's assets among the creditors, says if he does it it is an act of bankruptcy, for which he may be proceeded against and his property taken from him and wasted in bankrupt proceedings. That is not right. It is unjust. It is substituting, as I have intimated already, the worst of all possible agencies for the agency of the man himself. This bankruptcy bill does not allow a man after he becomes insolvent to remain honest. It presumes him to be dishonest, and if he undertakes to discharge the obligations which he owes to his creditors in the very identical mode which this bankruptcy bill provides he shall, that is, by making an equal distribution of his assets among his creditors, this bill says, "You have done an unlawful thing, and we will capture your estate and turn you out and give the administration of your estate to somebody else."

Mr. President, I have named the fundamental objection which I have to these clauses authorizing proceedings in involuntary bankruptcy.

Mr. HOAR. Before the Senator sits down I wish to ask him if he understands that the debtor can make an assignment to his creditors which reserves any of the property to himself before any of the creditors are paid—that is, in trust, to pay a part of it to himself?

Mr. GEORGE. It is a fundamental principle in the law of all assignments by insolvents that nothing shall be reserved in the assignment for the benefit of the debtor; but that does not mean this, and I also wish the Senator to understand it that it does not prevent a debtor in making an assignment from leaving altogether out of the assignment a portion of his property. That is a very different principle. The debtor may make an assignment, in exact accordance with the decisions which I have read, for the benefit of all his creditors equally, or for the benefit of a part in preference and to the balance equally, transferring only that portion of his estate which is not by law exempt from execution.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I do not wish in conducting this bill, when so many important measures are pressing upon the attention of the Senate, to take up any considerable time in debate myself. I submitted the bill without any discussion in the beginning, it had been discussed so fully heretofore. But I wish to say in a few sentences, if I can have the attention of the gentlemen who are present, that I am willing, without arrogating much capacity to myself—I possess very little compared with other Senators—to undertake to prove against all contradiction and all comers that this bill, looked at simply as a matter for the interest of the debtor, treating the creditor as having no rights that a white man is bound to respect, does the debtor more good than the absence of this bill can in any possibility do.

In the first place it gives the debtor a discharge from all debts due to persons outside of his own State, which he can not get in any manner known to the Constitution of the United States otherwise. In the next place it gives him as exempt from the claim of creditors everything that his State either now or hereafter may choose to exempt. In the next place it makes an exemption liberal and humane, whether the States make the exemption or not, and in addition to their exemption ordinarily, of $500 to himself and a certain amount for the support of his family. In the next place it provides that the court may permit his business to be carried on for a year, and it is proposed to extend it for a year more before we get through, which any one man under the attachment or execution law of the State may stop in the absence of a bankrupt law. In the next place it provides for a composition by order of a majority of his creditors, which can not be done without a bankrupt law unless every single creditor agrees. In the next place it enables him to make a hundred times settlements on paying a percentage on a bargain with his creditors, which any one man who can jump on under the State attachment law and get the preference may stop without it. In other words, if I am an insolvent, an unfortunate debtor in failing circumstances, and my next-door neighbor knows that he can jump on to me first and secure all my property for himself to the extent of his debt, leaving out other creditors, he will not consent to let me pay 50 cents on the dollar, although that is all I can pay; and so with the next man, and the next. But if he knows that his attachment will not do him any good, and that if he has got it other creditors will come in and say, "You must divide this equally with us or you may have a composition under the direction of a court, or your debtor will be allowed to go on and manage his business for one year and again another year and your debtor will get a good deal more exemption under the bankrupt law than he will under the State law," the Shylock will consent.

Then here is another thing in this bankruptcy bill which does not belong to and which can not be had under any other system: The laborer gets his wages as a preferred debt. If a great manufacturer or a great planter fails, every dollar of his estate goes to his laborers before his business creditors get anything, and that is another humane proposition.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HOAR. Certainly; with a question, not a speech.

Mr. GEORGE. No speech. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from Massachusetts to that point about preference to laborers.

Mr. HOAR. I would rather you would do that after I get through.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Allow me to say that although the bankruptcy law gives them a preference out of the estate of the debtor, to be paid by the assignee or the trustee, it does not allow the debtor himself to pay them.

Mr. HOAR. No.

Mr. GEORGE. And the laborers have to employ a lawyer and go to court.

Mr. HOAR. The debtor very likely does not want to pay them; who knows? This bill gives to these workmen the absolute legal right to that property against all mankind, and the Senator from Mississippi says, "You can have it if your debtor chooses, and if your debtor does not you can not." That is the difference.

Then, Mr. President, the Senator says that I was wrong in the statement I made the other day, that a substitution for the remedy given by law by the debtor of an assignment of his own was void at common law. But whether that be true or not, that is not the point that determines this bill. The debtor can not make his voluntary assignment, as the Senator just admitted in answer to my question, and keep under it anything for himself. I do not mean that he can not leave out a part of his property from the assignment, but he can not say that the trustee shall pay over to him any portion of the estate; and therefore, if he makes such an assignment and puts in a provision for himself it is void, as the Senator admits. If he does not put in it that part of his estate which this bill secures to him, every creditor may hop on to him by an attachment or a seizure or an execution and take it away. I say, if he does put in as a reservation what the bill gives to him his assignment is void, as the Senator just admitted; and if he does put it in, it is there exposed to the first creditor who comes along. This bill absolutely secures it to him.

Mr. GEORGE. But suppose he leaves out of the assignment the property exempt by law?

Mr. HOAR. But this bill gives him more than the property exempt by law. It gives him all that; it gives him $500 for himself besides; it gives him a provision for the reasonable maintenance of his family for a certain time; and in addition to that it secures the opportunity, if it is thought best, for his business to go on for one year or two years, so that his laborers will not be turned out of employment and so that he may recover himself.

There is but one interest that this involuntary part of the bill attacks, which is the interest of the man who says, "I am going to get the whole of this property for myself. It is better for the debtor, it is better for the laborer, it is better for the debtor's family, it is better for his chance to go on and pay his debts and recover himself; but there is one man that it is not good for, and that is the fellow who stands by and says "I will attach or seize on execution the whole of this man's property and put it in my own pocket, and the rest of his creditors may whistle, and he shall whistle for his discharge."

Why, Mr. President, what is this thing that my friend from Mississippi makes so much talk about in relation to taking away from a man the right to make an assignment himself? Suppose I am in debt and a bankrupt, and can not pay over 50 cents on the dollar, who are the people who ought to have the right to say who shall be the agent who shall manage that 50 cents' worth and make the division of the part that the creditors are to have? Should the creditors who own it or the debtor who does not own it and has got through with it? He has no interest in it under any system of law, whether this bankruptcy bill passes or not. I think if it is a thousand dollars I owe which is to be divided between my friend from Mississippi and my friend from Ohio, it is a little more reasonable for those two gentlemen to say whom they will employ to divide it than it is to leave it to me, although it is the payment of a debt which I owe to these two gentlemen; and that is all there is in this argument.

If there is anything in this bill that is inhumane or oppressive on the debtor, I say that in one, two, three, ten important particulars this involuntary part of the bankrupt law, as well as the voluntary part, confers on the debtor rights which he can not get under our Constitution in any other way. It gives him in the first place his freedom and the right to stand up and be a man again, and not have the chain of a perpetual indebtedness about his limbs ever after. It gives him $500 to put in his pocket; it gives him the maintenance of his family for six months; it gives him a chance to go on in business; it saves him from having his estate gobbled up by one attaching creditor after another, making the costs swell up his burden in addition to the debt; and the only thing that it does not do, and which it will not do, and which it should not do, is that it says the men who live next door shall not stand by and attach this man's property and swell the burden of costs, leaving the creditors at a distance to go without.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am very glad to hear that this bill is in the interest of the debtor. I have been unable to find out myself that it was so. The Senator from Massachusetts says that this is more liberal to the debtor than the State insolvent laws and the State exemption laws, and the Senator claims great credit because of this clause:

> And the court may allow the bankrupt a sum of money not exceeding $500 for his support pending the proceedings, if his circumstances require it.

The court may do it. The law does not give it to the debtor. The law allows the judge to give a man who owns property $500 of it if he sees proper, and that is the great benevolence and the great bounty of this bankruptcy law!

Then again the Senator from Massachusetts said it was a great thing for the laborers of the country, that it gives them an absolute lien and preference upon bankrupt estates. I do not know what the law of Massachusetts is upon that subject, but I can tell the Senator what the law of Mississippi is upon that point. Every mechanic in Mississippi has a lien upon the work, the house, the building, or the structure of any sort upon which he labors. Further, every agricultural laborer in the State of Mississippi has a lien upon the crop until his wages are paid.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will pardon me. This bill preserves all that expressly, and says that every lien that exists shall be preserved. And it says in addition to the laborer, if the crops burn, or the man gets it out of the place, or the house burns, you shall have the first lien on all the rest of his property.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me answer the Senator. The difference between the Senator and myself is this: When this bill was up two years ago I offered an amendment which was opposed by the Senator from Massachusetts and voted down, which allowed the insolvent owing his laborers to pay them their debts out of his estate without its being an act of bankruptcy. It was voted down. You compel the laborer to whom a debt of ten, fifteen, twenty, thirty, forty, or fifty dollars may be due to employ a lawyer, to await the dilatory proceedings of bankruptcy, to go 100 or 150 miles to the court, and then await the good easy time of the bankruptcy proceedings in order to get his money.

I venture to say that a laborer having money due him by a bankrupt will not, under this bill, in one case out of a hundred, be ever able to get one dollar in the way of dividend from the bankrupt trustee under the period of twelve months, and then only after the payment of a lawyer. That is a great boon to the laborer, is it not? Here is a bankrupt who owes him. Here is a bankrupt who knows he ought to have the money. Here is a laborer who depends on his daily or weekly wages for his living. The bankrupt becomes insolvent without his knowledge. The bankrupt is willing to give him his wages; he wants to give him his wages; he knows the laborer would like to have it; and yet by this bill if he pays one dollar to a laborer it is an act of bankruptcy, and if the laborer knows he is insolvent and accepts the money he will be compelled by the bankrupt court to surrender it. That is a great boon to the laborers of this country, is it not? Turning them over to the dilatory proceedings of the bankrupt court, to a lawsuit to recover wages which they ought to have at the end of every week in order to live.

Mr. HOAR. The bill provides for all that in section 73, which declares:

That the court may, at any time after the adjudication, order payment, in whole or in part, of privileged debts, according to their rank, without formal declaration of a dividend.

Mr. GEORGE. Yes, "the court may" do it, but will the court do it?

Mr. HOAR. Always.

Mr. GEORGE. Who knows what the courts will do? They have got to convert the assets of the bankrupt into money; they have got to pay what fees are due, and then these laborers have to employ a lawyer, prove their claim, send it up to the court, and then if there is any money in hand, and the court sees proper to do it, the court may give them their money.

Mr. HOAR. There is a list of the creditors handed in at the time the bankrupt proceeding begins, showing who they are. If he does not do it he would not be discharged. The court then orders the debts to be paid.

Mr. GEORGE. The court can not order a single debt to be paid until it is proved.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator will permit me, because I have had a good deal of personal experience in administering a law like this.

Mr. GEORGE. So have I, and I never knew a bankrupt estate conducted in my life without ruining everybody, creditor and debtor.

Mr. HOAR. That has not been the experience in our State. Our people have been entirely satisfied, and the laboring classes more than anybody else. If the Senator means to say that there is no knowing what the court will do, that is applicable to all laws. We must not have any laws if we can not trust our courts. But under the provision, as I have seen it administered all my life, there was a list of the workmen, their wages, to whom to be paid, &c. This is the first bill that ever gave them all their wages in full. The old law gave them their wages for three months in full, not exceeding $100.

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator know how the provision comes in this bill about giving them their wages? It was done on my motion.

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator is making his excellent speech to show how high an opinion we ought to have of him I will agree to it, as everybody will who hears him. It is a most excellent provision; I am very glad the Senator put it in; but I was talking about a provision the Senator has not put in his own good one, and I thought he was attacking it as insufficient.

Mr. GEORGE. I am attacking it; I am attacking the bill because it does not contain another provision which I undertook to put in, and that was that the bankrupt himself might discharge these debts to his laborers.

The Senator from Massachusetts says all these debts are returned in a schedule by the debtor, and the court has nothing to do but to look at the schedule and order the debts to be paid. I say that is not the provision of the bill. I say that no man—and I call the Senator's attention to it—that no creditor can be paid until he has proved his debt according to the forms laid down in this bill. We all know how these small debts due to laborers are postponed. The court is held 100 or 150 miles in Southern and Western States from the place of the laborers' residence. They never see the assignee and never see the court, and some little speculator goes around and offers for a certain percentage, one-half or two-thirds, to collect their debt. So this bill instead of being in favor of the laborer is directly against his interest.

I do not care to say anything more on that point.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. HOAR. I move to lay the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi on the table, the debate being over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] moves to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE].

Mr. GEORGE. I ask for the yeas and nays on that motion.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Several SENATORS. Let the amendment be read.

Mr. GEORGE. The amendment is to strike out all the sections of the bill which provide for involuntary proceedings in bankruptcy. It is simply to test the sense of the Senate on that question.

Mr. HOAR. It is not necessary to read those sections.

Mr. GEORGE. Oh, no.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to lay on the table the amendment of the Senator from Mississippi.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. GORMAN (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. BERRY (when the name of Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, was called). My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "nay."

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL]. I do not know how he would vote on this question, but I withhold my vote.

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]. If he were present, I should vote "nay."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If he were present, I should vote "yea" on this motion.

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. ALLISON. On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I do not know how he would vote. Therefore I refrain from voting. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. MILLER. I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM].

Mr. CHACE (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY], and withdraw my vote.

Mr. KENNA (after having voted in the negative). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I withdraw my vote and announce the pair.

Mr. BERRY. I was requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] to announce that he was paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE]. If he were present, the Senator from Kentucky would vote "nay."

Mr. WALTHALL. I was requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to announce his pair with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. The Senator from Kentucky, if present, would vote "nay."

Mr. HALE. My colleague [Mr. FRYE] is paired with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. GORMAN].

The result was announced—yeas 11, nays 21; as follows:

YEAS—11.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Palmer,
Blair,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Bowen,	Edmunds,	Morrill,

NAYS—21.

Berry,	Conger,	Ingalls,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Eustis,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Walthall,
Butler,	George,	Plumb,	Whitthorne.
Call,	Hampton,	Pugh,
Cockrell,	Harris,	Teller,
Coke,	Hearst,	Vance,

ABSENT—44.

Allison,	Gibson,	Mahone,	Riddleberger,
Beck,	Gorman,	Manderson,	Sabin,
Blackburn,	Gray,	Maxey,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Hale,	McPherson,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Miller,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hawley,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sherman,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Cullom,	Jones of Florida,	Payne,	Stanford,
Evarts,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Vest,
Fair,	Kenna,	Platt,	Voorhees,
Frye,	Logan,	Ransom,	Wilson of Md.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is not a quorum voting. The roll of Senators will be called.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll, and 49 Senators responded to their names. During the call,

Mr. PLATT. I desire to say that my colleague [Mr. HAWLEY] was called home at the last of the week and that he will not be present in the Senate until to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Forty-nine Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present. The question recurs on the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] to lay on the table the amendment proposed by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]. The yeas and nays will be again called on this motion.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ALLISON (when his name was called). On this question I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES]. I may have to vote to make a quorum, but I withhold my vote for the present.

Mr. CHACE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY] on all questions.

Mr. COKE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS]. On this question, if he were here, I should vote "nay."

Mr. CULLOM (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT].

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. I should vote "nay," if not paired.

Mr. MCPHERSON (when his name was called). I am paired with my colleague [Mr. SEWELL].

Mr. MAXEY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY]; otherwise I should vote "nay."

Mr. MILLER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. PLUMB (when his name was called). I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but I presume, on good authority, that he would vote on this bill and all amendments to it as I would. Therefore, I vote "nay" on this motion.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

Mr. SPOONER (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. VEST]. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

The roll-call was concluded.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is a quorum present, but not a quorum voting.

Mr. HOAR. The vote has not been announced yet.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is so advised.

Mr. HOAR. I do not rise to make a criticism on the Chair, but to state that there has been no formal or official discovery that we had not a quorum voting, and there is manifestly a quorum in the Chamber. I wish to inquire, therefore, of the Chair if it be in order for me to ask a unanimous consent at this time? If it be, I ask unanimous consent the bill may stand over until to-morrow morning. It seems to me probable that this vote discloses the opinion of a majority of the Senate against the fundamental measure of the bill, and if I should remain of that opinion to-morrow morning at this time, I should ask to postpone the bill until December or make some other provision which will be satisfactory to the Senate. Senators will see that that is a grave responsibility for me to take without having the opportunity to consult with my associates in the Chamber. I therefore ask unanimous consent that the bill stand over until to-morrow at 2 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill stand over until to-morrow at 2 o'clock. There is a quorum present. The Chair has ascertained that fact by an absolute count.

Mr. GIBSON. I wish to vote "nay."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Many Senators on both sides are paired with Senators who are absent. There is much more than a quorum present. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ALLISON. I was about to say that with the consent of gentlemen I will vote on this motion so as to make a quorum. I vote "yea."

Mr. HOAR. I suggest, also, that we proceed with the land bill, if Senators see fit.

Mr. KENNA. Is there a quorum voting?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is now a quorum voting.

Mr. COKE. I object to consent being given to the proposition of the Senator from Massachusetts. Let the vote be announced.

The vote was announced—yeas 14, nays 25; as follows:

YEAS—14.

Aldrich,	Dawes,	Hoar,	Sherman,
Allison,	Dolph,	McMillan,	Wilson of Iowa.
Blair,	Edmunds,	Morrill,
Bowen,	Hale,	Palmer,

NAYS—25.

Beck,	Eustis,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Vance,
Berry,	George,	Payne,	Van Wyck,
Brown,	Gibson,	Plumb,	Walthall,
Butler,	Hampton,	Pugh,	Whitthorne.
Call,	Harris,	Riddleberger,
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Stanford,
Conger,	Ingalls,	Teller,

ABSENT—37.

Blackburn,	Gorman,	Mahone,	Saulsbury,
Camden,	Gray,	Manderson,	Sawyer,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Maxey,	Sewell,
Chace,	Hawley,	Miller,	Spooner,
Coke,	Jones of Arkansas,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Vest,
Colquitt,	Jones of Florida,	Morgan,	Voorhees,
Cullom,	Jones of Nevada,	Pike,	Wilson of Md.
Evarts,	Kenna,	Platt,
Fair,	Logan,	Ransom,
Frye,	McPherson,	Sabin,

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 14 and the nays 25. So the motion to lay the amendment on the table is lost.

Mr. HOAR. Does the Senator from Texas now, after the declaration of the vote, further object to my suggestion? It is merely for the convenience of the Senate.

Mr. PLUMB. I think a motion I will make will probably answer the Senator's purpose just as well. He will have no trouble in getting up the bill at any time a majority favors it. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 188, to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens.

Mr. HOAR. That will answer my purpose just as well.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill No. 188.

The motion was agreed to.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had on the 28th of May approved and signed the act (S. 767) for the relief of John Leathers.

The message also announced that the President had on the 29th of May approved and signed the act (S. 2136) for the relief of Edward Fenlon.

The message further announced that the President had on this day approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 1098) granting a pension to H. R. Duke;

An act (S. 1830) granting a pension to C. A. Bailey; and

An act (S. 1484) to authorize the Kansas and Arkansas Valley Railway to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

M. ROMAHN—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDNT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith Senate bill No. 1441, entitled "An act granting [illegible]nsion to M. Romahn."

The beneficiary named in this bill enlisted September 13, 1862, and was discharged May 24, 1865.

He filed his claim in the Pension Bureau December 5, 1882, alleging that in the winter of 1862, from being put on duty—standing guard excessively—he became afflicted with varicose veins. His army record shows no disability of any kind, though he served more than two years after the date at which he alleges his injury was incurred. His application was rejected on the ground that no record of his disability appeared, and that the evidence of the same filed upon such application was insufficient.

The claim now made to Congress for relief is the same as that made to the Pension Bureau with the allegation added that in May, 1865, his breast and shoulder were injured by a railroad accident while he was on detail duty.

If the latter-described injury really existed it is exceeding strange that it found no place in his claim before the Pension Bureau; while the account given of the cause of his alleged varicose veins must surprise those who are at all familiar with the character of that difficulty and the routine of army service. His continued performance of military duty after he incurred this infirmity, the fact that he made no claim for pension on that account until twenty years had passed, and the unsatisfactory evidence now produced to support his allegation tend to induce the suspicion that the decision of the Pension Bureau was entirely just and that this bill is not based upon substantial merits.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 1, 1886.

UNION PACIFIC RAILROAD.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask leave at this time to present a resolution and that it be read, and then, as I understand the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS], to whom I have shown it, would prefer to have it go to the Committee on the Judiciary, I shall ask for that reference.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the resolution will be received at this time and read.

The resolution was read, as follows:

Whereas there is now pending before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate Senate bill No. 1609, authorizing the use of public moneys in building branch lines of railroad for the benefit of the Union Pacific Railroad Company, and there is also pending before the same committee Senate bill No. 2395 authorizing said company to construct branch lines by means of stock and bonds issued on the same, and there is also pending before the Senate Senate bill No. 1200, providing for extending the payment of the debt owing by said company to the Government for a long period of time; and

Whereas it was charged on the floor of the Senate on Friday, May 28, that said Union Pacific Railroad Company had issued a large amount of fraudulent stock which is still outstanding, adding to the burden of the people who do business over said road: Therefore,

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that no legislation affecting said railroad company should be considered until said charge concerning the fraudulent issue of stock be thoroughly investigated, and the Committee on the Judiciary of the Senate be, and is hereby, directed to cause said charge to be investigated and to make full report thereon to the Senate, and for that purpose is empowered to send for persons and papers, administer oaths, and the expenses of said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB. I was going to say that I exhibited the resolution to the chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary before offering it, and he said he wished it to go to the committee. I have no objection to its taking that course.

Mr. EDMUNDS. That was the motion I intended to make without any comment or criticism upon what the mover of the resolution desires to say as to whether it is well-founded or mistaken, that the subject before the adoption of the resolution should go to a committee for consideration. Therefore I move to refer the resolution, for much or for little, to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I suggest to the Senator from Kansas to insert, after the words "fraudulent issue of stock," the words "and issue of bonds," and let the whole matter go before the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. I accept that amendment, making it read "fraudulent stock and bonds."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion to refer the resolution to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

ACQUISITION OF REALTY BY ALIENS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 188) to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, line 10, after the word "acquired," to insert the words "by devise or inheritance, or;" and in line 12, after the word "debts," to insert the words "hereafter created;" so as to read:

That it shall be unlawful for any person or persons not citizens of the United States, or who have not lawfully declared their intention to become such citizens, or for any corporation not created by or under the laws of the United States or of some State or Territory of the United States, to hereafter acquire, hold, or own real estate so hereafter acquired, or any interest therein, in any of the Territories of the United States or in the District of Columbia, except such as may be acquired by devise or inheritance or in good faith in the ordinary course of justice in the collection of debts hereafter created.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, to add, at the end of section 1, the following proviso:

Provided, That the prohibition of this section shall not apply in such cases as the right to hold lands in the United States is secured by existing treaties to the citizens or subjects of foreign countries, which rights shall continue to exist so long as such treaties are in force.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 2, line 1, before the word "per centum," to strike out "ten" and insert "twenty;" and in line 5, after the word "acquire," to insert "or shall;" so as to make the section read:

SEC. 2. That no corporation or association more than 20 per cent. of the stock of which is or may be owned by any person or persons, corporation or corporations, association or associations, not citizens of the United States, shall hereafter acquire or shall hold or own any real estate so hereafter acquired in any of the Territories of the United States or of the District of Columbia.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 10, after the word "Congress," to strike out the remainder of the section in the following words:

And all lands of any such railroad, canal, or turnpike corporation, whether acquired before or after the passage of this act, which shall not be necessary for railroad, canal, or turnpike purposes as aforesaid, shall be disposed of by the corporation holding or owning the same within ten years next after the passage of this act; and if any such lands shall not be so disposed of, the same shall be forfeited to and become the property of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee reporting the bill some explanation of it as to the public policy which requires it.

Mr. PLUMB. That can be stated in a very few words. The committee believed that persons who are not citizens of the United States or who have not declared their intention to become such should not be permitted to hold real estate within the jurisdiction of the United States.

Mr. GEORGE. In the Territorries?

Mr. PLUMB. The measure of course is limited, and the committee think that at least a safe limitation, to the Territories and the District of Columbia. Within that domain at all events, Congress has undoubted jurisdiction.

Mr. GEORGE. Does it apply to those who already own land?

Mr. PLUMB. We do not touch them. The bill operates in futuro.

Mr. GEORGE. It relates to subsequent acquisitions entirely?

Mr. PLUMB. To subsequent acquisitions entirely, and also is limited. It excepts cases where there are treaty stipulations permitting ownership of real estate by aliens.

Mr. CALL. The section of the bill to which I referred was the third, which reads:

That no corporation other than those organized for the construction or operation of railways, canals, or turnpikes shall acquire, hold, or own over 5,000 acres of land so hereafter acquired in any of the Territories of the United States.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not understand the comment of the Senator.

Mr. CALL. It is the section prohibiting corporations from owning land, the third section of the bill, to which I refer.

Mr. PLUMB. In regard to that, the committee believed that the safest ownership of land was that of natural persons, and that corporations should not have unlimited power to hold or own real estate beyond their corporate necessities, such as the right-of-way for railroads, canals, &c. That the committee believed to be a very wholesome limitation. In fact, I think if it had not been a new subject, and the committee therefore desired to be upon conservative and safe ground, the limitation would have been made much smaller than it is. Personally, so far as I am concerned, I wish it were an absolute prohibition against any holding except such as shall be absolutely necessary for the corporate purposes, to a very limited extent always; but the committee thought that in beginning legislation of this kind perhaps the amount of 5,000 acres would be safe.

Mr. GEORGE. Would it not be better to limit it as to value instead of the number of acres?

Mr. PLUMB. The trouble about that would be that the value is a subject of fluctuation; it is a subject of estimation, being different in the minds of different persons. A corporation might estimate its real estate at a much less value than it might be appraised for some other purpose or by other persons. So the committee sought to limit it to a certain area.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

Mr. GEORGE. I offer the following resolution, and I ask to have it printed and lie over:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 714 be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report it so amended as to provide for voluntary proceedings in bankruptcy only.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Let that lie over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HALE in the chair). The resolution will lie over.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House further insisted upon its disagreement to the third, fourth, and sixth amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and further insisted upon its amendment to the fifth amendment of the Senate to the bill, asked a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. BINGHAM managers at the further conference on its part.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House relating to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives further insisting upon its disagreement to the third, fourth, and sixth amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill, further insisting upon its amendment to the fifth amendment of the Senate to the bill, and asking a further conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes.

Mr. PLUMB, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on certain amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill, reported that, having met, after full and free conference the committee were unable to agree.

On motion of Mr. PLUMB, it was

Resolved, That the Senate further insist upon its amendments to the said bill numbered 3, 4, and 6, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, further insist upon its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the further conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

By unanimous consent, it was Ordered, That the conferees on the part of the Senate be appointed by the presiding officer.

The PRESIDING OFFICER appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask the Senator who has charge of the bill to allow me to call up the Chinese restriction bill without displacing the present order.

Mr. PLUMB. The pending bill will then come up as the special order to-morrow?

Mr. SHERMAN. It will be the unfinished business.

Mr. PLUMB. All right.

Mr. SHERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 1991) supplemental to and amendatory of an act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884.

I make this motion without displacing the unfinished business, which will come up to-morrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the bill indicated by him.

Mr. DOLPH. I have the floor, I believe, on the pending bill, having yielded to the Senator from Ohio several days since to take up the Chinese restriction bill, and having again yielded to the Senator from Nebraska on Friday last, who occupied the afternoon. I am glad to give way to the Senator from Ohio again, but I should like to have the fact recognized that I still retain the floor and have not concluded my remarks.

Mr. SHERMAN. That is true; the Senator from Oregon is entitled to the floor whenever the bill comes up again.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 1991.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1991) supplemental to and amendatory of an act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese, approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884.

Mr. SHERMAN. I ask for the reading of the amendments. I have no remarks to make about the bill. The first question I think is on the amendment reported from the committee to section 3. All the amendments of the committee have not yet been acted upon.

Mr. ALLISON. What is the bill now before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senate bill 1991, supplemental to and amendatory of an act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese.

Mr. McMILLAN. The indemnity bill I thought was taken up.

Mr. SHERMAN. There are two bills reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations. I hope both will be passed. One relates to a modification of the laws which were intended to execute certain treaty stipulations; the other is to pay an indemnity for damages and injuries done by a mob. The bill now before the Senate is the bill relating to the treaties. I ask that the pending amendment may be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 3, line 130, after the word "issued," the Committee on Foreign Relations report to strike out the following words:

That any person who shall knowingly and falsely alter or substitute any name for the name written in such certificate, or forge any such certificate, or knowingly transfer, utter, or have in possession, with intent to use the same, any forged or fraudulent certificate, or falsely personate any person named in any such certificate, shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction thereof, shall be fined in a sum not exceeding $1,000, and imprisoned in a penitentiary for a term of not more than five years.

Mr. HOAR. I thought the bill taken up was to indemnify certain Chinese who were injured in Wyoming Territory. That was stated by the Chair.

Mr. SHERMAN. No; it is the Chinese restriction bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 3, line 175, after the words "United States," to strike out the words "at any time within two years from the date of the issuance of the certificate;" so as to read:

The return certificate herein provided for shall entitle the Chinese laborer to whom the same is issued to return and re-enter the United States upon producing and surrendering the said certificate to the collector of customs of the district at which such Chinese laborer shall seek to re-enter, subject to the restrictions and limitations hereinafter provided as to the number of Chinese passengers who may come into the United States on any one vessel from any foreign port or place; and said return certificate, and the certificate issued under the acts to which this act is amendatory and supplementary, shall be the only evidence of the right of any Chinese laborer to return to and re-enter the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, after the word "upon," in line 7, to insert the words "his or her application, and upon;" so as to read:

That for the purpose of identifying any Chinese person other than a laborer now or hereafter residing or being in the United States, and desiring to depart temporarily therefrom, with the intention of returning to the United States, the collector of customs of the district from which such Chinese person other than a laborer desires to depart shall register such person upon his or her application, and upon being furnished with the photograph of the applicant as in the case of a Chinese laborer, and shall issue, without cost or charge to such Chinese person, the preliminary and return certificates in all respects similar to those provided for the identification of Chinese laborers by the act to which this is supplementary and amendatory, as amended in this act, and in accordance with such further provisions relating thereto as are made in this act, such changes to be made as the different character, occupation, and circumstances of the applicant may require.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 20, after the word "laborers," to strike out the words:

The purpose and effect of such certificate as evidence shall be the same as is provided in the cases of similar certificates issued to Chinese laborers.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, line 23, after the word "certificate," to strike out the words "as herein described;" and after the words "shall be," in the same line, to strike out the words "the only" and insert "sufficient;" so as to read:

And such a certificate shall be sufficient evidence of the right of any Chinese person other than a Chinese laborer, temporarily departing, to re-enter the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 5, to strike out lines 26 to 30, inclusive, in the following words:

All the provisions relating to certificates issued to Chinese laborers, and to the parties to whom they are issued, and all the restrictions and limitations therein contained, shall be equally applicable to the certificate provided for in this section, and to the parties to whom they are issued.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 7, line 23, after the word "aforesaid," to insert:

But the provisions of this act shall not preclude a judicial inquiry into and determination of the right of any person to come into the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 2, after the word "master," to insert "or other person in charge;" in line 3, after the word "vessel," to insert the word "whether;" in line 4, after the word "by," to strike out the words "a citizen of any foreign country" and insert the words "an alien;" and in line 10, after the word "nor," to strike out the words "shall any person leave any foreign port or place and;" so as to read:

SEC. 8. That on and after ninety days after this act takes effect, no master or other person in charge of any vessel, whether owned in whole or in part by a citizen of the United States or by an alien, shall take on board any such vessel, at any port or place within the Chinese Empire or at any other foreign port or place whatever, any number of Chinese passengers, whether male or female, exceeding one passenger to every 50 tons of the registered tonnage of such vessel, with intent to bring such passengers to the United States, nor bring Chinese passengers on board any vessel to any number exceeding one passenger to every 50 tons of the registered tonnage of such vessel, on one voyage, within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 8, line 17, after the word "weather," to insert:

Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each passenger so taken on board and brought within the jurisdiction of the United States exceeding the number of one passenger to every 50 tons of the registered tonnage of such vessel, be fined $500, and may also be imprisoned for not exceeding six months. That the amount of the several penalties imposed by this section shall be a lien on the vessel violating the same, and such vessel shall be libeled therefor in the district court of the United States within which district such vessel shall arrive or be found.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out section 9 of the bill in the following words:

SEC. 9. That whenever the master or other person in charge of any such vessel takes on board the same, at any foreign port or place, on and after ninety days after this act takes effect, any greater number of Chinese passengers than is prescribed in the preceding section, with intent to bring such passengers to the United States, and leaves such port or place and brings such passengers to any number exceeding one passenger to every 50 tons of the registered tonnage of such vessel, on one voyage, within the jurisdiction of the United States, he shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall, for each passenger so taken on board and brought within the jurisdiction of the United States exceeding the number of one passenger to every 50 tons of the registered tonnage of such vessel, be fined $500, and may also be imprisoned for not exceeding six months. That the amount of the several penalties imposed by this section shall be a lien on the vessels violating the same, and such vessels shall be libeled therefor in any circuit or district court of the United States where such vessel shall arrive.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in section 10 [9], in line 5, after the word "Government," to insert the words "or any other government;" and in line 6, after the word "thereof," to insert "or their body or household servants;" so as to make the section read:

That the limitations herein provided as to the number of Chinese passengers that may be carried by any vessel on any one voyage to any port or place in the United States shall not apply to persons officially connected with the Chinese Government or any other Government, or any embassy thereof, or their body or household servants, or to persons rescued from shipwreck during the voyage of and by the vessel bringing the same within the jurisdiction of the United States.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. This completes the amendments reported by the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate at any length. I wish, however, to make an observation or two before the final vote is taken on this bill.

I shall support the bill, of course, not because I believe that it is in scope and character such a bill as the American Congress should enact, but because I believe it is a great improvement upon existing legislation on this subject. I shall support it upon the principle that a piece of a loaf is better than no bread. I shall support it, moreover, because it is one more step in advance in the position taken by the American Congress in reference to this great question.

This bill is a great improvement, permit me to say, in my judgment, upon any bill that has ever heretofore at any time been reported by any committee of either branch of Congress upon this question. As a mere measure of restriction, I have no kind of doubt that it is as strong and effective as any bill could well be drawn and at the same time have kept within the provisions of our treaty stipulations with China. To have gone a step further would have been to declare what I may say that I in common with I think ninety-seven one-hundredths of all the people of the Pacific States and Territories irrespective of party believe ought to be done, and that is to enact an absolute exclusion act, and to that extent abrogate any provision that may exist inconsistent therewith in our treaties with China.

But evidently the pending bill, which as I have said is one of the best bills ever reported by any committee on this subject, is as radical a measure as we can hope to enact into law at this session of Congress. Therefore, while I desire personally to go much further than this bill goes, I give to the bill my earnest and cordial support.

When this bill was under consideration a few days since my friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] made this statement:

This proposed act, and the statute of which it is an amendment, and the treaty which those two statutes profess to carry into effect, will in my judgment be regarded, if civilization be preserved on this continent, in future ages as among the great blots on the history of the human race.

While my friend from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS] used the following language in speaking of the bill in a parenthetic manner:

Which all affirm is a disgrace to American civilization.

I wish to remind my friend from Massachusetts of a fact or two in history which evidently escaped his mind. Nineteen years ago last January in this Chamber his distinguished predecessor, Charles Sumner, reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations a resolution, and the resolution was unanimously adopted by the Senate, which read as follows:

Whereas the traffic in laborers transported from China and other Eastern countries, known as the cooly trade, is odious to the people of the United States as inhuman and immoral; and

Whereas it is abhorrent to the spirit of modern international law and policy, which have substantially extirpated the African slave trade, to permit the establishment in its place of a mode of enslaving men different from the former in little else than the employment of fraud instead of force to make its victims captive: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That it is the duty of this Government to give effect to the moral sentiment of the nation through all its agencies for the purpose of preventing the further introduction of coolies into this hemisphere or the adjacent islands.

Mr. Sumner, in reporting that resolution, made this statement:

I will read—

Said he:

I will read a very brief letter which has been put into my hands, dated "Hong Kong, November 14, 1866." It will be seen that it is a very late letter for one coming so far. It is as follows:

"Hard times are upon the Chinese and the cooly trade flourishes. Twenty-two vessels were loading at one time at Macao. The negro slave trade was never half as bad as this traffic, which will ruin regular migration of the Chinese. It is time a stop had been put to this business. So much rascality is done in it that the Chinese suspect every offer of going abroad."

The resolution was adopted. It will be observed that this resolution, reported by Senator Sumner from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, declared that it was the duty of this Government to give expression to the moral sentiment of the nation through all its agencies, for what purpose? "For the purpose of preventing the further introduction of coolies into this hemisphere or the adjacent islands." That is the sum and substance of the whole business. Every man who comes here from China is a cooly; it is the cooly immigration that is the curse of this country.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Not just now, because the Senator from Massachusetts would not yield to me for a question the other day.

Mr. HOAR. I was uttering my last sentence when I declined to yield to the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There is one other matter of which I desire to remind my friend. I had the honor of sitting in a national convention of the Republican party in Chicago. I had the pleasure of seeing my friend the Senator from Massachusetts preside over that convention, as he did with dignity and distinction and credit. I further heard in that convention a resolution adopted appointing a committee to draught resolutions expressive of the sense of the convention. That committee was appointed. That committee reported a series of resolutions to the convention, and I heard my friend the Senator from Massachusetts as chairman of the convention declare that those resolutions were unanimously adopted by the convention. This was one of those resolutions:

6. Since the authority to regulate immigration and intercourse between the United States and foreign nations rests with the Congress of the United States and the treaty-making power, the Republican party, regarding the unrestricted immigration of the Chinese as a matter of grave concernment, under the exercise of both these powers would limit and restrict that immigration by the enactment of such just, humane, and reasonable laws and treaties as will produce that result.

I might refer, if I desired to occupy time, which I do not, to other conventions of both political parties and of all political parties. Commencing with 1876 there never has been a national convention held in the United States of any political party that has not resolved upon this question and declared in substance and effect, some of them stronger and some of them weaker, that the immigration of the Chinese into this country was a great evil, and one, as some of the resolutions declared, that ought to be prevented in the future.

I do not wish to take up time. I simply rose to call the attention of my friend from Massachusetts to these bits of history which had evidently escaped his mind, or he has perhaps changed his opinion upon this subject. I hope the bill will pass.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to assure the Senator from Oregon that his interruption of my remarks was when I was uttering the very last sentence.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I make no point against the Senator on that.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator has made a point about it in public, and he has drawn the inference that something has been said here by me inconsistent with the resolutions read or with Mr. Sumner's attitude. It is perfectly well known that Mr. Sumner denounced the kind of legislation which is now before the Senate with all that impassioned eloquence which on a question of human rights was surpassed by no other which ever came from human lips and of which he was master. The resolution against the cooly trade which Mr. Sumner introduced he supported by an argument, one sentence in which has been read, which set forth among other things that it would destroy the regular immigration of the Chinese to this country.

Here is a bill which prohibits the voluntary immigration of any man of the Chinese race, provided he be a laborer. It is a bill which undertakes to dishonor manhood and to dishonor labor, and it is a policy which has been persisted in notwithstanding the offer that was made to gentlemen who represented the Government at Asiatic ports, Government agents.

Mr. Seward was offered the support of the Chinese Government and of the very skillful and able Chinese ministry to prevent the coming over to this country of any cooly, of any pauper, of any person of abandoned character, of any person who did not come here to make a home and make himself a workman and a laborer.

So of the resolutions of the Republican convention of 1880, of which you yourself, sir [Mr. HALE in the chair], were an eminent member. Those resolutions declared against the coming over of this class of poor, dependent laborers, which all agree is injurious and ought to be put a stop to, and that the powers of the Government ought to be invoked to regulate and to limit their coming. Instead of doing that this bill undertakes to prohibit it.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

Mr. SHERMAN. I should like to call up and pass a bill that was reported at the same time with the bill which has just been passed. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. MITCHELL] tells me that he wishes to make some remarks upon it, but the whole matter is covered by a very excellent report made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations. I will ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration in the hope that the Senator from Oregon will waive his remarks. I do not wish to interfere with the pending bill, but the Committee on Foreign Relations unanimously reported this measure. A like bill is pending in the House of Representatives. It is proper to state that without stating the action of the other House upon it. I do not think that any one who reads the official correspondence in regard to the massacre of unoffending Chinese at Rock Springs, Wyo., can fail to feel that the Government of the United States should indemnify the injury. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 2225.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I understand the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations to say that a report has been submitted on that bill. I have not been able to find any report.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] prepared a report, but he is not here. However, all the facts are fully stated in the official documents. I have them all here. There is no doubt that the injury was done by the sudden uprising of a mob, not a single American among them, all foreigners entirely, who got angry with the Chinese because they refused to participate in a strike, and they murdered several of them, burned their shanties, and destroyed their property. It is a clear case it seems to me not only of justice, of mercy, of magnanimity, but I think it is within the language of the treaty, although upon that question there might be some division of opinion. However, the Committee on Foreign Relations were unanimously of opinion, treaty or no treaty, that in dealing with these people we ought to pay the losses and damages suffered.

There are three different cases where the United States have enforced the same rule against the Chinese, and the Chinese Government have in each case responded by paying in some instances a greater amount of damages than was suffered by citizens of the United States.

This appeal is made to us by the Chinese Government, and one of the most eloquent, one of the most beautiful compositions I know of in our language is a recent document from the Chinese minister setting out this claim against the Government of the United States, appealing to our generosity, to our magnanimity, to reimburse these people.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill. At the same time, if the bill is likely to take time I shall not undertake to press it to a vote to-day.

Mr. HOAR. How about the injuries done to Chinese in Washington Territory?

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Massachusetts asks me about the injuries done to Chinese in Washington Territory. As I understand, the authorities in Washington Territory summarily and promptly put down the mob there, and there were no real damages done, although lives were threatened.

Mr. HOAR. There is no claim from China on that account?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is no claim from China in regard to that affair. The only claim made by the Chinese Government is this claim, and the committee have responded to it by a bill placing it in the power of the Secretary of State to pay such of these damages as he finds after a careful examination have actually been suffered by these people, and to turn the amount, whatever it is, over to the Chinese Government for distribution among the sufferers. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The motion, under the rules, is not debatable. The Senator from Ohio moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

Mr. PLUMB. Will that not lead to debate?

Mr. SHERMAN. If it does I will give way.

Mr. PLUMB. I have no objection to debate, except that I do not wish it to displace the pending special order, Senate bill 1812, to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands.

Mr. SHERMAN. The Senator from Oregon tells me that he will insist upon making a speech upon the subject. I do think when the Senate have substantially by a large vote agreed that they would carry out the policy of restriction as against the laborers who come from China we should make a suitable provision to indemnify those who are entitled to protection, and that we ought not now to interpose any delay or impediment to the passage of a plain, palpable act of justice and mercy.

While I do not wish to stand in the way of the unfinished business, I hope we may take up the bill and pass the two together, and I will move to take it up, promising at the same time that if it can not be disposed of this evening before adjournment, I shall give way to the unfinished business, which is the bill providing for the taxation of railroad-grant lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Ohio to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President——

Mr. COCKRELL. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio a question.

Mr. SHERMAN. I think I have said all I desired to say.

Mr. COCKRELL. I want to know who were the persons who committed this depredation. Were they American citizens or not?

Mr. SHERMAN. There was not a single American citizen among them. They were foreigners.

Mr. COCKRELL. How did they get here, and how did the tax-paying people of the United States become responsible for the malicious and wrongful acts of a parcel of men of some other nationality?

Mr. SHERMAN. They were admitted here under the policy of our laws. Whether those laws were wise or not it is not for me to discuss. It is sufficient to say that the outrage was committed by a large number of whites, said to be Bohemians and of other nations; but each nation is seeking to deny its responsibility for these people. They were lawless people. They had engaged in a strike. They appealed to these Chinese to join them in the strike. The Chinese refused, and were going on digging coal out of the earth at regular wages, the coal to be used by the railroads. These men by some impulse and by a concerted movement attacked the Chinese, marched upon their buildings (for they lived in a place by themselves), burned down their village, shot them in their tents—no, in their huts; indeed they were scarcely huts—shot them and drove them away into the mountains, and there for a day or two they wandered. I think thirty or forty of them were killed and a number were wounded. Then those men burned what was called Chinatown.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Twenty-eight were killed.

Mr. SHERMAN. Twenty-eight were killed, the Senator from Oregon tells me. They burned the Chinatown. This was done to people who were not only under the protection of our laws, but under the express provisions of the treaty made with China, and under precisely similar circumstances, much less barbarous in their nature, the Government of China was made three different times to pay to the Government of the United States money for just such injuries to American citizens in China.

Mr. COCKRELL. Injuries to American citizens by foreigners residing in China?

Mr. SHERMAN. By Chinese.

Mr. COCKRELL. Oh, by Chinese.

Mr. SHERMAN. The distinction endeavored to be made by the Senator from Missouri is not well taken. When we admit foreigners of this class to come among us and go on our public lands and into our Territories they are under our protection, and we are just as much responsible for their conduct while they are there under our jurisdiction as we should be if they were native-born citizens. I say they are not native-born citizens as a matter of pride, because our people, it seems to me, could not in any portion of the country resort to any such barbarity.

At all events these men suffered, and the Chinese minister, in an eloquent message which lies upon your table, which you could read with great advantage, makes the appeal to you and quotes the Divine precept of doing unto others as you would have them do unto you, stating that that is a law older even than Christianity, and he appeals to us, as we have required of them redress under similar circumstances, that this Government should give redress for the injuries done to these Chinese. If the Senator from Missouri will take that document and read it over and will find in it technical objections, or any objections whatever, to the payment of this money, I am greatly mistaken in him. I know he will not.

This subject was fully considered. All these documents were read by the Committee on Foreign Relations, and we agreed unanimously that in pursuance of the recommendation made by the President in his message and by the Secretary of State in an admirable document which he sent, it was good policy, it was good Christianity, it was good humanity to reimburse all the losses committed by the mob in this riot.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ask the Senator if there is any instance on record where American citizens traveling in any foreign country and in that country meeting foreigners from an entirely different country have been injured, there was claimed any indemnity of the government in whose territory they happened to be?

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not know whether there is any country which would allow foreigners to come so freely into its territory as our own does. We have adopted a broad, liberal policy. For instance, in China you could not find anybody but Chinese to commit barbarities of this kind.

Mr. COCKRELL. Certainly not.

Mr. SHERMAN. If you would go to England you could not find enough foreigners there in any neighborhood to make a mob of foreigners without having Englishmen to participate in it. But the policy of our laws has drawn here large numbers of foreigners. They go to such portions of the country in masses, and sometimes monopolize and exclude American citizens from certain trades and occupations by their policy, by their habits, by their methods. They are there by the protection of our laws, and we as a nation are responsible for the people who are brought within our jurisdiction.

Mr. COCKRELL. As I understand, a parcel of Chinese came in and engaged in work there. Here was a parcel of Bohemians who came to the same place. They got into this controversy. The Bohemians wanted the Chinese to do in a certain way and the Chinese refused to do it, and they went to killing each other; and the American citizens, the taxpayers of this country, are to become responsible for their acts upon each other. I want the point met. Has there ever been a precedent where the United States has admitted its liability for the wrongful, malicious, tortious, vindictive, murderous acts of foreigners traveling in this country upon other foreigners who were also traveling in this country?

Mr. SHERMAN. There is scarcely a State in this Union that would not be responsible under like circumstances for damages done in a riot by a mob. How often has that been enforced in the States? Remember this was in a Territory where the Government of the United States is the only power, where the jurisdiction of Congress is absolute and complete. Here was an injury done to people under our protection, under the protection of our laws, and not only of our laws but of our treaty obligations. They are beaten down by a lawless mob—I do not care whether you call them Bohemians or what—by a mob under precisely the same circumstances in almost every city in the North (and I presume in the South you have the same laws) the city is responsible for damages done by a mob. It is only the same rule of justice, that where a city or a State claiming to be the government fails to protect people in the enjoyment of their rights and a mob beats down the ruling power, the government of the people, the community, State or city, should be responsible for the consequences of that mob.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Will the Senator from Ohio yield to me?

Mr. SHERMAN. I am answering the Senator from Missouri now. When I am through answering him I will yield.

The Government of the United States is doing precisely now for injuries done by this mob what would be enforced against the city of New York or Philadelphia or as was enforced against the city of Pittsburgh. That was a noted case. In the city of Pittsburgh in 1877 a mob, suddenly organized, composed largely of foreigners it is said, arose, seized upon arms, and burned three or four or five million dollars' worth of property, and yet the city of Pittsburgh was compelled to pay for the damages and the injuries by the laws of Pennsylvania, because Pennsylvania ought to have exercised her power to put down the mob, and because she did not do it the city of Pittsburgh was compelled by the laws of that State and by the judgment of its supreme court to indemnify the parties who were injured, although the chief sufferer was the Pennsylvania Railroad, an enormous, great corporation.

But now the injury here is done to poor people, many of whom lose their lives. It seems to me that the principle ought to be enforced in this case as against the Government.

This, after all, is not so much of an appeal to the law as it is an appeal to the heart of every Senator, to the feeling of justice that rules and governs mankind, that an injury like this, wanton in character, in a region under our jurisdiction, should be remedied and redressed, especially as the fact is that in like circumstances we have severely enforced the same remedy against the Chinese Government, in one case collecting so much from the Chinese Government that a sense of justice on the part of Congress compelled us to refund a considerable part of the indemnity that we had collected from them.

Mr. COCKRELL. That was where the depredations were committed by citizens of the Chinese Government upon our citizens.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do not see the force of the distinction.

Mr. COCKRELL. I should like to ascertain the fact, were not these Chinese taken there by a corporation for the purpose of doing its work, and were not the other side, the Bohemians, also taken there by a corporation as hirelings? Was it not these two classes that came in conflict?

Mr. SHERMAN. There was no conflict; it was all on one side. As to how they got there I do not know.

Mr. COCKRELL. Were they not imported there? Were they not taken there for a specific purpose? They certainly were not roaming around as citizens of that Territory or engaged in any business.

Mr. SHERMAN. They were taken there for a lawful purpose, for the mining of coal.

Mr. COCKRELL. How were the Bohemians taken there? For the same purpose?

Mr. SHERMAN. They may have gone there by their own volition, so far as I know. There is nothing in the papers to indicate how they were brought there.

Mr. COCKRELL. How many Chinese were there, and how did they get there?

Mr. SHERMAN. My impression is that the sufferers numbered two or three hundred.

Mr. COCKRELL. The two or three hundred Chinamen never found their way out into Wyoming to a coal-bank there without some concert of action. They must have been acting under the authority of some corporation or individual; and these Bohemians from Europe never would have found their way out there unless they had been acting under the control and direction of some corporation.

I do not believe in the principle of making the people of the United States, the tax-payers of this country, responsible for the class of people that corporations and monopolies may import into the country to displace American labor, and make them responsible for the depredations they may commit upon each other. Here are these two classes, Chinese and Bohemians, brought there, hired, who came there practically as serfs. They get into a quarrel; some dispute arises; one side wants the other to do a certain thing; they rise as a mob, destroy, kill; and then the honest, laboring, tax-paying citizens of the United States are to respond in damages for their acts. I do not believe there is any principle of law or of justice or equity or morality or religion that makes the people of this country responsible in such a case.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Mr. President, it has always seemed to me that every government had a right to determine what people should come within its borders, and that every person who did come within its borders by its consent was entitled, as one section of the Constitution of the United States says, to the equal protection of law. No matter whether he be a citizen or not, the fourteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States, which was adopted before my distinguished friend from Missouri came into the Senate, provided that every person—not every citizen, but every person—should be entitled to the equal protection of law.

The treaties of the United States with China and the laws of Congress carrying them out provided that certain of the subjects of the Emperor of China might come to the United States under certain conditions and stipulations and restrictions. The presumption is, and I have no doubt the truth is as to ninety-nine in a hundred of the Chinamen who were outraged in that Territory, that they came within that provision. There may have been some fraud, but it was a very small per cent. if it existed at all—not more than 1 per cent. So the subjects of the Emperor of China coming into the United States in pursuance of the treaty stipulations and in accordance with the acts of Congress, being engaged in lawful pursuits in that Territory—not a State but a Territory—were subjected to the outrages of a mob. Now, the question is whether the United States ought to make the same indemnity to China that, if the case were reversed, we should insist, as we have insisted hitherto, that recompense and retribution and reimbursement and indemnity should be made to us in such a case.

That is the proposition, and it is not of the slightest consequence whether the outrages were committed upon these subjects of the Emperor of China by citizens of the United States or by outlaws or enemies of the United States or whatever. We were bound by our treaty with China and by the effect of our acts of Congress and by the effect of our Constitution itself to see that these people should be protected in the enjoyment of their rights that they had which were invaded in this way, just as much as if they had received a similar outrage from the President of the United States in person or from the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States in their respective persons on that occasion. We can not get off either in international law or in morals upon the idea that the people who assailed them were Bohemians, whatever that may mean.

If we wish to cultivate the arts of peace; if we wish to cultivate the principles of justice and fair play, and to deal with others as we would wish them and would compel them to the extent of our power to deal with us under similar circumstances, it seems to me to be clear that the Treasury of the United States should make indemnity to China for the benefit of its subjects in a case of this kind. That is where it stands.

It is not a question who were the people who assailed them. They were under the protection of our law, and wherever that protection was violated in this way they were entitled to indemnity, because the law officers of the United States and the forces of the Territory knowing that this thing was impending did not exert themselves in the way they might and ought to have done to prevent it.

As I say again, under precisely similar circumstances we have demanded from that very empire and of the Empire of Japan, and in fact of every power where similar things have occurred, that indemnity should be made in order to vindicate, as far as we might, our glad duty of protecting the citizens of other countries who come to us in the way that we have engaged to protect them. That is where the case stands as it appears to me.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator in his opening remarks quoted from the Constitution of the United States, I believe?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Yes.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. He quoted some clause to the effect that all persons are entitled to the equal protection of the laws. There were twenty-eight Chinamen who were so unfortunate as to lose their lives in the disgraceful occurrence which took place at Rock Springs, subjects of the Chinese Empire, resident in this country, engaged in following the occupation of laborers. Suppose that instead of being twenty-eight Chinamen it had been fourteen Chinamen and fourteen citizens of the United States who had lost their lives, would my friend from Vermont and would the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body recommend that those citizens of the United States be indemnified, not through the courts in the ordinary way, but as is proposed here by an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States? That is the question which I put to the Senator.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Well, I will answer, and answering categorically, I will say, no.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Then, right there——

Mr. EDMUNDS. If you will just pardon me, when I say "no" I say it with an explanation, or a justification, which is a better word.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Very well.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Every citizen of the United States who is preyed upon by a fellow-citizen has a common recourse at law, and he is not under any constitutional or treaty protection from another power that is engaged in defending him in any such attitude as a foreigner is. Therefore I say that the case is entirely distinguishable between a mob which inflicts an injury upon a citizen of the United States and a mob which inflicts an injury upon subjects of another country whom we have engaged to protect.

I will put to my friend a corresponding question. Suppose a similar number of American citizens had been engaged in extracting coal-oil from the depths of the ground in Western Canada, in the district of Ontario, under a treaty with Great Britain, which authorized them to go there and to be engaged in that business. Thereupon a British mob in Ontario proceeds, on account of the fact that they are citizens of the United States (for that was the fundamental ground of this mob, that these men were Chinese and not Americans or Bohemians or Europeans), proceeds to put them to death. I ask my friend from Oregon if he would not stand up with all the rest of us and call upon the British Government, the most powerful probably in all respects, excepting ourselves, on the globe, and say to the extent of war we will demand that you shall make restitution to the heirs and children and wives of these people and make reimbursement for the losses that they have sustained. There is not a man in the Senate who would not stand up, and would not go to the front if he was capable of carrying a musket, to accomplish that very thing, and it is the very thing that we have over and over again with other nations insisted should be done, as we would have done if a similar number of American citizens because they were American citizens had been maltreated in the very front of Buckingham Palace in London, which is the official residence of the Queen at the seat of her empire.

It is stated in the documents, as my friend the chairman of the committee [Mr. SHERMAN] points out to me, by the Chinese consul in San Francisco, Mr. Bee:

I am, after a thorough investigation, firmly of the opinion that not one of these criminals who murdered the twenty-eight Chinese, burned and robbed them at Rock Springs on the 2d day of September, will or can ever be brought to punishment by the so-called Territorial or local authorities. In this opinion I am sustained not only by my own convictions, but also by the governor and prosecuting attorney of the Territory, and scores of citizens, resident and non-resident.

Therefore, if we are right in our pretensions, as I submit we are, when our citizens are thus treated in a foreign country whose protection by treaty they are entitled to, is it not right that we should have the manhood and the honor to say that when the case comes the other way we will do all that we can to make restitution and reimbursement for such a crime and injury?

My friend from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] calls my attention to the third article of the treaty with China, which reads as follows:

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill-treatment at the hands of any other persons—

Not United States citizens, but "any other persons"— the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection, and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

Mr. COCKRELL. Is there any indemnity for any injury that may happen to them?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Oh, no; the logic is generally left out of a statute. There is not any indemnity in most statutes.

Mr. COCKRELL. It seems to have been left out of that one.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It is the honor that is supposed to follow in the minds of most men, and it is an honor that the Senator from Missouri would stand up for as strongly as I do, if any similar number, or any quarter number, or tenth number of citizens of the United States had been similarly treated in any other country on this globe.

Even this administration, as conservative—I will not use any offensive phrase—as it may be, would recommend and its partisans and adherents would vote for measures for raising armies and arming vessels and carrying on a war, no matter whether with Great Britain or France or Germany or the greatest powers on the globe or the smallest ones, to reach the very indemnity that we for our own honor should cheerfully and gladly propose in this case. If the argument is based on the question of physical strength only and that everything that is might is right, then the Senator from Missouri is correct; but if it is based upon national honor and justice and duty as between nations, then if we apply to ourselves the same law of justice as we demand from others there is no answer to this bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, the Senator from Vermont answered my question in the negative. He said that if a number of the persons murdered by this mob had been American citizens instead of being subjects of China, then he would not favor an indemnification for their wrongs and their injuries by an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States. Then why quote the Constitution of the United States, the fourteenth amendment, here as bearing upon this question? The Senator in his opening remarks referred to that article which says that no State shall "deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." Has not the Chinese subject the same protection of the laws in Wyoming that our own citizens have?

Mr. EDMUNDS. Your executive officers say no, and we all know it is true.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. A mere failure to find an indictment, a mere failure of justice, does not create a new principle, it seems to me.

Mr. EDMUNDS. No, but illustrates the fact.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Nor does it demonstrate that there is a difficulty in this particular case. The fourteenth amendment of the Constitution has nothing to do with it, in my judgment. Of course, all persons are entitled to the equal protection of the laws. What laws? The laws that create tribunals, the laws that enact provisions for the protection of private property and for life, are domestic laws, not international laws, not any obligation that may arise by virtue of a conventional stipulation with a foreign nation. So it does occur to me that this provision of the Constitution has nothing whatever to do with this question, and why my friend from Vermont quoted it I confess I am unable to see.

Now, Mr. President, one other word——

Mr. EDMUNDS. With the permission of my friend, I wish to recall to his attention a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in respect of our internal laws, that this provision in the Constitution of the United States is not a provision of statute and legislative authority, but it is a provision of action, and they have held that where in some one or two of the States, where the question arose, the administration of the laws of Virginia, if it arose there, or Kentucky, or wherever it was, that denied in fact and prevented in fact and did not accomplish in fact the equal justice and protection that the constitutional provision provided for, was an invasion of this principle. It was by way of illustration of the right that I quoted that and in that connection. So it is not a question of mere law-making; it is a question of law-doing by execution; and now we have the officials of the Government reporting to the President of the United States through the proper Department that the execution of the law there can not be accomplished, and, therefore, these persons are denied, under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States and in their very language, as I believe, that equal protection which the Constitution gives them, because the executive authority and the administrative authority, whether the judicial or otherwise, is incapable of doing it.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Suppose in any given case where parties have suffered by a mob there was a failure to protect our own citizens not the subjects of a foreign power, no matter how that failure may come; admit that it does come for the very reason stated by the honorable Senator, by a failure to execute the law as it should be executed, would my friend then favor an appropriation from the Treasury of the United States to indemnify such person, a citizen?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would depend as to whether it was within a State or a Territory, because within a State its internal policy is its own affair, and it would be the duty of the State to indemnify; but in a Territory, which is our business and ours alone, in the case proposed I should say it would. If the United States in a Territory, over which it has sole control and for which it is entirely responsible and of which it creates all the government, fails in providing such executive government as to protect the citizen, then I say the United States ought to make indemnity.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. One other question, Mr. President. Let me ask the honorable Senator from Vermont, inasmuch as the United States Government has classed the Indians of this country as its wards and exercised jurisdiction over them and entered into treaties with them, in the event of Indian outbreaks, and Indian depredations, and Indian mobs, and Indian murders, and Indian massacres, as there can be no indemnification by the courts that we have seen proper to establish in our Territories within the United States, would he indemnify on the same principle the sufferers in those cases by an appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States?

Mr. EDMUNDS. That would not follow, although I can tell my friend, as he probably very well knows, that in a thousand such cases, speaking in round numbers, we have compelled the Indian tribes whose members did those things to pay for the benefit of the people injured out of their funds a proper indemnity, and in a great many other cases we have provided, when there was not any such indemnity got, to pay out of the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, I was not aware that this question was coming up this evening. I do not know that there is any other Senator here who will vote against this bill. For one I never intend to vote for it, and I desire very much to give my reasons why I shall not vote for it.

Several SENATORS. Give them now.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not prepared to do it now, because there are certain papers which I have that are not here. I will be ready to-morrow morning, or whenever it is the pleasure of the Senate to take up the bill and dispose of it.

I undertake to say in this connection that, in my judgment, after a most careful examination, there is no principle either of international law, of conventional stipulation in any treaty existing between this country and China, or in any Federal statute that will justify this proposed action; but upon the contrary, if this bill passes, as I have no doubt it will, it will be no more and no less than an act of charity, pure and simple, an act of benevolence, and nothing else. I undertake to say in this connection here and now that there never has been a Secretary of State from the time of Daniel Webster down to the present day, so far as I have been able to advise myself, who has not argued ably and at length and with conclusiveness that in a case like this there is no legal liability whatever on the part of the Government of the United States to make indemnity. That was the position taken by Daniel Webster in regard to the celebrated Spanish riots at Key West; that was the position taken by Secretary Seward, by Secretary Blaine, and by Secretary Evarts, and it is the position taken to-day by Secretary Bayard, although it is a fact that the present Secretary of State recommends it as an act of benevolence, as an act of pure charity, and with the distinct understanding, as he declares in his letter to the President of the United States, that it shall not be considered as a precedent nor as creating a liability on the part of the Government to respond in damages from the Treasury of the United States in any such case.

Mr. INGALLS. Does the Senator oppose that view of it as an act of charity?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I certainly am opposed to extending this as an act of charity; and until the Congress of the United States will pay some portion at least of the twelve or thirteen million dollars due on account of losses suffered by frontiersmen in the Western States and Territories by reason of Indian depredations, in reference to which there is to-day a legal obligation on the part of the Government of the United States to make payment, I shall vote no gracious contribution to Chinese subjects in this country. Not by my vote shall an act of benevolence be passed through the Senate until these obligations to our frontiersmen and our pioneers receive some kind of attention and some kind of respect at the hands of Congress.

You pass resolutions through Congress directing the Secretary of the Interior to investigate and find out what losses have been sustained by our own citizens by reason of Indian depredations, by reason of the acts of men with whom you have made treaties and with whom you are in treaty relations to-day. The Secretary, in pursuance of that direction, has gone on and investigated these cases and reported these claims to Congress amounting to many millions of dollars, and they lie stuck away in your pigeon-holes; and yet before the cry of the mob has died away, of an alien mob in the Territory of Wyoming, we get on our knees here before the Chinese Empire and propose to do an act of great grace, to pass an act of benevolence, an act of charity, when not a Senator upon this Foreign Relations Committee, so far as I know, has yet had the temerity, if I may be permitted to use the language, to place upon record in the Senate any report upon which they can base a legal obligation to do what they now propose to do. I have watched carefully, and I have seen no report from the committee in support of this bill.

Now, Mr. President, inasmuch as I for one—and I perhaps shall be the only one in the Senate, I do not know how that is—do not intend to vote for this bill, and inasmuch as perhaps I shall be so largely in the minority, I think it but due not only to the Senate but to the people whom I in part represent here that I should give my reasons. I prefer to do it in a careful, methodical way. I shall do so to-morrow if I have an opportunity. If the Senate denies me that, of course I shall cast my vote against the bill and submit. I will say, however, before I take my seat, that I had understood from the honorable chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations that if I desired to make an argument on this question he would give way until to-morrow. I will say in addition that if my request is denied, I think perhaps it will be the only time such a request was ever denied in the Senate.

Mr. SHERMAN. I do say now, as I said to the Senator a while ago, that I would not as one ever deny to a Senator the right to express his opinions freely on any subject. I have sat here many a time until the gray of the morning to secure Senators their right to talk at pleasure. At the same time, while I intend to stand by what I said, the Senator must perceive that having spoken at least four hours on two separate occasions on this Chinese question, giving us his views, so that we know them thoroughly and his constituents know them, it is a great stretch of courtesy for him to ask us under the circumstances that we give him another day, to-morrow, on this subject. But I think on the whole it is better to do it, because I do not want ever to see debate restrained in the Senate.

So far as writing a report is concerned, I understood the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN] to say that he would write a report. I think he probably has prepared one, but he is not here to speak for himself. I want no report except the message of the President of the United States, which I hold in my hand. It contains the gist and germ, the whole substance of the argument in favor of this proposition. It is reported by the Secretary of State in a communication to the Chinese minister, which is the last document in this little pamphlet I hold in my hand.

Mr. COCKRELL. What is that document Executive Document 102?

Mr. SHERMAN. The President's message, Executive Document 102. The last paper in the document is the letter of the Secretary of State, which covers the whole ground, and there is also the communication of the Chinese minister setting out this claim, and here is the evidence as to the items of the claim.

The President and Secretary of State in their discussion with the Chinese minister naturally avoided the legal question so far as they could, but I think the President in quoting the treaty substantially showed that by the fair terms of the treaty as construed between man and man the Government of the United States is bound to protect these people, and in case it does not is bound to make indemnity. The President quotes the language of the treaty in his message. I think on reading that treaty any fair-minded man will see that if there was no express legal obligation to pay indemnity, yet we do expressly provide and engage in the treaty that the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by others. It says also:

> If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill-treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection, and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

The Government has not been able to do it, and has not done it; they are in a remote Territory under the national flag. As a matter of course under these circumstances the implied condition, if not the express language of the treaty, requires that indemnity should be paid in case they be not protected from injury. The same argument is amplified by Mr. Bayard.

I do not wish to go further into the matter. As I said, I would not insist on a vote now if the Senator from Oregon wishes to speak on this subject at some other time. I move to postpone the bill until to-morrow to give him that opportunity, so as not to interfere with the unfinished business.

Mr. COCKRELL. Before that is done I wish to put on record one or two statements.

I will first read from the message of the President of March 2, 1886, transmitting this case to Congress:

> I draw the attention of the Congress to the latter part of the note of the Secretary of State of February 18, 1886, in reply to the Chinese minister's representations, and to invite especial consideration of the cogent reasons by which he reaches the conclusion that, whilst the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection; and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of the Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country; with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent, is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

Mr. President, the distinguished Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] attempted in his sly way to cast an insinuation upon the existing administration by saying that even this conservative administration, and he would say nothing further, was in favor of this indemnity, and even this administration would resort to force to protect the rights of the American citizen. Yes, there never was a day in the history of this great country, for over half a century under Democratic administration, when any citizen of the United States feared to tread the soil of the greatest empire on earth, knowing as he did that he would receive full and perfect protection of person and property in every respect; and it will be so again. That is not the question, Mr. President. It was an attempted fling, unworthy of the distinguished Senator and the position he occupies before the country.

Now let us see what position his administration and his distinguished Republican leader, the last nominee for President and the prospective next one of his party for the highest office in the gift of the American people, took when he was Secretary of State and we had a Republican President. I read from this same document, and I read from No. 1, the Chinese minister to Secretary Bayard, on page 5, toward the bottom. The Chinese minister, having made his statement, proceeds to say:

> With this statement I might consider my duty discharged, but for the fact that this legation, having had occasion to call the attention of two of your worthy predecessors to a similar but much less bloody and disastrous event, the honorable Secretary Evarts—

A distinguished member of this body now—> expressed some doubts as to the legal liability of his Government to make pecuniary indemnity to the Chinese sufferers by the mob at Denver, in the State of Colorado, in 1880, and that the honorable Secretary Blaine—> concurred in the views of Mr. Secretary Evarts. I have, therefore, to beg the kind indulgence of your excellency while I attempt to show why the present request for indemnification, in the opinion of my government, ought in justice and equity to be granted, notwithstanding the views set forth in the notes of Secretary Evarts of December 30, 1880, and of Secretary Blaine of March 25, 1881. In doing this it is not my intention to either appeal to you from or to question the correctness of the interpretation of the laws of the United States as given by the distinguished jurist Mr. Evarts, and confirmed by the experienced statesman Mr. Blaine. It would seem to me, however, to be just that if the view taken by Mr. Evarts as to the obligation of the United States to make indemnity for injuries to private individuals from mob violence should be insisted upon and adhered to by your excellency's Government, China should, in due reciprocity and international comity, accept and practice the same principle.

Mr. President, it is well enough when these thrusts are attempted to be made upon the existing administration that we should look back a little and see what was done when the distinguished Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] was Secretary of State and when the experienced statesman James G. Blaine was Secretary of State. Why was no indemnity made then? It was claimed. There was no response and no indemnification was made, and I assert that in my judgment there is no principle of international law, there is no principle of justice, of right, of equity, of morality, or of Christianity that will require the tax-paying citizens of the United States to respond in damages for the malicious, vindictive, tortious, illegal acts of a band of foreigners, Bohemians imported there by a corporation as serfs to do their work as laborers, as servants, as slaves. I fail to recognize any principle which will make the citizens of the United States responsible in such a case.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, it seems to me somewhat remarkable that the principles of international law and of intercourse which have existed between all governments for a thousand years should now be denied and fail of universal recognition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CULLOM in the chair). The Senator will allow the Chair to inquire of the Senator from Ohio whether he withdrew his motion to postpone?

Mr. SHERMAN. I did not. I withdrew it at the request of the Senator from Missouri to give him an opportunity to speak. That motion is still pending. I am willing the matter should go over at this hour of the day. I suggest to the Senator from Florida that the matter will be called up again.

Mr. CALL. I have no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Ohio moves that the further consideration of the bill be postponed until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

ADDITIONAL LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a conference report on the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations. I send the report to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

O. D. CONGER,
S. J. R. McMILLAN,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
A. B. IRION,
CHARLES F. CRISP,
R. W. DUNHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The report was concurred in.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

Mr. SHERMAN. Now let the unfinished business be laid before the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unfinished business will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 44 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 2, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 1, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of Saturday's proceedings was read and approved.

UNITED STATES COURT-HOUSE, PHILADELPHIA.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the Supervising Architect for repairs, painting, and ventilation of the United States court-house at Philadelphia, Pa.; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

DOMESTIC REQUIREMENTS OF GRAIN.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Commissioner of Agriculture, transmitting, in response to a resolution of the House, a report by the statistician of that Department respecting the surplus and domestic requirements of wheat and corn, and the acreage of wheat for the present year as compared with the past five years; also, the probable requirements of importing countries, and the acreage of crop and probable surplus or shortage in exporting countries for the ensuing year; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. SWINBURNE, on account of sickness in his family.

To Mr. STEWART, of Texas, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. COOPER, indefinitely, on account of important business.

MRS. ELEANOR ELLWOOD.

Mr. HOPKINS, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 9120) making an appropriation for Mrs. Eleanor Ellwood, widow of Hon. Reuben Ellwood, deceased, late a Representative from the State of Illinois; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WILKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union from the consideration of the bill S. 206, and put the same upon its passage. It is simply a local measure, and will require but a few moments.

The SPEAKER. The title of the bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 206) to provide for the erection of a public building at the city of Zanesville, Ohio.

Mr. BEACH. I shall have to demand the regular order.

ADDITIONAL LIFE-SAVING STATIONS.

Mr. IRION, from the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 6975) for the establishment of additional life-saving stations, submitted the following report; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations, having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendment numbered 1.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 2, and agree to the same.

A. B. IRION,
CHARLES F. CRISP,
R. W. DUNHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.
O. D. CONGER,
S. J. R. McMILLAN,
A. P. GORMAN,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

Mr. IRION moved to reconsider the vote by which the report of the committee of conference was agreed to; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

PERSONAL PRIVILEGE.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I rise to a question of personal privilege. I send to the desk to be read a portion of an editorial in the Iowa State Register, the leading Republican organ of Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

OLEOMARGARINE WEAVER.

According to the reports of the spirited debate in the lower House of Congress on Wednesday, in the matter of the bogus-butter bill, all the Iowa Congressmen except one appeared to have stood by the Iowa dairy. One of them, Mr. JAMES B. WEAVER, stood by Mr. Millionaire Armour and his Chicago factory for making butter out of refuse tallow and pig fat. Mr. Armour, whose income is $10,000 a week, evidently knows where to find a man and how to find him when he wants him. Such a man can always find Congressman WEAVER, and generally does it. Evidently the gentleman from the sixth district of Iowa, occupying a seat in Congress by fraud, is making hay while the sun is shining hot enough to melt Mr. Armour's tallow. He has less than a year in Congress left, and all the dairies and butter-makers in Iowa are not going to cause him to disappoint Mr. Armour when Mr. Armour's millionaire interests are so much at stake.

But what do the farmers and butter and cheese makers of Iowa think of an Iowa Congressman's betrayal of their interests for the sake of a millionaire dealer in refuse tallow and lard?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. It is very seldom that I rise to a question of personal privilege or pay any attention to what is said about me in the opposition press. But here is an innuendo very plain that I have been influenced by improper motives in my course toward the pending oleomargarine bill.

In the first place it is charged I am opposing that bill. That, of course, would not constitute a question of privilege, although it is false, as every member of this House knows I am ardently supporting that measure and have done so at every vote. I shall continue to do so till the end of the controversy if it continues during the remainder of the session.

But the charge is made here plainly that I have not only opposed the bill, but that I have been influenced to do so by improper motives and influences. I simply want to call attention in the presence of my fellow-members to the character of the opposition I am compelled to meet in my State in standing up for what I believe to be right principles and correct laws. There is no foundation whatever for this charge. In every word and thought expressed or implied it is exactly the opposite of the truth.

Further, it is charged I am holding my seat in this House by fraud. That also affects my standing as a member of this House and is a matter of personal privilege.

Mr. MORRISON. I submit there is no question of privilege involved in this newspaper article.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks that in so far as the article read from the Clerk's desk imputes to the gentleman from Iowa improper or corrupt motives——

Mr. MORRISON. Nobody believes it. You have been for the bill from the first.

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks in so far as it does that, there is presented a question of privilege, but only to that extent.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Of course I understand that. Of course nobody believes it here. Nobody in Iowa who is acquainted with the man who makes the charge believes it. But there are thousands of men who read that paper who may believe it, because they will never see the contradiction, nor do they understand the unmanly and malicious motives which prompted the article. Now, as to the charge that I am holding my seat by fraud, I wish to say no charge was ever made that I had obtained my seat by fraud. My right to a seat was investigated by a committee of this House, and the majority of that committee reported—only three of the six Republican members dissenting—that I had a right to the seat. And I will state further that when the vote was taken in this House—I desire to be contradicted if I am not stating it correctly—there were not exceeding six men who voted that I was not entitled to my seat; and among those who voted that I was entitled to a seat were the leaders on the Republican side of the House. They did not feel there was anything in the legal points or the facts sought to be made against me. If I am not correct as to that, I desire to be contradicted here and now. I want to stand right on the record.

Another charge is made by this same paper that I falsely, and knowing it to be false, accused my colleague, Mr. HENDERSON, of having once left the Republican party. This charge is also untrue and without foundation. I have never at any time made any such charge against my colleague, Colonel HENDERSON. Having said this much I am through.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER. The regular order having been called for, the Chair will proceed to call committees for reports.

DUFF GREEN REED.

Mr. TUCKER, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 8296) to remove the political disabilities of Duff Green Reed; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

NAVAL BUREAUS.

Mr. BOUTELLE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, obtained leave to present the views of the minority on the bill (H. R. 7635) to consolidate certain bureaus of the Department of the Navy, and for other purposes; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and ordered to be printed.

LOTTERY GIFT CIRCULARS IN THE MAILS.

Mr. BLOUNT, from the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, reported, in lieu of sundry bills, a bill (H. R. 9121) to amend section 3894 of the Revised Statutes of the United States relating to the transmissions through the mails of lottery gift enterprise and other circulars, and excluding from the mails newspapers and periodicals containing advertisements of the same; which was read a first and second time, referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bills Nos. 6522, 2030, 2296, and 3337, relating to the same subject, were laid on the table.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, obtained leave to present the views of the minority; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. LOUTTIT, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1201) granting a pension to Louise Armbrecht; and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. LOVERING, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back with adverse recommendations bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 6475) granting a pension to Benjamin Hillman;

A bill (H. R. 6751) granting a pension to Margaret O'Neill;

A bill (H. R. 5096) granting a pension to James Chase Heath;

A bill (H. R. 6090) granting a pension to William W. Wheeler.

MRS. HANNAH BABB HUTCHINS.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3463) granting a pension to Mrs. Hannah Babb Hutchins, with the recommendation they be non-concurred in; and the same were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

ADDIE L. MACOMBER.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back unfavorably amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1462) granting a pension to Addie L. Macomber; which were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and ordered to be printed.

JAMES CARLIN.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 6314) to increase the pension of James Carlin; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ELLEN SADLER.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1492) for the relief of Ellen Sadler, sister of John Sadler; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. HAYNES, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were severally laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed.

A bill (H. R. 7186) granting a pension to John E. Rollins; and

A bill (H. R. 8309) granting a pension to John M. Bickford.

THOMAS WALSH.

Mr. PINDAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8481) granting a pension to Thomas Walsh; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MRS. ANNA SCHIER.

Mr. PINDAR, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7983) granting a pension to Mrs. Anna Schier; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CATHARINE LANIGAN.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Invalid Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2349) granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

DAVID RYAN.

Mr. SPRINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 7233, a bill (H. R. 9122) to confer jurisdiction on the Court of Claims to hear and determine the claim of David Ryan against the United States; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 7233) was laid on the table.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

On motion of Mr. SPRINGER, the Committee on Claims was discharged from further consideration of the bill (H. R. 4033) for the relief of Richard A. Newert, and the same was referred to the Committee on War Claims.

ROBERT STRACHAN.

Mr. GALLINGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with an amendment the bill (S. 574) for the relief of Robert Strachan; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ESTATES OF ELY MOORE AND OTHERS.

Mr. BUCHANAN, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 5470) for the relief of the estates of Ely Moore and John W. Whitfield and others; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

COMPENSATION OF CERTAIN PHYSICIANS.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 304) to compensate physicians for services rendered under an order of the United States court of the northern district of Alabama; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOHN WIGHTMAN.

Mr. FLEEGER, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 7803, a bill (H. R. 9123) for the relief of the legal representatives of John Wightman, deceased; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The original bill (H. R. 7803) was laid on the table.

RICHARD H. AND JAMES PORTER.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 8168) for the relief of Richard H. Porter and James Porter; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BOARD OF FOREIGN MISSIONS, M. P. CHURCH.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (S. 1008) to empower the Board of Foreign Missions of the Methodist Protestant Church to hold property in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

NEW ORLEANS, BATON ROUGE AND VICKSBURG RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. LAFFOON, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 3186) to declare a forfeiture of lands granted to the New Orleans, Baton Rouge and Vicksburg Railroad Company, to confirm title to certain lands, and for other purposes; which was referred to the House Calendar, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

GEORGE J. STANNARD.

Mr. GROUT. Mr. Speaker, Maj. Gen. George J. Stannard, a brave soldier and distinguished officer in the late war, at present upon the soldiers' roll as an employé of this House, died suddenly this morning about 9 o'clock at his lodgings in this city. I ask unanimous consent to put upon its passage at the present time the usual resolution relating to his pay and funeral expenses.

The SPEAKER. The resolution will be read for information, after which there will be opportunity for objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Clerk of the House of Representatives be, and he is hereby, authorized to pay out of the contingent fund of the House to the widow or legal representatives of George J. Stannard, late an employé of the House, a sum equal to his salary for six months, and also the necessary expenses of his last illness and funeral, not to exceed $250.

There being no objection, the House proceeded to consider the resolution; which was adopted.

Mr. GROUT moved to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair) and resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The CHAIRMAN. On this bill the Committee of the Whole had reached the consideration of section 8. By order of the House all debate on this section and amendments thereto has been limited to one minute.

Mr. DUNHAM. Are there any amendments now pending to this section?

The CHAIRMAN. There are several amendments pending.

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to offer an amendment at the proper time.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to have read a telegram from various trades assemblies.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. NEGLEY] to occupy the one minute allowed for debate.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire to have read from the Clerk's desk the telegram which I send up.

The Clerk proceeded to read the following:

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 31.

Whereas certain measures are now pending in Congress for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of butterine and oleomargarine, and the imposition of taxes thereon, amounting to a prohibition; and

Whereas the manufacture and sale of this article is a legal, a legitimate business, furnishing a clean, palatable, healthy, and nutritious article of food at a reasonable price, and that the effect of the legislation will be to increase the price of a cheap and wholesome food product and destroy the labor its manufacture employs; and

Whereas the only reason given for the legislation is that it comes into competition with butter:

It is resolved, That we protest against the passage of such measures as unjust and injurious to the laboring classes and as opposed to the principles of sound public policy.

It is further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of this assembly.

The foregoing preambles and resolutions were adopted at a session of the Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania for the purpose of taking prompt action in regard to a bill now pending before Congress entitled "A bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of butterine or oleomargarine."

RICHARD ENNISS,
President of Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.
THOMAS S. DICUS,
Secretary Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.

The CHAIRMAN (before the reading of the telegram was concluded) said: By order of the House all debate on this section is now closed.

Mr. NEGLEY. I desire that the entire telegram may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, it was ordered accordingly.

The CHAIRMAN. The first question is on an amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], to add a proviso to section 8. This amendment having already been read, the reading will not be repeated unless some gentleman demands it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I think it ought to be read again.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the pending section the following:

"Provided, That on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, the taxes herein specified imposed by the internal-revenue laws of the United States now in force be, and the same are hereby, repealed, namely: The taxes on manufactured tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes, and the special taxes required by law to be paid by dealers in leaf-tobacco, retail dealers in leaf-tobacco, dealers in manufactured tobacco, peddlers of tobacco, snuff, and cigars, and manufacturers of snuff and of cigars: Provided also, That on all original and unbroken factory packages of smoking and manufactured tobacco, and snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes held by manufacturers, factors, jobbers, or dealers at the time such repeal shall go into effect, upon which the tax has been paid, there shall be a drawback or rebate in favor of said manufacturer, factor, jobber, dealer, or other owner of said tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes to the full amount and extent of the tax so paid thereon, but the same shall not apply in any case where the claim has not been presented within ninety days following the date when such repeal shall take effect; and no claim shall be allowed for a less amount than $10; and any special-tax stamp covering taxes repealed by this act may he redeemed for the portion of the special-tax year unexpired at the time of the repeal, when the amount claimed for such stamp shall not be less than $10; and all sums required to satisfy claims under this act shall be paid out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of the Treasury to adopt such rules and regulations and to prescribe and furnish such blanks and forms as may be necessary to carry this section into effect: Provided also, That all internal-revenue laws limiting, restricting, or regulating the manufacture, sale, or exportation of tobacco, snuff, cigars, cheroots, and cigarettes are hereby repealed on and after the 1st day of October, 1886, and that there shall be no drawback allowed upon any such articles which shall be entered for export on or after that date: Provided, That all laws now in force shall remain and have full force and effect in respect to all offenses committed, liabilities incurred, or rights accruing or accrued prior to the date when the repeal of the taxes specified in this act shall take effect."

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES] submitted a substitute for this amendment. The Chair is advised, however, that the gentleman prefers to move his proposition separately. The Chair will therefore put the question upon the amendment of the gentleman from Virginia, just read by the Clerk.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 49, noes 102.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 52, noes 110.

The CHAIRMAN. In order to make a quorum the Chair votes in the negative, and the amendment is rejected. The next question is upon another amendment submitted by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 8 the following:

"That on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, all laws and parts of laws heretofore passed by Congress, and now in existence, imposing an internal-revenue tax upon liquors distilled from apples, peaches, and other fruits, shall be repealed: Provided, That no person or persons shall be allowed to manufacture or distill spirits partly from fruits and partly from grain without the payment of the full tax required by law upon the making or manufacture of spirits distilled from grain; and any person violating the provisions of this section shall be fined not less than $100 nor more than $500, and imprisoned not less than one month nor more than one year, or both, at the discretion of the court."

The question being taken, there were—ayes 42, noes 110.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Tellers were ordered; and Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. HATCH were appointed.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 38, noes 125.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The next question is upon an amendment submitted by the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COWLES], which will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 8 the following:

"That all laws and sections and clauses of laws, imposing a tax or taxes on brandy distilled from fruit, and all laws and sections and clauses of laws, providing for the collection of a tax or taxes on brandy distilled from fruit, and prohibiting, without compliance with certain statutory requisitions, the manufacture or distillation of brandy, be, and the same are hereby, repealed."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that this amendment is substantially the same as that which has just been voted down by the committee.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let us hear reread the amendment that was just voted down.

The Clerk again read the amendment of Mr. DANIEL.

Mr. COWLES. Allow me but a minute in reply on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair desires to state that the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], which has just been voted down, provides that, on and after the 1st day of July, 1886, these laws should be repealed, while the pending amendment provides for repeal immediately on the passage of the law, which makes it a different proposition.

Mr. HATCH. I withdraw the point of order.

The question recurred on Mr. COWLES's amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 26, noes 121.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Mr. COWLES and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 43, noes 120.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the word "ten," in line 3, and insert the word "three;" so it will read:

"There shall be assessed and collected a tax of 3 cents per pound."

Mr. HEPBURN. Was not that amendment voted upon on a previous day?

The CHAIRMAN. Amendments heretofore were amendments to the amendment, to strike out "ten" and insert "two," and the votes heretofore taken were on that amendment. There has been no amendment heretofore to strike out "ten" and insert any number except "two."

Mr. DUNHAM. More than that, "three" has not been mentioned before.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand this amendment is debatable.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand the motion was to close debate only upon the pending amendments, and not upon all amendments to the section.

The CHAIRMAN. At Saturday's session the motion was made to close all debate on the eighth section and all pending amendments thereto.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. It referred, I think, only to pending amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. It referred to all amendments.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I ask the language of the motion be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read from the RECORD.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of revenue bills; and pending that motion I move that all debate on the eighth section and all amendments thereto shall be limited to one minute, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the motion which was adopted by the House.

Mr. TOWNSHEND. I submit the following amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "three" and insert "five."

Mr. HATCH. Has not that amendment already been voted on?

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment voted on was an amendment to the then pending amendment.

Mr. HATCH. It is substantially the same thing.

The CHAIRMAN. Not in a parliamentary sense, and the Chair was compelled to recognize the amendment to the amendment.

The question recurred on Mr. TOWNSHEND's amendment to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes appear to have it.

Mr. TOWNSHEND demanded a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 92.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Mr. TOWNSHEND and Mr. STAHLNECKER were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 46, noes 118.

So the amendment to the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move an amendment to come in at the end of the section.

The CHAIRMAN. It is not in order at this moment.

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask for the reading of the amendment, and then for the reading of the section as it will be if the amendment is adopted.

The Clerk read the amendment and section as it would be if amended.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I offer an amendment to the amendment, to strike out "three" and insert "four."

A MEMBER. Let this go through and offer yours afterward.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. You can not do it then.

The CHAIRMAN. The noes have it.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I demand a division on my amendment, to the amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 106.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. PRICE were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 31, noes 117.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. When I get ready to yield the point I will announce it to the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. No quorum appearing, it becomes the duty of the Chair under the rules to have the roll called in order to report the names of the absentees to the House to be spread upon the Journal.

The Clerk called the roll; and the following members failed to answer to their names:

Adams, J. J.	Cutcheon,	Kleiner,	Rogers,
Aiken,	Daniel,	Laird,	Scott,
Anderson, C. M.	Davis,	Le Fevre,	Spriggs,
Arnot,	Dibble,	Markham,	Stewart, Charles
Belmont,	Dunn,	Matson,	St. Martin,
Bingham,	Eden,	McKinley,	Stone, W. J., of Mo.
Bragg,	Foran,	Mitchell,	Swinburne,
Brumm,	Ford,	Morrill,	Taylor, I. H.
Butterworth,	Gibson, C. H.	Muller,	Thomas, J. R.
Candler,	Glover,	Negley,	Trigg,
Clardy,	Grosvenor,	Nelson,	Van Eaton,
Clements,	Guenther,	Oates,	Viele,
Cobb,	Hayden,	Pirce,	Ward, T. B.
Cole,	Heard,	Reed, T. B.	Warner, A. J.
Cooper,	Hewitt,	Reid, J. W.	Winans.
Crain,	Hires,	Rice,
Curtin,	James,	Robertson,

The committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole, having had under consideration House bill No. 8328, found itself without a quorum; whereupon the Chair had caused the roll to be called, and now reported the names of sixty-six absentees to the House.

The SPEAKER. From this report it appears that there are sixty-six members absent, whose names will be entered upon the Journal. The roll-call discloses the fact that a quorum is present, and, under the rules of the House the Committee of the Whole will immediately resume its session.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The tellers will resume their places, and in order to prevent confusion the Chair will direct the vote to be taken anew.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will not the tellers resume the count where they left off? Is it necessary that the vote should be taken anew? Is not this the same continuous action of the tellers?

The CHAIRMAN. Where a quorum fails to vote, and the roll is called, such a length of time having elapsed, the Chair thinks it proper that the vote should be taken de novo, as the tellers can not determine whether or not the gentlemen have voted thereafter.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. But the gentlemen themselves can.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks in order to avoid confusion that a new vote should be taken.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 51, noes 120.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM]. I understand his amendment is to strike out 10 cents and insert 3 cents. I move to amend the amendment by striking out "three" and inserting "eight;" so that it will read:

There shall be assessed and collected a tax of 8 cents per pound.

Mr. DUNHAM. I would like to say to the gentleman from Missouri——

The CHAIRMAN. It is not debatable.

Mr. DUNHAM. I do not propose to debate it, but simply to say that that is no improvement.

The question being taken on the amendment to the amendment, there were on a division—ayes 86, noes 17.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 124, noes 40.

So the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I desire to offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. No further amendment is in order to this amendment at this time.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I submit it is in order to offer further amendments.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already amended this amendment by striking out "three" and inserting "eight."

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And the amendment now stands simply as if it had been originally offered "eight" instead of "three," and therefore other amendments are in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee has already accepted an amendment, and consequently the amendment is not subject to further amendment, because otherwise the committee could never reach a conclusion. The committee has reached a conclusion as to this amendment.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But I submit that was simply a choice between three and eight. It does not settle any other question. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The CHAIRMAN. The committee must now settle the other question as between eight and ten, and the question recurs upon the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois as amended.

Mr. LAWLER. Would it be in order to have read a letter at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. It would not; debate is not in order.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. DUNHAM as amended, the committee divided, and there were—ayes 120, noes 10.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will appoint tellers.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia, and Mr. HATCH were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and there were—ayes 130, noes 33.

So the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I move to amend by adding to the section what I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That oleomargarine which is ascertained to be pure and healthful, and so certified in writing by the duly appointed health officer of a city or State where the same is offered for sale, and which is exposed for sale and sold to the consumer by its true name and without fraud, and without being disguised so as to resemble dairy butter, shall not be subject to the tax imposed by this section.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order on that amendment. It has been already offered to this section and voted down, or substantially the same was offered on Saturday, as will be seen by the RECORD.

Mr. MCRAE. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment for my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who is necessarily absent for a few moments. It is his and not mine.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I wish to say that I will be glad if the gentleman from Missouri will point out the amendment to which he refers, or in what shape this proposition has been heretofore submitted to the committee and voted down, as I should like to be heard upon the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. The RECORD will show it.

The CHAIRMAN. The clerk is examining the RECORD.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I assume that no such proposition has been submitted or voted on by the committee.

Mr. HATCH. It is easy enough if I am mistaken to withdraw the point of order. I feel sure that substantially the same amendment has been acted upon by the committee.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. This amendment, in order that the committee may understand it, and in order that the question of order may be properly determined, is this: It seeks and is intended to make the bill what its projectors say it is now, and that is, if oleomargarine be pure and healthful, if it has no tape-worm eggs in it, or fungi, or trichinæ, or dairy-maid's hair, or any other impurities; if it is ascertained to be by the proper health officer healthful and so certified in writing (which is a matter of local inspection) and undergoes such inspection, and is submitted to chemical analysis and to the microscopic tests, and after having undergone all of these investigations is found to be pure and healthful and is offered for sale and sold to the consumer——

Mr. HATCH. I must demand the regular order.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am simply stating what my amendment is.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. MCMILLIN). The Chair understood the gentleman from Indiana to be addressing himself to the point of order.

Mr. HATCH. On the contrary, he is explaining his amendment.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I am addressing myself to the point of order, and am endeavoring to show that this is not the same amendment as any that has been previously submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will hear the gentleman.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. In addition to the article being ascertained to be pure and healthful, it must be exposed in the market for sale under its own name of oleomargarine. It is expressly provided that the consumer shall be notified so that there shall be no fraud upon him. And then for the purpose of protecting the dairy interest which lies behind this bill, and needs its protection, it is further provided that it shall not be disguised so as to resemble dairy butter, either good dairy butter or bad dairy butter, yellow dairy butter or red, white or blue dairy butter, dairy butter made out of pure cream or out of buttermilk. It seems to me this provision is broad enough to protect the dairy interests and all other butter interests from Chinese cheap labor.

Mr. CURTIN addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN] desire to speak to the point of order?

Mr. CURTIN. Yes. If the representation of seventy-eight thousand laboring men of Pennsylvania has any bearing on the point of order I have it here.

The CHAIRMAN. Nothing except what pertains to the point of order would be in order at this time.

Mr. CURTIN. With very little knowledge of the rules of this House I do not think I am in order. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Upon the hasty examination which the Chair has been able to make of the RECORD for several days past he finds the nearest approach to the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is one offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. REAGAN], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. REAGAN. Mr. Chairman. I desire to offer an amendment as a substitute for the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG].

The Clerk read as follows:

"Amend by adding the following proviso at the end of section 8:

"'Provided, That this act shall not be understood or construed to impose any of the taxes mentioned in it on oleomargarine, or any of the products or compounds mentioned in it, where the same is plainly marked with the name of the particular product, and sold or offered to be sold as such.'"

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now direct to be read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana upon which his ruling is asked.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That oleomargarine, which has been ascertained to be pure and healthful, and so certified by the duly appointed health officer of a city, or a State, and where the same is offered for sale, and it is exposed for sale and sold to the consumer by its true name, and without fraud, and without being disguised so as to resemble dairy butter, shall not be subject to the tax imposed by this section.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. The two amendments are quite distinct.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order. It will be observed the amendment of the gentleman from Texas provided that all oleomargarine substances marked as such should be exempted from the tax provision of the bill. Upon comparison it will be seen that not only is that required in the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana, but the certificate of the proper health officer showing its healthfulness is also required. The Chair is therefore of opinion that the amendment of the gentleman from Texas while similar in one respect to that of the gentleman from Indiana is not so in others. The Chair therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. BAYNE. I desire to make another point of order against the amendment. It is this: that the bill is only for the purpose of raising revenue——

Mr. HAMMOND. That is a mistake.

Mr. BAYNE. And that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana is one requiring a distinction to be made between wholesome and unwholesome food, and is therefore not germane to this bill.

The amendment distinguishes as to the wholesomeness or unwholesomeness of the food. It distinguishes the wholesome food which may be put on the market from the unwholesome food liable to tax. And, moreover, it is not proper to propose an amendment to the bill which takes away from it the property of levying an equal tax upon the subject-matter of taxation as this proposition of the gentleman from Indiana does.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire to say on the point of order that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] is mistaken in both his propositions. This is not a bill to raise revenue, but is a bill to put down oleomargarine. He is mistaken also in supposing that the bill has nothing to do with the purity of the food. For in section 14 is this provision:

The Commissioner may also decide whether any substance made in imitation or semblance of butter or intended for human consumption contains ingredients deleterious to the public health.

Now, this is a mere change of one of the features of the bill, providing that in certain cases State officers may determine that the thing presented to the public is not injurious to public health, and that if so it may be subject to sale without this tax. Therefore, whether this be a bill to raise revenue or to put down oleomargarine, it is a bill also to protect people from putting bad food into their stomachs.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I desire, in answer to the point raised by the gentleman from Pennsylvania——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is ready to rule on the point of order.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That being the case, I do not desire to be heard on it.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. As it was I who offered the amendment, if the Chair is in any doubt about it I should like to be heard on the point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is of opinion that, the bill being before the committee, whether its purpose is one thing or another it is competent for the House to restrict it wherein it sees proper to do so. The Chair, therefore, overrules the point of order. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Let the amendment be read again.

Several members objected.

Mr. MCRAE. I ask that the amendment which I sent a few moments ago to the desk for my colleague be submitted.

The CHAIRMAN. Is it an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. McRAE. Yes, sir.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 8 by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That where cotton-seed oil enters into the production of oleomargarine, and it shall be satisfactorily shown that the product is perfectly wholesome as an article of food, and when it is marked and sold as oleomargarine and not as butter, and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that no fraud is contemplated or is possible upon buyers, then the tax herein imposed shall be remitted to the extent that cotton-seed oil enters into the composition of said product."

The CHAIRMAN. This seems to be framed as an amendment to the section, and will properly be in order after the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] is voted upon. The gentleman from Arkansas will be recognized to present it at the proper time.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment was drawn by my colleague, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, who is absent, without seeing the pending amendment. He asked me to offer it for him, and I have done so; but with the understanding that the committee shall have an opportunity to vote upon it after the pending amendment is disposed of, I withdraw it for the present.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks that in its present form the amendment will properly come in after the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] has been acted upon.

Mr. McRAE. I have no objection to that.

The House divided on the amendment offered by Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana; and there were—ayes 44, noes 92.

So the amendment was rejected.

The amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (presented by Mr. McRAE), was read, as follows:

Amend section 8 by adding at the end of the section the following:

"Provided, That where cotton-seed oil enters into the production of oleomargarine, and it shall be satisfactorily shown that the product is perfectly wholesome as an article of food, and when it is marked and sold as oleomargarine and not as butter, and the Secretary of the Treasury is satisfied that no fraud is contemplated or is possible upon buyers, then the tax herein imposed shall be remitted to the extent that cotton-seed oil enters into the composition of said product.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. McRAE. Mr. Chairman, I have another amendment to the same section, which I desire to offer for my colleague [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The Clerk read the amendment, as follows:

Amend section 8, line 3, by striking out the word "eight" and inserting the words "half a cent;" so that it will read "a tax of half a cent per pound," &c.

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order on that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that the rate has been already fixed by a vote of the Committee of the Whole.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair thinks the point is well taken.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I submit again—— [Calls of "Regular order!" "Regular order!"] I am addressing the House on the point of order. [Renewed calls of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HATCH. I think I can settle this. I move that the committee now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MCMILLIN, from the Committee of the Whole, reported that they had had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, &c., and had come to no resolution thereon.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Speaker announced the appointment of Mr. BLOUNT, Mr. RIGGS, and Mr. BINGHAM as conferees on the part of the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the Post-Office appropriation bill.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the further consideration of bills raising revenue; and, pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that when the bill is reported from the Committee to the House a vote shall be taken in the House on the propositions which I am about to state in the order in which I shall state them. I do this for the purpose of advancing the business of the House. What I propose is that a yea-and-nay vote shall be taken, first, upon the proposition to fix the rate of tax at 3 cents; if that is voted down by the House, that a similar vote shall be taken upon the proposition to fix the rate at 5 cents; if that is voted down, that a like vote shall be taken upon the amendment submitted by the committee fixing the rate at 8 cents; and, if that is voted down, that the vote shall then be taken upon the bill as reported.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object. If the gentleman will include my amendment and give me a vote on it I will agree, but if he insists upon cutting my amendment out, then, as a matter of course, I object.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, it is certainly very desirable that we should, if possible, compromise our differences upon this bill and let legislation proceed. I have been in consultation with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] upon this subject. I have no desire whatever to retard legislation in this House. All I want is to have a fair vote upon this bill. I want to make this further suggestion to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]. I speak only for myself, for I am not authorized to speak for anybody else. If the gentleman from Missouri will agree to allow the vote to be taken as he suggested, with a further yea-and-nay vote on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], and a further yea-and-nay vote on the section in this bill dividing the fines between the Government and the informer, I say to him that I, for one, will stop fighting this bill and let it come to a vote.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Speaker, as I understand the friends of this bill, their object has been mainly to provide means for identifying this oleomargarine, and I understand that they have stated privately that they do not care so much for the tax as they do to be certain that this article is sold for what it is. Now, if that be the fact, I can see no object in placing the Commissioner of Internal Revenue in charge of all the factories of this character throughout the country, placing inspectors over them, and compelling the manufacturers to pay a tax. The article being identified beyond question, I can not see any good reason why there should be any tax whatever upon it. For that reason, Mr. Speaker——

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] that I am not responsible for what any friend or opponent of this bill may have said about it outside of this House, nor am I governed by any such statement. I am here in good faith supporting this bill. I have made this proposition in the utmost good faith to meet more than half-way gentlemen on the other side who have suggested that an arrangement might be reached. I have made my proposition, and it is to take a fair vote in the House to test the sense of the House upon the several propositions as to the rate of tax—3 cents, 5 cents, 8 cents, or 10 cents.

Mr. RANDALL. I suggest that these questions should be voted on in a different order from that suggested by the gentleman from Missouri; that the question should first be taken on 8 cents, then on 5 cents, then on 3 cents.

Mr. HATCH. I would be willing to have the vote so taken; but the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] requested that it be taken the other way, and in deference to him I have so proposed.

Mr. RANDALL. Unanimous consent can do anything, of course; but the usual proceeding is to vote first on the higher figure. If the House should agree to 8 cents, that of course would settle the question by a single vote.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. But, Mr. Speaker, the object of this compromise is to save the necessity——

Mr. RANDALL. I do not wish to interfere with any compromise which may have been arranged; I only state what is the usual proceeding under the rule.

The SPEAKER. The request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has been objected to.

Mr. HATCH. I hope the Chair will state it again before making a final announcement.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will do so.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Does the gentleman from Missouri accede to the proposition that there be a yea-and-nay vote taken on the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]?

Mr. HATCH. I do not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And on the clause in regard to informers?

Mr. HATCH. I do not.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Then we can not agree.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope that some general understanding may be reached, so that we may have a vote on these questions and proceed with the business of the House. I think the gentleman from Missouri had better agree to a yea-and-nay vote on these two questions.

Mr. REAGAN. There are a great many other subjects waiting action by the House, and I trust that some agreement may be reached.

Mr. TAULBEE. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I wish to know what question is pending before the House?

The SPEAKER. There is no motion before the House except the motion of the gentleman from Missouri that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole——

Mr. TAULBEE. Then I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. But pending that, the gentleman from Missouri endeavored to effect some arrangement about the consideration of the bill, which was objected to. There is nothing of that sort before the House. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope there will be consent to a little informal talk on this subject in the way of negotiation to see whether we can not reach some basis of agreement.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, gentlemen have asked me to consent to modify a section of this bill the consideration of which has not yet been reached in the Committee of the Whole. I can not speak for the committee; I have no right to anticipate what the committee will do with that section when it is reached. I will not submit any proposition to modify a section of this bill which has not been reached for consideration in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MORRISON. What does the gentleman say as to the proposition of the gentleman from Indiana which has been voted down?

Mr. HATCH. In two or three different shapes it has been voted down in the Committee of the Whole by a very large majority, and I think gentlemen ought to accept that decision.

Mr. HISCOCK. I hope the gentleman from Missouri will accede to the suggestion that the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana be included in his proposition.

Mr. HATCH. At the suggestion of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] I include in my request the three propositions I have named and a yea-and-nay vote upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Now I hope the gentleman will go further——

Mr. HATCH. No; I will not go further.

Mr. HISCOCK (to Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia). That is as far as you should ask him to go.

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Missouri state in what order he desires the questions taken upon the rate of tax?

Mr. HATCH. I desire that the question be first taken on the lowest rate.

The SPEAKER. If the House will be in order the Chair will state the request made by the gentleman from Missouri. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that there may be a yea-and-nay vote in the House, first upon the proposition to fix the tax at 3 cents per pound; secondly, to fix it at 5 cents; thirdly, at 8 cents; and also that there may be a yea-and-nay vote in the House upon the amendment heretofore proposed in Committee of the Whole by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to the eighth section. Is there objection?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I hope there will be none.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I object.

Mr. HATCH. Put the question on my motion to go into committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I withdraw my objection temporarily. Why does the gentleman exclude my amendment; why not allow it to be pending?

Mr. HATCH. Simply because, as I have already explained, the gentleman's amendment of half a cent a pound is not in order, the rate having been fixed at 8 cents.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If that is not in order then 3 cents is not in order.

Mr. HATCH. It is only piling up one more vote in the RECORD.

A MEMBER. I would do it.

Mr. HATCH. I ask for a vote on going into committee.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee resumes the consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I offer the following amendment to the eighth section.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to section 8:

"And the producer of tobacco shall have the right to sell the same, and dealers to buy from them, unmanufactured tobacco without the payment of privilege or other taxes, and all laws in conflict herewith are hereby repealed."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the following amendment, to come in at the close of the section.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the tax on spirits distilled from grapes and peaches shall hereafter be 25 cents a gallon.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 15, noes 99.

Mr. DUNHAM. No quorum has voted.

Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. FREDERICK were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 121.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter there shall be placed upon every receipt for any sum of money or the payment of any debt a special-tax stamp of the denomination of 2 cents.

Mr. SOWDEN. I make the point of order that this amendment is not germane to the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. This is a revenue tax, and the Chair will entertain it.

Mr. DUNHAM. I demand a division.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 117.

The amendment was disagreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, several messages in writing were received from the President of the United States, by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announcing that he had approved and signed bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 570) for the relief of E. P. Thompson;

An act (H. R. 4968) to authorize and direct the registry and enrollment of the barge Michigan, of Alpena, Mich.;

An act (H. R. 5789) to amend section 2552 of the Revised Statutes of the United States; and

An act (H. R. 8762) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in the appropriations for public printing, pensions, and pay of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The committee resumed its session, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter there shall be affixed to each deed, instrument, or writing, whereby any lands, tenements, or otherwise conveyed to or vested in the purchaser or any other person or persons by his, her, or their direction, when the consideration or value does not exceed $500, a stamp of the denomination of 50 cents; when the consideration exceeds $500 and does not exceed $1,000, a stamp of the denomination of $1, and for every additional $500 or fractional part thereof in excess of $1,000 of consideration, an additional stamp of the denomination of 50 cents.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 122.

So the amendment was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter all United States officers shall pay a tax of 5 per cent. upon salaries exceeding $1,500 per annum.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 5, noes 92.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

That all railroad companies shall hereafter pay a tax of 10 per cent. on all dividends and undistributed profits.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 11, noes 90.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us have a quorum on that.

Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. PRICE were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 21, noes 143.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to strike out the eighth section of the bill.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 21, noes 117.

Mr. DUNHAM. Let us have a quorum on this.

Mr. DUNHAM and Mr. PRICE were appointed tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 3, noes 117.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read the ninth section, as follows:

SEC. 9. That whenever any manufacturer of oleomargarine sells, or removes for sale or consumption, any oleomargarine upon which the tax is required to be paid by stamps, without the use of the proper stamps, it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, within a period of not more than two years after such sale or removal, upon satisfactory proof, to estimate the amount of tax which has been omitted to be paid, and to make an assessment therefor and certify the same to the collector. The tax so assessed shall be in addition to the penalties imposed by law for such sale or removal.

No amendment was offered.

The Clerk read the tenth section of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 10. That all oleomargarine imported from foreign countries shall, in addition to any import duty imposed on the same, pay an internal-revenue tax of 15 cents per pound, such tax to be represented by coupon stamps as in the case of oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. The stamps shall be affixed and canceled by the owner or importer of the oleomargarine while it is in the custody of the proper custom-house officers; and the oleomargarine shall not pass out of the custody of said officers until the stamps have been so affixed and canceled, but shall be put up in wooden packages, each containing not less than 10 pounds, as prescribed in this act for oleomargarine manufactured in the United States, before the stamps are affixed; and the owner or importer of such oleomargarine shall be liable to all the penal provisions of this act prescribed for manufacturers of oleomargarine manufactured in the United States. Whenever it is necessary to take any oleomargarine so imported to any place other than the public stores of the United States for the purpose of affixing and canceling such stamps, the collector of customs of the port where such oleomargarine is entered shall designate a bonded warehouse to which it shall be taken, under the control of such customs officer as such collector may direct; and every officer of customs who permits any such oleomargarine to pass out of his custody or control without compliance by the owner or importer thereof with the provisions of this section relating thereto, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined not less than $1,000 nor more than $5,000, and imprisoned not less than six months nor more than three years. Every person who sells or offers for sale any imported oleomargarine, or oleomargarine purporting or claimed to have been imported, not put up in packages and stamped as provided by this act, shall be fined not less than $500 nor more than $5,000, and be imprisoned not less than six months nor more than two years.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I have a letter here, which I want to have read in the hearing of the House by the Clerk, in reference to the subject now under debate. One of the oldest residents of Illinois, in the stone business, in the course of his travels through the State of Illinois, while in Chicago, and hearing a great deal about this question, concluded to visit one of the packing-houses and see how this oleomargarine was manufactured. His letter is in reference to that subject, and I ask the Clerk to read it.

ENGLEWOOD, ILL., May 28, 1886.

DEAR SIR: I am not in any way interested in any of the corporations; not one cent can it affect me except in what I will be compelled to pay for the oleomargarine in tax. I have gone for my own satisfaction and examined the modus operandi of the work—which any man can do who may wish—of the making of the oleomargarine.

It is made from the tallow, first grinding then heating sufficiently to make it into a liquid. It is run into coolers and then pressed, separating the stearine and all fibrous parts. The oil from the press is dropped into a cooler. When taken from the cooler it has the appearance of butter when taken from the churn, and is palatable and sweet and of a better color than the average of butter taken from the churn. It is then placed in a churn with pure milk and cream and churned, which gives a butter flavor. It is then salted and worked over, the same as is done in a dairy. It is then ready for use. There is nothing in it that can be unhealthy. It is a pure extract from the tallow, in substance about the same as the butter from the cow, and is as good as the average butter and far superior to the low grades of butter. It is nutritious, palatable, healthy, and cheap. It is the poor man's butter, and when you tax it you are only adding that burden to the poor man. You tax him and not the manufacturer.

The discovery of extracting the oleomargarine from the tallow of the bullock is a blessing, and makes it possible for the poor man to have butter on his table. Those who say oleomargarine is made up of refuse grease are talking for a purpose, as they know not what they say. The discovery has given a value to tallow of from one to two dollars per hundred on each fat bullock. The farmer gets that.

The dairy interests may fear they have a competition in the introduction of oleomargarine. Is it not an honest one? Are they going to force this tax on the poor man with the view of forcing out of use an honest competitor? What a hue and cry they would raise if one firm in the country had the exclusive right of making all the mowers and harvesters or plows! In 1834 or thereabouts the farmers and stage owners and agents met in convention in Albany with the view of stopping the building of railroads. The pretext was it was going to ruin the sale of horses and the use of coaches and drivers.

In 1845-'46 the discovery of the propeller wheel was being introduced. It was ridiculed then. It is now forcing our large steamers on the ocean. The flying-shuttle, the steam-power for weaving, and the planing-machine met vigorous opposition, yet the world moves on.

The twelve hours a day, the ten hours, and now the eight hours a day has its opposition. Genius and intelligence and progress will move on notwithstanding the selfishness of men. Science will prevail; selfishess must give way.

The farmers are among those who cry out against trades unions. They, like the trades union, are selfish in the extreme. The dairymen are only a small portion of producers of this country, and they, like the other trades, will have to concede that there are other people and other interests than theirs. We want but one trades union in this country. That union shall be for the best interests of the entire nation. We do not want, nor will we have, any more legislation for classes or corporations. This that has been done must be abolished. The land, railroad, banking, and other monopolies must be abolished, and that soon. If there is a necessity for raising more revenue raise it by a graduated income tax; put it on those who have their favored franchises, not on the poor man. Let up a bit on him. Look back over the history of the last thirty years. See if you can what has been done for him. A change will be demanded in a way it will not be misunderstood. We expected a change for the better; so far it has been for the worse.

It was the design of the founders of this Government it should be for the masses and not for the few. We have no objection to the strictest inspection and restriction to protect and govern the manufacturer of all food products, and tax the same to pay the expense of maintenance of the inspection and make the penalty for any infringement or violation with severe punishment. This will meet the approval of all good citizens.

Respectfully, yours, M. HALEY.

Hon. FRANK LAWLER.

Mr. LAWLER. I am sorry that owing to the confusion prevailing in the House this letter was not carefully listened to by every member on the floor. This is the opinion of a straightforward, honest business man. He has no interest whatever in the matter, and believes that it is a manufacture that ought to be controlled by the authorities in a proper way; but he takes the view which I am satisfied is taken by nine-tenths of the people, that it is an improper and poor way of levying taxation to select a food product for that purpose.

I withdraw the pro forma amendment.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Chairman, the other day during the course of some remarks made upon this bill I said I did believe that the workingmen of this country in their organizations are opposed to its passage. A telegram was read, in answer to which I rose to a personal explanation. I now hold in my hand a telegram received from a number of these organizations in Central and Western Pennsylvania, an association numbering altogether about seventy-eight thousand, against the passage of the bill; and I wish to say to this House that there are more coming from that class of people.

I oppose the bill on the principles of the bill itself. I am opposed to it because I am opposed to taxing any industry out of existence; and am willing, as I said before, to submit this article to the most rigid tests that can be demanded even down to the microscopic tests with instruments of the highest magnifying powers.

I oppose it because on the same principle you should introduce an inquiry into coffee and tea and other articles of food just as well as in reference to this article; and if this is a parental Government let us examine the food of our people generally, but until then let the freemen of the United States be the judges of what is wholesome for themselves and their families, and let not this House legislate on such a subject.

I ask to have this telegram and the resolutions read, and if there is not time in the two minutes allotted to me then I shall ask to have them printed. [Cries of "Read!" "Read!"]

The Clerk read as follows:

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 31, 1886.

Hon. ANDREW G. CURTIN,
House Representatives, Washington:

Below find resolutions passed by trades assembly and lodges composing the same. Official copies by mail:

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 29, 1886.

Whereas certain measures are now pending in Congress for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of butterine and oleomargarine, and the imposition of taxes thereon amounting to a prohibition; and

Whereas the manufacture and sale of this article is a legitimate business, furnishing a clean, palatable, healthy, and nutritious article of food at a reasonable price, and that the effect of this legislation will be to increase the price of a cheap and wholesome food product, and destroy the labor its manufacture employs; and

Whereas the only reason given for this legislation is that it comes into competition with butter:

It is resolved, That we protest against the passage of such measures as unjust and injurious to the laboring classes and as opposed to the principles of sound public policy.

It is further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of this assembly.

The foregoing preamble and resolution were adopted at a session of the Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania for the purpose of taking prompt action in regard to a bill now pending before Congress entitled "A bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of butterine or oleomargarine."

RICHARD ENNISS,
President of Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.
T. J. DICUS,
Secretary Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.

[During the reading of the foregoing the hammer fell.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand the gentleman from Pennsylvania is indifferent about the whole of this being read; I therefore call for the regular order.

Mr. CURTIN. It comes out of my time.

Mr. WILLIS. Let it be read.

Mr. CURTIN. I want the names of the signers to be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can have them printed.

Mr. CURTIN. Very well; I ask to have it all printed.

The CHAIRMAN. It will be printed.

The telegram is printed above.]

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

I have during the progress of this bill and its consideration in the committee persistently fought it at every step. I have done so not for the purpose of wasting the time of the House, not for the purpose of making myself conspicuous as a filibuster, but for the purpose of gaining a good end in a matter of important public legislation. I think we have arrived at that stage in the consideration of this bill when I feel I have accomplished all I expected to accomplish or could hope for. The chairman of this committee having the bill in charge has agreed with me that when it comes up in the House for consideration he will himself offer amendments such as I have desired to vote upon: first to strike out the tax of 10 cents a pound and insert 3; if the House refuses to do that, then to strike out 10 and insert 5; and if the House shall refuse to do that, to follow it up by another amendment to strike out 10 and insert 8. And it is further agreed with him that he will himself offer the amendment which was submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], so that the House can have an opportunity for a fair and square ay-and-no vote upon these items of the bill and upon the bill itself.

Mr. BLANCHARD. A yea-and-nay vote has been agreed upon.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Yes, it has been agreed that an ay-and-no vote shall be taken in the House.

Now, while I can not vote for the bill even with the amendments I have suggested, still I do not feel at liberty uselessly to consume further the time of the House when there is so much public business to be transacted. I can not vote for the bill for reasons which I have heretofore stated in my remarks. I regard it as vicious in every form and in every aspect. It violates every principle of republican government, and violates as well all of the fundamental principles of the Democratic party, in which I believe.

It will subject the people throughout the country to a system of espionage, to spies and informers. It will make all the housekeepers in this land afraid of their employés, their servants, or whoever may be around them. It will seriously embarrass and disturb the cattle interest of this country. It will lower the price of hogs as well as of cattle. And all for no good to the masses of the people. It will simply put it into the power of combinations of dairymen around the cities to increase the price of living, and will make it harder for the poor people, for the wage-workers, for the millions of consumers in this land to live.

For these reasons, whenever this bill comes up for a vote, I propose to vote against it. But as I have accomplished all that I could have hoped to accomplish, and as the chairman of the committee has shown a spirit of fairness, I announce for myself I will not filibuster further against the bill. [Applause].

Mr. HATCH. I desire to say to the committee that the statement made by the gentleman from West Virginia is authoritative and correct. I propose, when we get into the House, to offer for the consideration of the House, in the order named, the amendments stated in my request for unanimous consent a short time ago. The gentleman from West Virginia said I would offer them. I will offer them as stated, not, of course, that I will support them, and the gentleman does not expect that; but I will offer them in good faith in the House, giving the opportunity in the House for every gentleman to vote by a yea-and-nay vote on each of these propositions.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is my understanding.

Here the committee informally rose, and Mr. RICHARDSON took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had passed a bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the advantages secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes relating to the hours of labor; in which the concurrence of the House was requested.

The message further announced that the Senate had passed without amendment the bill (H. R. 2357) for the relief of H. H. Faulkner and Mary Woodlee.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman who preceded me [Mr. CURTIN] has just had read an important dispatch, that contains information, I think, of such a character that the House should weigh it well. And I, too, sir, have a couple of dispatches that will contribute to our information. Only a few moments ago I received one from the oleomargarine manufacturers of New York and Brooklyn in these words.

A MEMBER. Manufacturers of what?

Mr. TILLMAN. Of oleomargarine, of course. The dispatch says:

NEW YORK, June 1, 1886.

Hon. G. D. TILLMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Your consistent course in defending oleomargarine has our warmest approval. All we desire is a right to fair competition with honest State branding laws honestly enforced.

THE MANUFACTURERS OF NEW YORK AND BROOKLYN.

I also hold in my hand another dispatch from the Merchants' Exchange of the city of Charleston, addressed to the entire delegation from South Carolina, exhorting us to defeat this bill if possible. It reads:

CHARLESTON, S. C., May 27, 1886.

HONS. SAMUEL DIBBLE, GEORGE D. TILLMAN, D. WYATT AIKIN, W. H. PERRY, J. J. HEMPHILL, G. W. DARGAN, and ROBERT SMALLS, House Representatives:

The committee appointed by the Merchants' Exchange to investigate the important subject of the proposed dairy legislation in Congress would respectfully report that your committee have as carefully as they were able examined this question in all its bearings, and recommend the following action by the exchange:

Whereas efforts are now being made to secure enactment by Congress, under bills pending, providing for imposing a special tax of 10 cents per pound upon the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine, with additional restrictions in the form of heavy license assessments against dealers in these articles and the placing of their production and sale under charge of the Internal Revenue Department; and

Whereas it has been well and clearly shown that these products are proper ones for food purposes, and their manufacture has proven to be a great public convenience, as well as furnishing an important acquisition to the volume of commercial operations, thus promotive of the business interest of a large number of merchants throughout the country, as well as conferring incalculable benefits upon consumers: Therefore,

Be it resolved by the Merchants' Exchange of Charleston, S. C., That it would be against sound public policy to carry out the proposed legislation calculated to operate against the oleomargarine and butterine industries, and that, as these articles are manifestly proper ones to be manufactured and sold for food purposes, any special tax would be an unjustifiable discrimination against legitimate domestic industry, and should not be imposed.

Resolved, That all imitation butter products should be sold on their merits, and that measures providing against their being offered for sale as ordinary butter should be enacted and enforced by State or local authority.

Respectfully submitted.

GEO. W. BELL, Secretary.

Mr. Chairman, it is but a pretense that this bill is to protect the public health. When the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] offered an amendment requiring hotel, restaurant, and boarding-house keepers to placard their dining-rooms conspicuously with the words "Oleomargarine is used by this house," it was readily adopted, but when he proposed another amendment, attaching a penalty for failure to so notify customers, it was easily voted down, showing that the majority are insincere and care nothing for the health of those who eat oleomargarine, because, as the bill in its present shape is merely declaratory, no public housekeeper can be punished for feeding his boarders on oleomargarine.

Mr. Chairman, this bill is a discrimination against towns people and against laboring people. Nearly everybody in the country has a cow and can make natural butter for his own use and that of his family. But where can townsmen and laborers in cities, mines, factories, &c., get their butter except at a rate at which they can only taste it occasionally unless they can purchase oleomargarine or butterine at a reasonable price? This bill likewise discriminates in favor of the dairymen against other agriculturists.

Enact this bill, and it will lower the price of beef-cattle nearly $3 per head by diminishing the market value of the oleine in the tallow, and in proportion, for the same reason, it will reduce the value of hogs and sheep. Tallow, lard, and suet were all formerly largely used for illuminating or lubricating purposes, both of which are now done either by gas, petroleum, or cotton-seed oil. As these animal fats have been superseded for those purposes, what valuable use can be made of them if they can not be worked into oleomargarine, especially as the quality of cotton-seed oil is so superior and its quantity so abundant that it has well-nigh displaced not only olive oil for the table but lard for the kitchen. Peanut oil which for food is even better than cotton-seed oil is likewise becoming very plentiful and cheap in competition with lard.

I say to my North Carolinia friends who are advocating this bill, pass it and the price of peanuts will fall perhaps 50 per cent. [Laughter.] I say to my friend from Mississippi [Mr. MORGAN], and the representatives from other Cotton States, pass this bill and the price of cotton-seed, now worth on the average perhaps 20 cents a bushel, will go down to 10 cents a bushel, their value for manure. Why? Mostly because the oleine of these two articles, together with oleine of animal fats, enter so largely into the manufacture of oleomargarine, which I insist is better than natural butter, as my colleague [Mr. AIKEN], if he were here, could testify, for he has studied this question thoroughly, having carefully examined the factories and spent hours and days investigating the process of making oleomargarine.

Mr. MORGAN. Will my friend permit me to state——

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard the formal amendment offered by the gentleman from West Virginia as withdrawn.

Mr. BLOUNT. I renew the amendment; and I yield my time to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. TILLMAN. I thank the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. BLOUNT], and I should like if I could get my time extended once or twice more. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I speak now for the opportunity of extending the gentleman's time.

Mr. TILLMAN. Mr. Chairman, oleomargarine, when it is honestly made out of good materials, is not only as good as butter but it is better. [Laughter.] Gentlemen, you laugh again because you have not studied the science and art of its manufacture. Oleomargarine is simply made of the oleine or principal liquid ingredient of certain animal and vegetable fixed oils or fats. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] charged that oleomargarine is made out of tallow, lard, and suet bodily, while it is made merely out of those articles in part, as only the oleine which is about four-tenths of those fats is used in making oleomargarine, and oleine is oleine, whether derived from butter, from animal fat, or from vegetable matter. The crude materials are put through a hashing, washing, freezing, heating, and pressing process to get rid of the tallow and stearine and other solids and gums that are objectionable and fit only to make candles, soap-grease, &c.

The substance which gives oleomargarine the consistence, color, and taste of butter comes from the sweet milk in which the mixed oleine is churned, and it is merely the caseine, curd, or cheesy element, and the margarine of the milk blended with the oleine by churning at a high temperature, and then freezing, to prevent crystallization. Take 500 pounds of oleine properly extracted from oils and fats with 100 pounds of sweet milk and 20 pounds of salt and churn them together and you get 620 pounds of better butter than you can make in the best Alderney dairy in America. [Laughter.] Why? Because, first, it will keep ten times as long as natural butter for the reason that it has an excessive supply of oleine, while it is deficient, so to speak, in certain acids that speedily smell badly in natural butter and cause it to become rancid and putrid. Another advantage that oleomargarine has, one by which it can be easily distinguished in warm weather, is that it never gets soft and sloppy as natural butter does. Oleomargarine will not get in that condition until the thermometer approaches 140° Fahrenheit.

That is a simple rule by which to test the matter; and gentlemen need not shudder in horror about this thing. It is not the first instance where art has surpassed nature. If I were now put on the stand in a court of justice I would swear to the best of my knowledge and belief that two-thirds of all the butter that the members of this House have eaten in this city, or in Baltimore, Philadelphia, New York, Boston, or in other cities, for the last three or four years, but especially in this city, has been oleomargarine. [Great laughter.] And yet, gentlemen, you are still alive. It is only a wrong association of ideas and facts which makes your gorge rise. The friends of this bill have been challenged to name a single instance of any one dying, or even being made sick, from the use of oleomargarine, yet they have not even named one instance. Still they propose to legislate against the poor laborers in the cities, in the factories, in the mines, and in the workshops, and to deprive them of this cheap and wholesome article of food which I may well define as the poor man's meat as well as butter. By the use of this article he can use cold baker's bread and avoid the expense of a cook and fuel for perhaps half of the year. Pass this bill, and those of you from the cities who vote for it will hear from your constituents or I am most sadly mistaken; and some of the representatives of rural districts will also hear it thunder in my opinion.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. Oleomargarine has struck such a solid friend in my distinguished friend from South Carolina that I want to give him more time. [Laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. I not only thank the gentleman, but I am grateful to the House for unanimously according me a third hearing. This, however, is a subject about which so many gentlemen on this floor differ from me, and about which there are such strong and radical antagonisms of opinion (I say it without intending to offend anybody) simply because gentlemen have not inquired into the subject, that I can not hope to do it justice even in five minutes more, but I will attempt to present one or two additional points which I think ought to have some weight.

The derivation of the word "margarine" throws some light on the manufacture of artificial butter. It comes from the Greek and means "pearl," because it crystallizes in pearly scales and is the substance which imparts the color as well as the firm consistence of natural butter. Mégé, who invented oleomargarine, while pursuing his efforts to manufacture a palatable substitute for butter was led to believe that the only difference between butter and beef fat was that the latter contained an excess of stearine which is the chief constituent of butter. By extracting the oleine of tallow and other fats and churning it in milk he proved his theory to be correct. So that the component elements of natural and artificial butter are the same, except that they are mixed in better proportion in the artificial than in the natural product.

Mr. Chairman, that some of the materials used in the manufacture of oleomargarine are not as fresh and pure as they ought to be no one will deny, and that the processes of separating or blending those materials are not always as well performed as they ought to be nobody can gainsay, but the same is true of natural butter. The milk from which it is made is frequently very poor, filthy, or diseased, and we know that millions of gallons of water and thousands of tons of mutton suet have been employed to adulterate butter.

The shocking stories we hear about the fat of dead horses, cattle, and other animals being converted into oleomargarine are mere inventions of the imagination. The manufacturer of oleomargarine has a reputation or good-will to preserve as well as the dairyman, and the maker of the former article must keep on his good behavior and exercise his best skill to perfect his product to command the highest price for it. So that there is quite as much necessity to protect the public against adulterated butter as against adulterated oleomargarine.

Mr. Chairman, the principal objection to oleomargarine is that it makes natural butter cheap, and that therefore it should be taxed out of existence. Sir, everything is cheap now except gold. Beef is down in price, as well as milch cows; so is pork, mutton, cotton, corn, wheat, and even uncoined silver. As I said the other day, the discovery of a German chemist a few years ago, that glucose sugar and sirup could be extracted from Indian corn, by the simple process of boiling it in diluted sulphuric acid has made sugar cheaper than it has been in the history of the world. Everybody knows that glucose sugar and glucose sirup contain only about 40 per cent. as much saccharine matter as an equal quantity of cane sugar and sirup, yet it gives satisfaction. Everybody is pleased with it, except that maple-sugar producers and cane-sugar producers try to make us believe that some of the sulphuric acid is left in it and causes disease, just as these dairymen are trying to make out that oleomargarine is causing sickness and diminishing population. I say that with these exceptions everybody is pleased to have sugar so cheap, and nobody proposes to tax glucose; still it would be just as wise and just as fair to tax glucose, and thus to discriminate to that extent against the producer of Indian corn in the West, as it is to tax oleomargarine.

After many years' trial oleomargarine has approved itself a cheap and excellent food. There is hardly a doubt that twice as much of it is consumed in the cities as of natural butter, and there is a much greater quantity of it exported from this country than there is of butter.

Impose a tax of 10 or even 8 cents a pound on oleomargarine and there shall soon be but little or no oleomargarine to tax, either by reason of a mighty industry having been stricken down by the strong arm of the law at the bidding of a rival interest, or by every public dairy having a creamery and an oleomargarine factory working in concert, and the whole product will go out for sale as butter, but it will be half one, half the other, and all of neither. I predict that although this bill if it become a law may decree the destruction of the manufacture of oleomargarine by a prohibitory tax, yet the decree can never be carried into effect, nor will the city people do without oleomargarine, because they can not and will not. So we may expect fearful times in the near future if the Internal Revenue Bureau shall attempt to enforce such a law.

I have not time to do more than merely glance at the revenue feature of the bill. Eight cents a pound tax if it can be collected will bring into the Treasury $16,000,000 according to the lowest estimate. What use have we for the money? There is already a large surplus in the Treasury, and to increase the surplus is to stimulate further extravagance and corruption than now prevail.

But the most odious provision of the bill is the extension of the infamous excise system, which offers a premium for spies, informers, and petty tyrants to worry, rob, and oppress the people. [Great applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, I rise for the purpose of protesting against the use which is made here of the names of organizations of Knights of Labor and other associations of laboring men with the view of influencing the vote upon this bill. I affirm that such use is without proper justification. Why, sir, we have had presented here petitions claiming to represent the sentiments of seventy thousand laboring men. By whom are these petitions signed? They are signed, as I understand, by the heads of the orders, the officers; they are signed by a few men who can be easily reached, easily worked upon, easily induced to act in this matter; and petitions gotten up in this way are brought here and heralded over the country as an expression of the views of seventy thousand workingmen.

A MEMBER. Who gets them up?

Mr. PARKER. We can readily understand how they are gotten up. They are gotten up by such men as those who have been sent here, if we are correctly informed, within forty-eight hours, to put in their work where it will do most good.

Mr. Chairman, we have no evidence that any reasonable number of workingmen anywhere have personally signed these petitions; these men are not directly consulted in any manner, but certain leading men undertake to speak for them.

Sir, we had before a special committee of this House a petition purporting to represent the views of seventy thousand Knights of Labor in favor of the Bland dollar, of making it the currency of the country. But, sir, it is now a matter of public notoriety, for it has been reported in the public press, that the general secretary of the order, Mr. Turner, being examined upon the subject, testified that the order as an order was not exerting a political influence upon the question; that if any assembly had acted on the subject, it acted merely for itself. On tracing the matter further, it was evident that upon these petitions appeared merely the names of different local organizations, those names having been put upon the papers by officers or small numbers of men who are assumed to represent the great mass of the laboring men.

And, sir, only a day or two ago Mr. Powderly, seeing the use attempted to be made of the organization of which he is the honorable head, acting upon his own judgment, as I believe, without being called upon by any one, repudiated in a manly way this improper use of the name of the order.

We see in the public press another illustration of the manner in which these things are gotten up. In the Evening Star of this city recently appeared a telegram from Cleveland, Ohio, dated May 28, stating that—

Messrs. Edwin C. Dodge and George M. Sterne, of Chicago, are in the city trying to induce the Knights of Labor to take some favorable action on the oleomargarine and butterine bill now pending in Congress.

Sir, these men are known to be the agents of Armour & Co., representing undoubtedly the imitation-butter manufacturers of the country, those men who, according to a careful computation, are now making from $24,000,000 to $34,000,000 annually off of the consumers of the country; and while carrying this amount of money to their safety vaults they turn round and pretend to be groaning and weeping for the poor laboring men. While appropriating to themselves from $24,000,000 to $34,000,000 a year, they stand before the country claiming that they are concerned for the welfare of the poor laboring men whose name they belie and whose intelligence, by putting these petitions upon them, they would disgrace.

It has been said here that our action upon this legislation may affect the membership of the next House, and may involve the success or failure of some gentlemen in their aspirations for re-election, and the last speaker [Mr. TILLMAN] has repeated the suggestion. Sir, I submit that such motives should not influence members in their action here; but I will say that there are men here to-day opposing this bill who within ninety days will be making a diligent "tin-peddler" canvass through their districts, going from house to house, seeking to appease the anger of the blessed old women of their districts (incensed by this unreasonable opposition to honest dairy products), and begging to be allowed to come back here and attempt to regain a popularity which at home they have properly lost. [Applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I rise simply for the purpose of having read an act passed by the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania on the 21st of May, 1885. I desire this act read, because, my State having protected itself by passing a law on this subject, I design voting against this bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act for the protection of the public health, and to prevent adulteration of dairy products and fraud in the sale thereof.

SEC. 1. Be it enacted, &c., That no person, firm, or corporate body shall manufacture out of any oleaginous substance, or any compound of the same, other than that produced from unadulterated milk or of cream from the same, any article designed to take the place of butter or cheese produced from pure unadulterated milk or cream from the same, or of any imitation or adulterated butter or cheese, nor shall sell or offer for sale, or have in his, her, or their possession with intent to sell the same as an article of food.

SEC. 2. Every sale of such article or substance which is prohibited by the first section of this act, made after this act shall take effect, is hereby declared to be unlawful and void, and no action shall be maintained in any of the courts of this State to recover upon any contract for the sale of any such article or substance.

SEC. 3. Every person, company, firm, or corporate body, who shall manufacture, sell, or offer or expose for sale, or have in his, her, or their possession, with intent to sell, any substance, the manufacture and sale of which is prohibited by the first section of this act shall for every such offense forfeit and pay the sum of $100, which shall be recoverable with costs by any person suing in the name of the Commonwealth as debts of like amount are by law recoverable, one-half of which sum when so recovered shall be paid to the proper county treasurer for the use of the county in which suit is brought, and the other half to the person or persons at whose instance such a suit shall or may be commenced and prosecuted to recovery.

SEC. 4. Every person who violates the provisions of the first section of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and, upon conviction, shall be punished by a fine of not less than one hundred dollars nor more than three hundred, or by imprisonment in the county jail for not less than ten nor more than thirty days, or both such fine and imprisonment for the first offense, and by imprisonment for one year for every subsequent offense.

SEC. 5. It shall be the duty of the constables of the several cities, boroughs, wards, and townships of this Commonwealth to make quarterly reports under oath to the courts of quarter sessions, of all violations of any of the provisions of this act which may come or be brought to their notice, and it shall be the duty of the judges of the said courts to see that the said returns are made regularly and faithfully.

SEC. 6. This act shall take effect on the 1st day of July, 1885.

SEC. 7. All acts or parts of acts inconsistent with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Approved May 21, 1885.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I wish to state, Mr. Chairman, that that act has been carried out to the letter in several of the counties adjoining the city of Philadelphia, and that farther west there have been suits and prosecutions against those engaged in the sale of this article or in its manufacture. In other words, the law which was read by the Clerk has thus far been strictly carried out.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will regard all formal amendments as having been withdrawn.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I had hoped it would not be necessary for me to speak again on this bill, but I can not permit the assertion of the distinguished gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], that oleomargarine is better and more wholesome food than the best butter produced in any Jersey or Alderny dairy in the country, to pass without dissenting therefrom and expressing some opinion as to his taste. [Laughter.] He insists that this is one of the many instances in which art has triumphed over nature. I grant there are some instances in which art seems to have decidedly the advantage as shown by a look into the window of Bell's gallery, where the photographs of the gentleman and myself are exhibited. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. TILLMAN. Yours is there, but not mine.

Mr. ALLEN, of Mississippi. But, Mr. Chairman, I deny that this is true of any likeness or imitation of good butter. I know, sir, that what is good is often a matter of taste; that taste sometimes depends on how a person is raised. For my part, I think it must be a vitiated taste that would prefer oleomargarine to genuine, good butter. People, you know, can eat almost anything, and they often persuade themselves that what is cheap is wholesome. I remember, sir, an incident that occurred in my town about two years ago that illustrates this. A colored friend of mine, Dave Creighton, walked into a store in my town, and after passing the usual compliments with the merchant asked him, "How is politics now?" The merchant replied that politics were quiet, when Dave said: "I hear de Demicrats is nominated Mr. John Allen for Congress dis time." "Yes," said the merchant. "Well," said Dave, "dey is sho' got a good man dis time, and it won't take no ballot-box stuffing to elect him needer." "The cullored men will vote for him." Just then Dave, being hungry, noticed some small boxes of axle-greese put up in boxes round like cheese, and he said, "Boss, how you sells dem little cheeses." The merchant priced them at 10 cents. "Throw in the crackers," said the darkey. The merchant said yes, and a bargain was struck, and the darkey went out in front of the store and sat down on a goods box, took out his knife and his crackers, opened his box, and fixed for a good time. He did not seem to like the looks of his cheese at first, but he had paid for it and he had it to eat, and with his knife he put it on his crackers and ate till it was all gone, and then scraped the box out with his knife, wiped it on his cracker, and put it in his mouth. When the merchant, who had watched the proceeding, asked him how he liked his cheese, Dave said, "Well, sir, the crackers was mighty good and de cheese was cheap enough, and I speck it is mighty wholesome, but fo' God, boss, dat was de ransomest cheese I ever is eat yet." [Prolonged laughter and applause.]

Now, Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt but that if a proposition were pending here to prevent the sale of axle-grease for cheese the gentleman from South Carolina would deliver us a scientific lecture, and try to persuade us it was much better and more wholesome than cheese, and that it would be a great outrage on the laboring man to suppress the fraud. [Applause.]

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I move to strike out the last two words. I was unable to be here, Mr. Chairman, during Saturday's session. I was informed that the Indian bill would be considered on that day. The 30th of May is memorial day, and I was called to Ohio on that day to bear testimony on the occasion of the decoration of our soldiers' graves. On that day it was my good fortune to meet a great many farmers, a great many mechanics, a great many merchants who have to deal with oleomargarine in one way or another. I found the action of the House on the bill now under consideration was being carefully noted. I was at some pains to ascertain as far as I could the views entertained on the provisions of the bill. I shall refer to my interviews in a moment.

I learn that on Saturday the friends of this bill who favor the high rate of tax fixed in section 8, after four days' earnest discussion, discovered, instead of a high tax suggesting the extermination of the manufacture of oleomargarine, that under the provisions of this bill that industry is not liable to be taxed at all. I understand that is the construction which is now given it by my honorable friend from New York. I wish to say to the House that nobody discovered until after four days' discussion that under the provisions of this bill it was possible for oleomargarine to escape taxation. I certainly did not hear such intimation. The point of the excessive rate was distinctly discussed pro and con, and the idea that the article would not be taxed at all under the peculiar phraseology of section 2 was not mentioned.

Mr. STRUBLE. You are mistaken.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Possibly I am mistaken as to the point having been made, but I am sure I did not hear any such line of argument touching the operation of section 2 as was urged on Saturday. I am inclined to the opinion that it was only when after discussion gentlemen discovered it was not safe and defensible to inaugurate a new system of protection in this country—a system which destroys domestic as well as foreign competition by crushing one of the competitors by burdensome taxation, and when the unsafe ground upon which gentlemen stood became manifest and the dangerous innovation upon the well-considered and long-established system of protection which has obtained in this country became apparent, this new and revised construction was given to the bill.

I wish to say to the House, not that some gentlemen may not have entertained and expressed the view of the bill now insisted upon, but that I did not hear anything in all the discussion that indicated to my mind that any gentleman who favored the high tax either thought or desired that a single pound of oleomargarine, however and wherever manufactured, could or should escape a tax of 10 cents a pound. Certainly the debate proceeded on that understanding; and on reading the bill again I am unable to see anything in the language that would permit a pound to escape payment of the tax, and that without reference to the merit or demerit of the article. And it is the fact that the tax as fixed by the eighth section wages a war of extermination against the industry that compels me to protest. I favor a tax to regulate, not a tax to exterminate, regardless of the merits of the article manufactured.

As intimated a moment since, I had occasion within the last three days to talk with a great many farmers and others on this subject. I addressed a large assemblage of people on Sunday. Both before and after the meeting I talked with a great many of them about this matter——

A MEMBER. On Sunday!

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. Yes, on Sunday. I talked with a number of gentlemen, farmers and others, and not one of them, not one, pretended that the farmers' interests demanded anything at the hands of Congress except that these two industries should be separated and that butter should have a fair field unvexed by fraudulent competition. Nothing more was demanded and nothing less ought to be granted.

And, more than that, I will say to gentlemen and to the country, for the people understand perfectly the object and purport of this bill, that at 10 cents a pound, if this industry could continue to flourish as it does now when untaxed, it would yield to the Government eighteen or twenty millions of dollars annually, and the people—that is, the consumers of the country—will not agree that four or five millions of people who are the consumers and who purchase all they eat shall be compelled to pay that eighteen or twenty millions of dollars for the privilege of eating any particular article of domestic manufacture simply to protect a competing industry, both being domestic industries. They will not consent that this Congress shall increase the cost of an article of food that is used on every man's table 50 per cent. merely to aid a kindred and competing domestic enterprise.

In protecting against foreign competition there is manifest and palpable compensation to the producers and consumers of the country, but the protection which this bill proposes to this home industry by imposing a high tax on oleomargarine is nothing more nor less than compelling one class of our citizens who are consumers to pay so many dollars directly over into the pockets of another class who are producers, and that without any shade or trace of compensation as in the case of import duty on articles of foreign production.

Now, it has been said, Mr. Chairman, that my position in regard to this bill has not been understood. To gentlemen who say they can not understand my position on this bill, I wish to remark, in the language of the Roman maxim, "against stupidity the gods themselves are powerless." I have stated it fully heretofore and restate it now, that these industries should be torn apart and each compelled to stand before the country upon its own intrinsic merits; and I think it has been made plain. Certainly the honorable gentleman in charge of the bill admits that a merely nominal tax is enough for that—that is, to pay the cost of enforcing the law—the result of which would be the complete separation of the industries.

But if it can not be otherwise done, if we are still to eat we know not what, and it was impossible otherwise to accomplish the result, I would levy the tax as high as might be found necessary and would go as far as any one in that direction. My point is—and I restate it again and again so I may not be misrepresented nor misunderstood—to let every man who manufactures oleomargarine for sale and sells it put it upon the market, to be accepted or rejected on its own intrinsic merits and upon that exclusively, and to that end and for that purpose this bill has my support, but beyond that I will not go; for I am well assured that on no other theory or basis can we defend the interference with this domestic industry through the taxing power. No other incidental protection to the dairy industry can be successfully defended before the country.

The amendments proposed and promptly voted down by the champions of the high tax would seem to settle the question as to whether the tax is to destroy. Clearly that is the intention; it would be the inevitable result. And, sir, that proposition as embodied in the bill is without a precedent in the history of legislation in this country. I defy my friend from New York or any other gentleman here upon this floor to cite a precedent which can be produced for driving one domestic industry entirely from the field of competition, out of existence altogether, by overtaxation in order to bolster up and make more prosperous another competing domestic industry. You might just as well and on the same principle crush the manufacture of Bessemer steel because it competes with wrought iron.

Mr. LONG. Do you agree with the gentleman from Michigan in his interpretation of the legal effect of the bill?

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I do not know what it is.

Mr. LONG. You have just stated it.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. No; I do not. Clearly this bill taxes all oleomargarine, and, as I have stated, it was so understood for the first few days of the debate. I met no man in the marts of the country that believed otherwise, and so far as I observed every speaker who addressed the House upon it for the first few days took that ground.

That was the whole tenor of the discussion, and was the accepted interpretation so far as my information goes. Gentlemen may have held different views, but I did not hear them expressed; and for myself I will vote for no measure which puts these industries of the country in any other position than each fairly and squarely upon its own basis, each one for itself. I shall never vote for a measure that compels my constituents to pay 10 cents per pound for a substitute for butter, if they want to buy it knowing what it is, as a mere bounty to those who produce butter.

It is a principle that I can never sustain by any vote of mine. It is anti-American, it is undemocratic and unrepublican, and can not be justified on any principle whatever consistent with what is known and recognized as the protective or tariff system of the country. I need hardly say to my Republican friends that our protective system must be maintained, if at all, as a system. And that system requires all our domestic industries to stand together, each finding its strength and prosperity in the unity, strength, and prosperity of all. It in no wise deals with the competition which springs up between domestic industries, except possibly for the avowed purpose of this bill, which looks merely to the prevention and punishment of fraudulent competition, which is accomplished as an incident to raising revenue. Those who cry out that the farmer is in no wise protected under our system have not studied the question. Our system is his source of prosperity.

Mr. FARQUHAR rose.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I move that the tenth section of the bill, which has been read and no amendment offered, be allowed to stand.

The CHAIRMAN. That will not require a motion, and if there be no amendment to the section then the Clerk will read the next section. The tenth section as read will stand, unless stricken out by a vote of the committee.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I desire, Mr. Chairman, to renew the motion of the gentleman from Ohio, and rose for that purpose, understanding that the Chair had promised to recognize me.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the committee do now rise.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York is making a request, as the Chair understands.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I simply wish to renew the motion of the gentleman from Ohio. If I can have only one or two minutes' explanation in regard to the remarks of the gentleman from New York——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will submit the request of the gentleman from New York to the committee as soon as order is restored upon the floor.

Mr. FARQUHAR. My request was simply to be permitted to make a few remarks by consent of the committee in reply to the gentleman from New York, who I think has not taken the right view in respect to the papers presented and read by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN]. I wish to explain the means of bringing such papers before this body.

Mr. HATCH. If I can get unanimous consent of the committee that all debate upon this section may be closed in five minutes, I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri, that the debate on this section shall be closed in five minutes, that time to be yielded to the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Mr. Chairman, I am very sorry that my colleague from the State of New York should try to break the force of this petition or memorial presented in the shape of resolutions by the workingmen of Pittsburgh through the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN]. They are presented in the proper form by organized assemblies, especially by the trades assemblies of that city. I wish to state to the committee that when he says they had no authority more than as any three, or five, or ten, or fifteen men he is entirely mistaken in the scope of the authority of an organized trades assembly.

The assemblies are composed of delegates from every trades association in their districts. They may have fifteen or forty or sixty members. These members come there with delegated authority from their own trades unions, from their own local assemblies, and they are given power as delegates to meet all current questions. When they have discussed these questions, as they do in these assemblies—and I am sorry to say, Mr. Chairman, it has been the custom the last four or five years, on account of the long hours of labor, to drive these assemblies into Sunday, and they are held Sundays—after proper discussion the delegates have the power in their hands to give voice to the sentiments of every assembly that they represent.

Mr. PARKER. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. PARKER. I ask the gentleman if he has any knowledge or information that the assemblies where the men meet themselves gave authority to the superior assembly to address Congress upon oleomargarine?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I tell the gentleman from New York that no officer of a trades assembly in America would dare send forth to this House of Representatives an expression of opinion from his assembly, whether a trades union or whether Knights of Labor, that was a falsehood. I have never known a case in the history of any assembly where they have taken upon themselves to formulate opinions that were not held in common by the whole brotherhood that were in the assembly.

Mr. PARKER. Again I ask the gentleman to answer my question. It is: Whether he has any knowledge or information that the superior assembly communicating with Congress had authority from any inferior lodge to address Congress on the subject of oleomargarine?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I have just informed the gentleman and the committee that I affirm on this floor that they had all the authority; and if they represent seventy thousand men, they voiced the sentiments of seventy thousand men; and until that authority is revoked in the lower assemblies the expression of the superior assembly stands as the voice of these workingmen of Pittsburgh.

A MEMBER. Is the assembly entitled to speak the opinions of the workingmen?

Mr. FARQUHAR. It is clothed with full power to speak their opinions.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Can the gentleman from New York state that this particular question now under debate, the taxing of oleomargarine, has been submitted to or voted upon by every individual assembly represented in the general assembly?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman from Michigan has as much knowledge on that question as I have. I have no right to go back on this official document, nor has the gentleman from New York.

Mr. CUTCHEON. Then you mean this is simply within their general scope and power?

Mr. FARQUHAR. Yes, sir.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do you believe that on this question the officers of this association represent the sentiments of the men in the primary assemblies?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I did not say it was the officers who expressed these views. The officers signed the papers merely. They are voted upon by the delegates, and the voice of the delegates the officers must express in the paper which they sign.

Mr. NEGLEY. I have here the minutes with the seal of the association and the signatures of the officers.

Mr. BOUTELLE. I will ask the gentleman from New York is it not a fact within his own knowledge that petitions have been repeatedly received here purporting to come from Knights of Labor favoring or opposing certain legislation which when they have had their attention called to the real merits of the legislation they have withdrawn?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The gentleman asks if I know that of my own knowledge. I answer, no.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Then I inform the gentleman that has been repeatedly the fact during this session.

Mr. MILLS. This communication speaks by its seal.

Mr. HISCOCK. I ask the gentleman do the Knights of Labor contemplate as a body in their corporate capacity attempting to influence legislation upon a fraud in food products of this kind?

Mr. FARQUHAR. I will say to the gentleman this is not from the Knights of Labor at all. This is from the trades assembly of Western Pennsylvania.

Mr. HISCOCK. Do you believe it represents the sentiments of that association?

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is a matter of opinion. I think that just now petitions and remonstrances of this character are somewhat premature. And why do I say that? Because the effect of the operation of this bill has not yet been felt. But they attempt to ward the stroke. Let butter go up 5, 8, or 10 cents a pound within six months and your petition-box will not be large enough to hold the remonstrances that will be coming in against this legislation.

Mr. HISCOCK. I believe every laboring man would be willing to have butter high-priced rather than to have these unwholesome imitations of butter in the market.

Mr. FARQUHAR. All I desired when I took the floor was merely to break the force of the argument against this remonstrance—an argument which has no point when that remonstrance bears the seal of the association and is signed by its officers.

Mr. PARKER. And the gentleman has stated no fact that breaks the force of that argument.

The Clerk read section 11, as follows:

SEC. 11. That every person who purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped according to law, shall be liable to a penalty of $50 for each such offense.

Mr. WHEELER. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Provided, That no person who was reported by the tenth census as unable to read shall be fined or imprisoned for violating the provisions of sections 6, 11, 12, or 13 of this act until one year after the passage of the bill now pending in Congress to aid in the support of common schools.

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that that amendment has been already acted upon.

Mr. WHEELER. It was ruled out when offered to the sixth section. I now offer it to the eleventh.

Mr. HAMMOND. I make the further point of order against the amendment that it alludes to the twelfth and thirteenth sections and is not in order till those sections are read.

Mr. Chairman, without regard to the merits of the proposition——

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw the amendment, and will introduce it at the end of the thirteenth section.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I move to insert in the first line of section 11, after the word "who," the word "knowingly;" so that it will read "that every person who knowingly purchases or receives for sale," &c.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, have we passed the tenth section?

The CHAIRMAN. The tenth section is passed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I had some amendments that I wanted to offer to that section.

The CHAIRMAN. The section is now passed, and the gentleman can not return to it except by unanimous consent.

The amendment offered by Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] in charge of this bill explain exactly what this eleventh section means. It says that "every person who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine," &c. I wish to know if that means that the wholesale dealer who buys this article of the manufacturer and keeps it for sale is the one who is to be fined, or does the section include every person who goes to the retail dealer and buys a pound of it?

Mr. HATCH. The section is so plain that I do not think anything I can say will make it any plainer. The provision of the section is that "every person who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine, which has not been branded according to law shall be liable to a penalty of $50 for each such offense."

Mr. DUNHAM. Then the workingman who goes to a retail dealer and purchases a pound of this article, perhaps under the name of "butter," is not subject to the fine.

Mr. HATCH. That is not covered by the eleventh section at all. That section applies only to those who purchase or receive the article for sale again.

Mr. DUNHAM. People who buy it or receive it for the purpose of selling it to somebody else?

Mr. HATCH. Yes.

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I suppose the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] desires to have the word "knowingly" qualify the branding. Of course, if I purchase anything I knowingly purchase it, and if I receive anything for sale I knowingly receive it for sale; but the point the gentleman wishes to make, I suppose, is, that the man who shall purchase or receive oleomargarine for sale knowing that the same has not been properly branded shall be subject to the penalty.

Mr. HATCH. That is unquestionably the purpose of the amendment.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the eleventh section. I do so because I think that we go to the very verge of propriety by the other sections of the bill, even if this be left out. I suppose there are few men here who have not seen something of the troubles and hardships that have arisen in the administration of our internal-revenue laws relative to the sale of spirits. The effect has been to drag citizens to attend courts at points far distant from their homes, irrespective of the season of the year, of their home obligations, of the condition of their crops, or of the condition of their families or their purses. There is no time when Federal courts having cognizance of such cases are in session that you can not see these unfortunates hanging around the court-rooms, and there are instances where parties have taken a single barrel of whisky, started out through the country, and sold it by the gill, the pint, or the quart, as they found people to buy it, and then those who were with them in the transaction have gone around and arrested every man who had bought it and dragged him off before a Federal court.

It is bad enough to have such things done in the whisky traffic, but I say to this House that no man can foresee the extent of the hardships that will follow from turning your deputy marshals loose to pry into the homes of the people and into their pantries; to smell around trying to discover the odor and the age of their butter. I think this section should by struck out, leaving the provision that he who first makes the article and first puts it upon sale in violation of law shall be the guilty party and shall bear the penalty.

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. McMILLIN; and it was rejected—ayes 43, noes 90.

Mr. O'HARA. No quorum.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] and the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 59, noes 106.

So the motion of Mr. McMILLIN to strike out the section was rejected.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by striking out the word "fifty," in the third line of this section, and inserting the word "ten."

Mr. HATCH. I make the point of order that this amendment is not in order.

Mr. DUNHAM. Why not?

Mr. HATCH. Because the Committee of the Whole has just refused to strike out the section.

Mr. DUNHAM. I accept the gentleman's suggestion, and withdraw my motion.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I move to amend by inserting after the word "purchases," in the first line of the section, the words "for resale."

Mr. HISCOCK. I make the point of order that no amendment to this section is now in order, the Committee of the Whole having just rejected a motion to strike out the section.

The CHAIRMAN. According to the ordinary parliamentary rule, the point made by the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] would be correct; but the attention of the Chair has been directed to a special rule of the House which changes on this subject the ordinary parliamentary rule.

Mr. PETTIBONE. My amendment is to insert after the word "purchases" the words "for resale;" so that the section will read:

That any person who purchases for resale or receives for sale any oleomargarine, &c.

I will state my reason for offering this amendment. The question has been asked whether by this section as it now stands a poor man purchasing a single pound of oleomargarine, not for sale but for his own use, will be liable to the penalty prescribed in the section. The man who purchases for the purpose of selling again——

Mr. HATCH. Will the gentleman listen to me one moment?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Yes, sir.

Mr. HATCH. So far as I am concerned, I see no objection to the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I am glad to hear the gentleman is willing to assent to it. It simply removes an ambiguity; that is all. I hope we may have a vote upon it. What we desire to accomplish by this section is to prohibit the buying of oleomargarine to be resold as honest butter.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. The proper construction of the language as it now stands in the section is that "every person who purchases for sale or receives for sale," &c.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I wish to avoid the ambiguity of the present language.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. What is the difference between the language of the section and the gentleman's amendment?

Mr. PETTIBONE. Under the language of the section as it now stands a man who has bought one pound or ten pounds of oleomargarine for home consumption may possibly be arraigned for having purchased it, though he did not buy for the purpose of selling again.

Mr. BOUTELLE. The language is "purchases or receives for sale."

Mr. PETTIBONE. Possibly the ambiguity might be removed by the insertion of a comma; but if the words "for resale" be inserted after the word "purchases" there can be no possible doubt as to the meaning.

The question being taken on the amendment of Mr. PETTIBONE, it was not agreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. If amendments are in order, I move to amend by striking out "50," in line 3 of this section, and inserting "10;" so as to make the language read "shall be liable to a penalty of $10 for each such offense." It seems to me improbable that any person would be guilty of this offense, and if it should be committed $10 fine is enough. It is unnecessary that $50 should be collected and put into the Treasury. [Cries of "Vote!" "Vote!"]

Mr. EVANS. Mr. Chairman, so much has been said upon the bill under consideration, and so little left to say, that I shall not occupy the time of the committee very long in what I have to present. I am aware that it will be next to an impossibility to offer anything new on the question.

The great State of Pennsylvania, which I have the honor in part to represent, is largely interested in this bill, notwithstanding we have a State law. Nearly if not quite 80,000,000 pounds of butter are produced annually within her borders, and the district which I individually represent is especially noted for its fine quality of butter; but my people are largely interested in both agriculture and manufactures; they regard their interests as mutual, and I am sure there is no desire on the part of either one to take advantage of the other.

During the commercial and financial depression of the last decade we have not been inflicted, like many other sections, with riots and strikes, but all have quietly and peaceably borne their share of the depression in the hope that the lawmakers of the country would find some way or would enact some legislation that would stimulate and promote the growth and prosperity of the country. My people are firm believers in the system of protection to American industry. They believe in protection to the farmer as well as to the manufacturer, knowing that whatever benefits the one must benefit the other. If the manufacturer receives a fair price for his commodities he can afford to pay his skilled workmen remunerative wages, and they in turn, together with the manufacturer, can pay the farmer fair prices for his productions. But neither the manufacturer nor the workingman is willing to be cheated and defrauded by a counterfeit product, for which he has to pay the price of the genuine article.

In many instances the workingman is more particular as to what he eats than the epicure, and I venture to say, if he has his choice between oleomargarine and pure butter, that ninety-nine times out of one hundred he would take the butter; to say that oleomargarine is the poor man's food is a dishonest and false assertion. If it is to be manufactured and sold for the benefit of the poor man alone, I venture to say it would have a poor market. Who do they mean when they speak of the poor man? There is not one in a thousand so poor but what he can afford to buy genuine butter instead of oleomargarine, especially when the counterfeit is sold to him for the genuine. Oleomargarine is manufactured for a very much larger market than the poor man can afford. It is manufactured for the manufacturer, the mechanic, for all classes of wage-workers, the professor in the arts and sciences, for the high as well as the low, and for the rich as well as the poor. Nearly sixty millions of people are included in this number; they compose the market.

But how much, may I ask, of these obnoxious compounds known as oleomargarine and butterine would all these people consume if they were sold for what they really are? Instead of 200,000,000 pounds, which is said to be the product of the last year, I venture to assert that not one million pounds would be manufactured, unless it is found to be superior to lard and tallow for cooking purposes, which of course it can not be. If my predictions are true, then those gentlemen on this floor who have grave fears of a surplus revenue produced by taxing it may rest in peace; even 10 cents per pound would not more than pay necessary expenses in enforcing the law. But we are confronted with the charge that we propose to tax one industry out of existence for the benefit of another. I do not so understand it. The chairman of the Committee on Agriculture has clearly and fully explained the provisions of the bill as given in the second section, as follows:

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

The chairman says:

The last two lines of this section apply to and interpret each and every single word in the section. According to the interpretation of that section as interpreted not only by the Commissioner of Agriculture but by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who submitted it to the law officer of that Department who has revised every single word and comma in it, it means this and nothing but this: That the mixture of any two or more of these compounds into a substance to be colored and flavored and packed and sold as butter, is to be taxed, under this bill, 10 cents a pound. But if lard and cotton-seed oil are mixed together, if any two or more of these substances are mixed, placed on the market and sold for what they are, in good faith and in fact, and not colored and flavored as an imitation and fraud upon butter, they are not liable to the tax under this section, and no reasonable construction of that kind can be placed on that section, or the bill as an entirety.

It is clear to my mind that this bill does not tax the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine if it is not colored, flavored, or mixed with butter and made to imitate butter. The object of this bill is to deprive it of its fraudulent character, to compel it to stand on its own merits. If the manufacturers of it are willing to do this they will be free from license and taxes, and the retail dealers likewise will be free from license to sell to all who may wish to purchase it. Therefore the charge that we are taxing one industry to its death for the benefit of another is not true. We are only taxing a fraud, a counterfeit, not an honest industry, and this we are doing not alone in the interest of the farmer or the dairy, but to protect all of us who are consumers from imposition and fraud which is daily and hourly being practiced upon us by unscrupulous manufacturers and dealers in the article.

Now, Mr. Chairman, we are told by the expounders of the Constitution in this House that this bill, if enacted into a law would be unconstitutional. Comic Blackstone says:

It is well enough for every man to know a little law; but perhaps the less he knows the better.

I have sometimes thought that if some of the members of this House knew a little less law, and would depend more upon good, sound, practical common sense and business principles, we would get along more rapidly than we do, with a better prospect than we now have of getting away from here before the middle of August. I am not a lawyer, and I think I can indorse the remark of Brother PRICE, "That I am rather glad that I am not," especially if its study should enable me to construe the law when so desired as to hold a false position, and thereby defeat the ends of justice.

I, however, have a high regard for an honest lawyer, and lest I might be misunderstood I freely admit that there are many of them in the profession; but when they endeavor to construe the Constitution in such a way as to make it say that such a bill as we propose to pass and now under consideration is unconstitutional, I am led to believe that they do not want to understand either the provisions of the bill or the Constitution. The Constitution was intended to protect the rights of the citizen, and was never intended to protect fraud of any kind. The very first article of the Constitution defines the powers and duties of Congress. Section 8 says:

Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises, to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare of the United States.

The power therefore is clearly expressed in this section.

Not being educated in the law, I presume it would be regarded as presumptuous on my part to endeavor to give an opinion as to the constitutionality of this bill. I desire, however, to quote a few passages from Chief-Justice Story on the Constitution, in reference to the power of Congress to lay taxes. Judging the argument of the Chief-Justice from a layman's standpoint, I should say that he proves conclusively and beyond all doubt that Congress has full power to select the subjects of taxation, and that it may tax for other purposes beside revenue.

On page 677 he says:

The very point is whether it is restricted to purposes of revenue.

The language of the Constitution is, "Congress shall have power to lay and collect taxes, duties, imposts, and excises." If the clause had stopped here and remained in this absolute form, as it was, in fact, when reported in the first draught in the convention, there could not have been the slightest doubt on the subject.

The absolute power to lay taxes includes the power in every form in which it may be used, and for every purpose to which the Legislature may choose to apply it. This results from the very nature of such an unrestricted power. A fortiori it might be applied by Congress to purposes for which nations have been accustomed to apply to it.

Now, nothing is more clear, from the history of commercial nations, than the fact that the taxing power is often, very often, applied for other purposes than revenue. It is often applied as a regulation of Congress. It is often applied as a virtual prohibition upon the importation of particulor articles, for the encouragement and protection of domestic products and industry, for the support of agriculture, commerce, and manufactures; for retaliation upon foreign monopolies and injurious restrictions, for mere purposes of state policy and domestic economy; sometimes to banish a noxious article of consumption, sometimes as a bounty upon an infant manufacture or agricultural product, sometimes as a temporary restraint of trade, sometimes as a suppression of particular employments, sometimes as a prerogative power to destroy competition and secure a monopoly to the Government.

If, then, the power to lay taxes, being general, may embrace, and in the practice of nations does embrace, all these objects, either separately or in combination, upon what foundation does the argument rest which assumes one object only to the exclusion of all the rest; which insists, in effect, that because revenue may be one object, therefore it is the sole object of the power; which assumes its own construction to be correct because it suits its own theory and denies the same right to others entertaining a different theory?

If the power is general in its terms, is it not an abuse of all fair reasoning to insist that it is particular; to desert the import of the language and to substitute other and different language?

Is this allowable in regard to any instrument? Is it allowable in an especial manner as to constitutions of government, growing out of the rights, duties, and exigencies of nations, and looking to an infinite variety of circumstances which may require very different applications of a given power?

In the next place, then, is the power to lay taxes given by the Constitution a general power or is it a limited power?

If a limited power, to what objects is it limited by the terms of the Constitution?

Upon this subject, as has been already stated, three different opinions appear to have been held by statesmen of no common sagacity and ability. The first is that the power is unlimited, and that the subsequent clause, "to pay the debts and provide for the common defense and general welfare," is a substantive, independent power.

In the view of those who maintain this opinion, the power, being general, can not with any consistency be restrained to purposes of revenue.

The next is, that the power is restrained by the subsequent clause, so that it is a power to lay taxes in order to pay debts, and to provide for the common defense and general welfare. Is raising revenue the only proper mode to provide for the common defense and general welfare? May not the general welfare, in the judgment of Congress, be in given circumstances as well provided for, nay, better provided for, by prohibitory duties, or by encouragements to domestic industry of all sorts? If a tax of one sort, as on tonnage of foreign vessels, will aid commerce, and a tax on foreign raw materials will aid agriculture, and a tax on imported fabrics will aid domestic manufactures, and so promote the general welfare, may they not be all constitutionally united by Congress in a law for this purpose? If Congress can unite them all, may they not sustain them severally in separate laws? Is a tax to aid manufactures or agriculture or commerce necessarily, or even naturally, against the general welfare or the common defense? Who is going to decide upon such a point? Congress, to whom the authority is given to exercise the power, or any other body, State or national, which may choose to assume it?

Besides, if a particular act of Congress, not for revenue, should be deemed an excess of the powers, does it follow that all other acts are so? If the common defense or general welfare can be promoted by laying taxes in any other manner than for revenue, who is at liberty to say that Congress can not constitutionally exercise the power for such a purpose? No one has a right to say that the common defense and general welfare can never be promoted by laying taxes except for revenue. No one has ever yet been bold enough to assert such a proposition.

Different men have entertained opposite opinions on subjects of this nature. It is a matter of theory and speculation, of political economy and national policy, and not a matter of power. It may be wise or unwise to lay taxes, except for revenue; but the wisdom or inexpediency of a measure is no test of its constitutionality.

Those, therefore, who hold the opinion above stated must unavoidably maintain that the power to lay taxes is not confined to revenue, but extends to all cases where it is proper to be used for the common defense and general welfare.

It is contended by some that this bill, if enacted into a law, will raise a large amount of revenue. It can not be regarded as unconstitutional on that account, and the Government has not arrived at that stage of prosperity that it can live without revenue. I do not believe that the tax of 10 cents per pound would raise much revenue, but if it should there are many ways in which it could be used. Every year the expenses of the Government are increasing, notwithstanding the promises of the Democratic party that this should be an administration of "retrenchment, economy, and reform."

The Secretary of the Treasury, in his report of June 30, informs us that there will be a deficit for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, of not less than $24,000,000. Nevertheless it is claimed by the opponents of this bill that we do not need the additional revenue it will raise. Let me say to those gentlemen that we are paying in pensions alone $80,000,000 annually, that we are appropriating yearly millions for the Army and Navy with a prospect of still larger appropriations, and that we have a national debt of not less than $1,275,000,000 and an interest charge of some $48,000,000 annually.

There need be no fears that we shall not be able to use all the revenue that the tax of 10 cents per pound will produce. Indeed our fears may justly be on the other side. How will the Government raise the $24,000,000 deficit? And in this estimate is not included the increased pensions to widows and orphans of the Union soldiers, which will probably increase the amount five or six millions more. It really looks as though something would have to be taxed to meet the increased expenses of the Government, and if so there are but two ways to accomplish it, either by increased duties on imports or by internal revenue. It is evident that the friends of free trade will not allow us to raise it by increased duties on imports; we shall therefore have to raise it by internal revenue. Where then can we levy this tax to do the least harm?

Surely it can do no harm, but on the contrary much good, to put it upon that which is manufactured and sold in defiance of State laws, and is a fraud and a counterfeit. I believe a tax of 5 cents per pound would raise more revenue than 10 cents, but I am not one of those who want it taxed for revenue alone. I would, if it is constitutional, favor a prohibitory tax on oleomargarine and its compounds, and on all other counterfeits and adulterations of food intended to defraud, cheat, and deceive the people and destroy honest industries.

Mr. Chairman, it can not be claimed that a fraud promotes the public welfare; on the contrary, it is destructive of the public good and the morals of the people; therefore it is always a proper subject of legislation, and if necessary to arrest and prevent fraud and protect the public welfare, the Congress of the United States certainly has the legal power to do it either by taxation or otherwise, independent of the power to tax for revenue purposes. The manufacturers of oleomargarine and its associates claim that they are healthful compounds. It is possible that some of them may be; but who can tell the healthful from the unhealthful—the good from the bad? We are told there are fifty-eight different ways to manufacture them patented, and sixty different articles enter into the manufacture of oleomargarine, butterine, neutral, &c. The list has been given by several members who have addressed the committee; but in my judgment it can not be published too often; the people should know what poisonous articles enter into their composition.

The list taken from the Patent-Office is as follows: Nitric acid, commonly known as aqua-fortis, acetate of lead, better known as sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, capric acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame or benne, turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, bromo-chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda, and sea salt. It has often been remarked in a jocular way that people sometimes make apothecary shops of their stomachs. I think it might be truthfully and seriously claimed, after reading this list, that he who eats oleomargarine surely gets about all the ingredients of a well-regulated apothecary shop into his stomach. It is scarcely necessary for me to say that I have some knowledge of materia medica and chemistry, and that some of the ingredients mentioned in the list are deadly poisons, even in what might be termed infinitesimal doses.

It is not contended that all these ingredients enter into a single process of the manufacture of these different compounds; but all of them seem to be regarded as necessary or important by the different patentees in one combination or another. The reports of chemists differ greatly as to the unhealthfulness of oleomargarine, butterine, neutral, &c., and this arises no doubt from the different samples furnished and the knowledge or the want of knowledge of microscopy, of materia medica, of biology, and all germ life, in addition to a mere knowledge of chemistry, and toxicology. It is shown by the analysis of the professor of the State University of Minnesota that the three specimens examined by him contained a variety of living organisms and spores ready to germinate. "Some of it," he says, "teemed with life and yielded molds and bacteria that would have gladdened the heart of the student of biology."

The microscope revealed the fact that the greatest variety of life existed in the inner portion of these samples and that the other portions contained the greatest quantity of active bacteria." Many of the protozoa pass into an encysted stage and lie dormant until the environment is again favorable." He further says: "It can not be doubted that the person who eats so promiscuous and so lively a mixture as the butterine examined is running great risk. Spores and seeds of the lower organisms increase the danger to parasitism; and spores now harmless may become inimical to the health and happiness of countless millions." Other experts and professors have testified that they regarded oleomargarine and like compounds unwholesome as food products. Professor Clark, of Albany, N. Y., says of oleomargarine:

That it is unwholesome to health for four reasons—first, because it is indigestible; second, because it is insoluble when made from animal fats; third, that it is liable to carry the germs of disease into the human system; and fourth, that in the eagerness of manufacturers to produce the spurious compounds cheaply they are tempted to use ingredients which are detrimental to the health of the consumer.

Numerous other testimonies of a like character might be given.

Then, on the other side, we have the testimony of chemists and experts, who say that oleomargarine is a healthy product, and this, I think, to a certain extent may be true when it is carefully made of pure fats, but the difficulty is to know when it is so made. It can not, however, be regarded as healthful as pure butter, for the reason that the animal fats, independent of the chemicals used in its manufacture, are more difficult of digestion on account of their greater insolubility. Believing as we do that much of it is impure and deleterious to health, that it is a fraud practiced upon the people, and that we have the constitutional right to tax it for revenue, if for no other purpose, why should this bill not be passed?

Mr. Chairman, we are told by the State-rights people on this floor that we should leave the matter to the States. I think, if I am correctly informed, some twenty States of the Union have passed laws to regulate its manufacture and sale; but in nearly every instance they have been failures, and now these very States are appealing to Congress to pass a law placing it under the supervision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, who is at the head of an organized force competent to carry out and enforce the law. Some States have passed no laws; others have; but they are not uniform, and it is well known that the States have no power to regulate interstate commerce, therefore there should be concurrent jurisdiction over this matter just as there is in regard to whisky and tobacco. Agriculture is regarded as the basis of our wealth as a nation; but in order for it to be prosperous it must be a diversified industry. The constant cropping by the raising of the cereals rapidly exhausts the soil, and the means of compensation is found only by returning to it that which you have abstracted from it.

In no way can we so well comply with this great law of compensation in farming as by the herd of the dairyman. Every practical farmer knows that the more he feeds to his stock the more fertile his farm becomes. The greater the consumption of his crops on the farm the richer his land will be. Now, in order to do this he must have a dairy or some other live stock. Heretofore the dairy interest has paid better than any other, but since the introduction of imitation butter, which the people do not want if they know it, the production of butter has decreased and the profits greatly diminished.

The number of milch cows have decreased some 25 to 30 per cent., but there are still invested about $700,000,000 in milch cows; their value, however, has been decreased over $30,000,000 within the last year, and since the introduction of imitation butter the total loss is estimated at $150,000,000. Three hundred thousand cows are reported to have been slaughtered for beef during the past year in the city of Chicago alone.

In consequence of this fraud the governments of Europe have passed laws prejudicial to our dairy products. The result has been a steady falling off in our exportation of genuine butter. In 1881 we exported $22,636,272 worth, in 1885 $14,086,055, a falling off of nearly $9,000,000, whereas if it had not been for the distrust and these stringent laws the amount instead of being decreased would probably have been more than doubled.

In conclusion, let me say, Mr. Chairman, that I have not only been a close observer of the farmers' interests, but I have been personally interested in farming for many years. I live perhaps in as good an agricultural district as there is in the State of Pennsylvania, contiguous to the second largest market in the United States, Philadelphia, and yet with all the advantages I do not believe there is one farmer in my district who could pay 5 per cent. interest on his farm and his personal property, pay his labor and his taxes, and at the end of the year's hard labor for himself and family have $500 left. I am sure if there is one who could do it there are hundreds who are not able to save a single cent, and no farmer in my district who has good judgment would think of buying a farm without some means of his own, for he knows full well that he could not pay for it, and in all probability in less than ten years would be sold out by the sheriff. He runs very much less risk and it pays him better to rent; but the owner of the farm, after keeping up the necessary expenses, gets but a poor interest on his investment.

Where, then, may I ask the members of this House, the great majority of whom are not farmers, is the money in farming? Who is there here who would be willing to exchange his profession and its emoluments with the farmer for his occupation of long days of weary toil and its scanty returns? Who is here that is willing to rob him of the fruits of his honest toil and destroy one of his most profitable and most important industries—important indeed when we come to think of it? The annual product of butter produced in the United States, as given by the Statistician, is over 1,000,000,000 pounds, estimated to be worth $250,000,000, every pound of which represents hard-earned and scanty paid labor compared to the manufacture of its bogus competitor, oleomargarine, which it is said costs less than 8 cents per pound to manufacture. It is estimated that the profit on the last year's product, 200,000,000 pounds, was not less than $30,000,000, or about 200 per cent.

Think for a moment. They are now manufacturing about one-fifth as much as the product of genuine butter. If they succeed in driving and starving out the dairy interest, and should manufacture the same amount, 1,000,000,000 pounds, their profits would be not less than $150,000,000 annually; and yet these are the men who have appeared before the Agricultural Committee in behalf of the poor laboring man of the country, in order that he may not be compelled to pay extravagant prices for his butter, or butterine—a fraud in name, as well as in substance; and they who manufacture this vile stuff to cheat and defraud the poor man as well as the rich—would "steal the livery of heaven to serve the devil in."

The question now before this House is, shall this great interest in which seven million people are directly interested be destroyed? Will you say to the agriculturist that you prefer to protect the manufacture of a counterfeit article rather than an honest, legitimate industry? If you do, then vote against the passage of this bill; but remember that you who represent agricultural districts will not be forgiven or forgotten by your constituents.

Mr. HATCH. I move the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. HATCH (at 4 o'clock and 59 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. C. H. ALLEN: Petition of Alice Donahue, for a special-act pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BRAGG: Petition of hospital stewards of the United States Army, praying for increase of their pay—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE: Petition of citizens of Faulkner County, Arkansas, in favor of national aid to education—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. W. W. BROWN: Petition of Post 48, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pennsylvania, praying for the passage of Senate bill No. 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE: Memorial of the New York Board of Trade and Transportation, for a supply of one and two dollar greenbacks or Treasury certificates—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. CONGER: Petition of citizens of Adair County, Iowa, praying for the protection of the dairy interests of the country against the ravages made by oleomargarine, butterine, and kindred forms of counterfeit butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. CUTCHEON: Petition and statements of A. C. Beals, Charles Gomes, D. Robertson, and August Herbst, hospital stewards, United States Army, asking for increased compensation—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. DINGLEY: Petition of Maine Methodist conference, for the passage of the temperance educational bill—to the Committee on Education.

By Mr. DORSEY: Petition of citizens of Custer County, Nebraska, praying for the passage of bill to authorize the Western Pacific Railway Company to build branch lines—to the Committee on Pacific Railroads.

By Mr. ERMENTROUT: Four petitions from United States hospital stewards, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1119—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GALLINGER: Petition for a revenue tax on adulterated butter, signed by Mark Spokesfield and 27 others, citizens of Compton, N. H.—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Five petitions of citizens of Dakota, praying for the division of the Territory upon the seventh standard parallel thereof—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. HAMMOND: Petition of citizens of the United States praying that the coinage of silver be placed on an equality with gold, &c.—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. HEARD: Petition of citizens of Moniteau County, Missouri, in favor of the passage of House bill to tax oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. D. B. HENDERSON: Petition from the railroad interests of the United States looking to the perpetuation of the discovery of steam-transportation—to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. HILL: Twenty-six petitions signed by many hundreds of people in Dakota, asking for the division of Dakota on the seventh standard parallel—to the Committee on the Territories.

By Mr. HOUK: Petition of hospital stewards of the United States Army at Governor's Island, New York, Augustine, Fla., Rock Island, Ill., Fort Douglas, Utah, and others, asking for increase of pay to hospital stewards—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

Also, petition of B. R. Hackney, praying that his war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. KETCHAM: Petition of M. L. Gifford, and 57 others, of Stuyvesant, N. Y., asking that a revenue tax be levied on adulterated butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. KLEINER: Petition of Russell Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Indiana, praying for more liberal treatment of ex-Union soldiers—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. LANHAM: Petition of David Caulfield, relating to a pension for service in the Florida war—to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, petition of citizens of the counties of Eastland, Comanche, and Stephens, Texas, relating to the removal of the Federal court from Graham to Cisco—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. LORE: Petition of George F. Wardle, for reimbursement of money paid to United States for unused revenue-stamps—to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McMILLIN: Petition of W. A. Stott, of Smith County, Tennessee, for a pension—to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. MORROW: Petition of Knights of Labor Assembly No. 2434, of Bolivar, N. Y., praying for legislation imposing restrictions upon foreign immigration—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. O'FERRALL; Resolutions of a meeting of citizens, farmers of Dinwiddie County, Virginia, in favor of the passage without amendment of the bill to tax imitation butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. J. J. O'NEILL: Numerous petitions of the employés of the navy-yards at Brooklyn, N. Y., Washington, D. C., Philadelphia, Pa., Norfolk, Va., and Portsmouth, N. H., asking for the passage of Senate bill No. 2268, relating to leave of absence of employés—to the Committee on Labor.

By Mr. PETTIBONE: Petition of William F. Austin and of A. J. Woods, of Hamblen County; and of Logan Hodge and Marion McDaniel, heirs of L. M. McDaniel, of Jefferson County, Tennessee, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. STEELE: Petition of C. B. Saunders and 60 others, of Grand Army of the Republic, of Pennville; of B. F. Albert and 60 others; of Michael Cook and 100 others; and of Hezekiah Miller and 80 others, of Indiana, asking for the passage of the Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, petition of John W. De Puy, of Post No. 6, Grand Army of the Republic, Wabash, Ind., asking an increase of pensions in certain cases; also consideration of Mexican war pension bill with Senate amendments—to the same committee.

By Mr. TAULBEE: Petition of Elijah Patrick, of Magoffin County, Kentucky—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. J. M. TAYLOR: Petition of Benjamin F. Shelby, executor of Levi Shelby, deceased, asking that the same be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR: Petition of William H. Foster, administrator, of Lauderdale County, and of W. W. Wilkerson, of Haywood County, Tennessee, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

Also, resolutions of the Cotton Exchange, of Memphis, Tenn., asking for an amendment to section 5258 of the Revised Statutes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. TUCKER: Petition of Sarah W. Brown, of Alleghany County, Virginia, praying her war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. WHEELER: Petition of Jonathan O. Cooper, administrator of John Cooper; of Lewis F. Martin, executor of Francis C. Martin; and of Bettie F. Perkins, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the same committee.

By Mr. A. C. WHITE: Petition of citizens of Utica, N. Y.; of Craigsville and New Brighton, Pa., for the passage of the bill equalizing bounties—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. MILO WHITE: Petition of citizens of Le Roy, Minn., for the oleomargarine law—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, resolutions of the Saint Paul Chamber of Commerce, against low bridges on the Mississippi River below the mouth of the Missouri—to the Committee on Commerce.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. CAMERON presented a petition of 317 citizens of the thirteenth Congressional district of Pennsylvania, praying for the enactment of such pension legislation as is recommended by the national pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic; which was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

He also presented a petition of residents of Kittanning, Pa., and a petition of residents of Brookville, Pa., praying that an appropriation be made for the erection of a dam at Herr's Island, Allegheny River, Pennsylvania; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. ALDRICH presented a petition of 59 citizens of the ninth ward of the city of Providence, R. I., praying for the adoption of a joint resolution submitting to the Legislatures of the several States an amendment to the Constitution of the United States inserting the word "nativity" in the fifteenth amendment; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also presented two petitions of citizens of Rhode Island, praying for legislation prohibiting the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. DAWES. I present the memorial of Charles S. Welsh, second chief, and quite a number of other Indians of the Miami tribe, remonstrating against the passage of the bill making allotments of land on their reservation. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES presented a memorial of certain Cherokee freedmen, remonstrating against the Morgan amendment to Senate bill 1800 to secure to the Cherokee freedmen and others their proportion of certain proceeds of lands under the act of March 3, 1883; which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

He also presented the petition of Daniel Ballard and other citizens of New Salem, Mass., praying for legislation to protect the dairy interests against imitations of butter; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. DAWES. I also present the petition of Isaac Rich & Co. and a large number of other merchants of the city of Boston engaged in the fishing industry, praying for the passage of a bill providing for a short season catch of mackerel. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Fisheries.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented a resolution adopted by the Wool Merchants' Association of Chicago, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of a tariff bill proposing to place foreign wool on the free-list; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

Mr. BLAIR. I present a petition of the New Hampshire Annual Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, praying for the enactment of just legislation to indemnify the Chinese for injuries done them in certain Western States and Territories. I move that the petition lie on the table, as the bill on that subject is now pending.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR. I also present a petition of the same body of clergymen, praying for relief against outrages and wrongs done the Indians. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. MAHONE presented a memorial of Pomona Grange, of Frederick County, Virginia, remonstrating against the admission free of duty of agricultural raw materials; which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented a petition of Pomona Grange, of Frederick County, Virginia, praying for the suppression of the manufacture and sale of imitation dairy products; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. MORRILL presented a petition of citizens of Norwich, Windsor county, Vermont, praying for legislation providing that oleomargarine shall be sold under its proper name; which was referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. INGALLS. I present the petition of A. H. Cragin and N. G. Ordway, of Washington, D. C., praying for relief from certain alleged unjust assessments and damages resulting from improvements in the eastern part of the city. I move the reference of the petition to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The motion was agreed to.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. WHITTHORNE. I am directed by the Committee on Claims to report favorably without amendment the bill (S. 19) for the relief of H. B. Wilson, administrator of the estate of William Tinder, deceased.

Mr. HARRIS. That bill passed the Senate at the last Congress, and I am satisfied upon an explanation of a minute and a half every Senator will favor its passage. I ask unanimous consent of the Senate to consider it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. INGALLS. Let it be read.

Mr. CONGER. Let the reports of committees be finished first.

Mr. HARRIS. I withdraw the request until the reports of committees are completed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The request is withdrawn.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4836) for the relief of Thomas McBride, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. WALTHALL, from the Committee on Military Affairs, submitted a report to accompany the bill (H. R. 1341) to construct a road to the national cemetery at Natchez, Miss., heretofore reported by that committee.

He also, from the same committee, submitted a report to accompany the bill (H. R. 3440) making an appropriation to construct a macadamized road from the United States barracks in Saint Bernard Parish, Louisiana, to the national military cemetery at Chalmette, in said parish, heretofore reported by that committee.

Mr. DOLPH, from the Committee on Claims, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2542) to pay John Pope Hodnett for services rendered as counsel to the Government in the investigation into affairs of the District of Columbia, acting as such counsel by order of a resolution of the House of Representatives; also for acting as counsel for the workingmen of the District of Columbia for fifteen years last past, asked to be discharged from its further consideration, and that it be referred to the Committee on Appropriations; which was agreed to.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom were referred the following bills, reported them severally without amendment, and submitted reports thereon:

A bill (H. R. 1201) for the relief of Mary Howard Farquhar;

A bill (H. R. 4386) granting an increase of pension to William F. Clark; and

A bill (H. R. 7511) granting a pension to Margaret Lucy.

Mr. HALE. I ask leave to take up the bill just reported by the Senator from New Hampshire, the bill (H. R. 1201) for the relief of Mrs. Mary Howard Farquhar. It is a case where the Senate has already passed a bill in precisely the same words and terms, and therefore I ask that it may be passed now.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection has already been made to the consideration of bills until the morning business is closed. Does the Senator from Maine waive his request?

Mr. HALE. Yes, sir.

Mr. BLAIR, from the Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2029) granting an increase of pension to Elvira Bliss Sheldon, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. EDMUNDS, from the Committee on Foreign Relations, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1644) providing for an inspection of meats for exportation, prohibiting the importation of adulterated articles of food or drink, and authorizing the President to make proclamation in certain cases, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 618) for the relief of Orville Horwitz, assignee in trust of C. D. De Ford & Co., reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. FAIR, from the Committee on Claims, to whom the subject was referred, submitted a report, accompanied by a bill (S. 2588) for the relief of Lucinda McGuire; which was read twice by its title.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (S. 694) for the relief of Lucinda McGuire, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

COMMITTEE ON POST-OFFICES AND POST-ROADS.

Mr. CONGER. I am instructed by the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads to ask leave for that committee to sit during the sessions of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads ask leave to sit during the sessions of the Senate. If there be no objection, that order will be made. The Chair hears none.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HALE (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2581) to amend section 5258 of the Revised Statutes, relating to railways; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Railroads.

Mr. INGALLS (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2582) to provide for the support of wives, children, and other dependents; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

He also (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2583) to amend the act of 1871 (amended in 1872) regulating licenses in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS. I introduce a bill to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn land on Rock Creek for the purposes of a park, to be called "Rock Creek Park." The bill is accompanied by a memorial in favor of the proposition, and I ask that the bill may be twice read, and, with the memorial, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The bill (S. 2584) to authorize the commissioners of the District of Columbia to condemn land on Rock Creek for the purposes of a park, to be called "Rock Creek Park," was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying memorial, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. INGALLS introduced a bill (S. 2585) to provide for the extension of the streets and avenues of the cities of Washington and Georgetown, in the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. ALLISON introduced a bill (S. 2586) granting an increase of pension to Samuel J. Murphy, of Marengo, Iowa; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. PAYNE introduced a bill (S. 2587) granting a pension to Elizabeth Ward; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

INSTITUTION OF MARRIAGE.

Mr. CULLOM. I ask leave to introduce a joint resolution, which I ask to have read and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The joint resolution (S. R. 68) for the amendment of the Constitution of the United States in regard to bigamy and polygamy was read the first time by its title and the second time at length, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled (two-thirds of each House concurring therein), That it is deemed necessary by the two Houses of Congress to propose an amendment to the Constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the Constitution when ratified, as hereby proposed, by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, the amendment hereby proposed to be numbered and to read as follows, to wit:

"ARTICLE XVI.

"SECTION 1. The only institution or contract of marriage within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction, shall be that of the union in marriage of one man with one woman; and bigamy or polygamy is forever prohibited, any law, custom, form, or ceremony, civil or religious, to the contrary notwithstanding.

"SEC. 2. No State shall pass any law, nor allow any custom, form, or ceremony of marriage, except in obedience to and conformably to the institution of marriage as herein defined and established; but, otherwise, the regulation, within each State, of marriage and divorce, and civil and criminal jurisdiction over those subjects, shall belong to the several States as heretofore.

"SEC. 3. Congress shall have power to enforce this article by appropriate legislation."

Mr. CULLOM. I ask that the joint resolution be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and I should like to call the attention of the committee to the subject in the hope that they may act upon it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The joint resolution will be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

AMENDMENTS TO BILLS.

Mr. CALL and Mr. CAMERON submitted amendments intended to be proposed by them to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which were referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BLAIR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Education and Labor, and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSIONS WITH OPEN DOORS.

Mr. MORRILL. I offer an amendment to the resolution in relation to open executive sessions. I merely offer it to have it printed, and shall offer it when that matter comes up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The order to print will be made.

The amendment proposed by Mr. MORRILL is as follows:

Strike out the words "executive nominations" and insert in lieu thereof the words "reciprocity treaties, so called."

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" the morning business is closed, and the Chair lays before the Senate a resolution which went over under objection yesterday. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk read the following resolution, submitted yesterday by Mr. GEORGE:

Resolved, That Senate bill No. 714 be recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary with instructions to report it so amended as to provide for voluntary proceedings in bankruptcy only.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] not being present, if there be no objection the resolution will lie on the table for the present, IMPROVEMENT OF THE MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I ask to have Order of Business 1396, being Senate bill 546, recommitted to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River. I do this at the request of the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. EUSTIS] and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE]; and I ask, if in order, that the bill shall not lose its place on the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The title of the bill will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 546) to make the Lake Borgne outlet, to improve the low-water navigation of the Mississippi River from New Orleans, La., to Cairo, Ill., and incidentally to reclaim and protect the valley lands of the Mississippi River and tributaries from overflow without levees.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that the bill be recommitted to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River. Is there objection?

Mr. VEST. The bill comes from the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River, does it not?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It does. Is there objection to the request?

Mr. COCKRELL. I have no objection if it is proposed to recommit the report and the bill.

Mr. MCMILLAN. What is the purpose of the recommittal? Why is the bill to be recommitted?

Mr. GEORGE. I desire to make a personal explanation in reference to the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to make an explanation upon a matter which is not debatable, which is taken up by unanimous consent. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. GEORGE. I desire simply to state in reference to the report and the bill to be recommitted to the Committee on the Improvement of the Mississippi River that it was reported here in the first instance without consultation with me, I being a member of the committee, and that I dissent entirely both from the report and the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the bill and report will be recommitted.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BROWN and Mr. DOLPH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is recognized upon the unfinished business of yesterday.

Mr. DOLPH. If the morning business is closed, I ask that Senate bill No. 2172 be proceeded with.

Mr. BROWN. I had prepared some remarks yesterday which I expected to have submitted upon the bankruptcy bill, when the bill took a turn that was not looked for by the Senate. I ask the indulgence of the Senator from Oregon and the Senate for some half hour until I submit those remarks. I ask that the bill be considered as taken up only for the purpose of submitting the remarks that I desire to make.

Mr. DOLPH. I hope the Senator will allow me to make the motion and get the bill up for consideration, and then I shall yield for the purpose desired.

Mr. BROWN. I did not hear the Senator.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall be glad if the Senator from Georgia will allow me to make the motion that I rose to make and get the bill up. I propose to ask that the bill which has been under consideration for three days during the morning hour shall be taken up for consideration, and then, if the Senator desires to make some remarks upon the bankruptcy bill and to take it up for that purpose, I shall of course extend to him the usual courtesy.

Mr. BROWN. I have no objection to that course.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill named by him.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. DOLPH. The senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] when the morning hour closed yesterday had the floor upon the bill now under consideration. I simply state that to the Senator from Georgia. So far as I am concerned, as managing the bill, of course I will yield for the purpose indicated by the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. BROWN. Then I ask the Senator from Mississippi to extend to me the courtesy of the floor until I proceed to submit a few remarks on the bankruptcy bill.

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

UNIFORM SYSTEM OF BANKRUPTCY.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There being no objection, the Northern Pacific Railroad bill will be laid aside informally and the bankruptcy bill will be regarded as before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 714) to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States.

Mr. BROWN. Mr. President, there are supposed to be 60,000,000 of people in the United States at the present time. Of that number, I think it is safe to say that not 1,000,000, or not more than one-sixtieth, desire the passage of a bankrupt law.

The bankers and brokers and large merchants and speculators in large cities, who constitute the principal creditor class of this country, and who always urge bankrupt legislation in the name and as they say for the benefit of the debtor class, and the lawyers, do desire it; because it aids the creditor class in the collection of the debts due them by the debtor class and gives fees to the lawyers. It is also desired by the reckless traders and the dishonest part of the debtor class, because it relieves the part of the debtor class above mentioned from debts contracted by them.

As there is a large honest debtor class in every great city, as well as large numbers of creditors not of the classes above mentioned, we can not count the population of the great cities as solid for a bankrupt law. Indeed, we can not count one-half the population, no, not one-fourth of the population of each large city, as favorable to the passage of the bankrupt law. It is principally the large influential creditor class, and the part of the debtor class mentioned, with a small class of honest unfortunates in the cities, that desire such a law. Take the towns and villages and rural districts, and there is great unanimity among the people in opposition to a bankrupt law. There is now and then a dishonest debtor who is anxious for it. There is occasionally an unfortunate honest debtor who would be glad to avail himself of the benefit of it, and who would have the sympathy of the community while doing so, but this class is small. If a debtor is honest and his creditors, as is apt to be the case, are indulgent and kind, he does not want the name of going into bankruptcy.

The bill then, if it becomes a law, will benefit the large creditor class and dishonest debtor class more than it will benefit anybody else. The plain common people, as they are termed, the bone and sinew of this country, do not see any good reason why such a law should be passed to give relief to the classes which have just been mentioned, and to officers of court and lawyers, among whom part of every bankrupt's estate is distributed. While the bankrupt law furnishes to the large wealthy creditor class a short and speedy method of collecting the debts due them, it is in a majority of cases oppressive to the debtor class.

The people of this country have never favored a bankrupt law. There have been three general laws on that subject passed. The first was passed on the 4th of March, 1800, and the people became so much dissatisfied with it and so clamorous for its repeal that Congress yielded to the demands of their constituents, and repealed it on the 19th of December, 1803. It lasted three years, eight months, and five days. It was almost a half a century before the wealthy merchants and bankers and lawyers of the great cities were able to prevail upon Congress to pass another bankrupt law. However, they finally succeeded, and on the 19th of August, 1841, a bankrupt bill was passed. It met general disfavor with the mass of the people, who in a very short time demanded its repeal, and their representatives yielded to the popular will and it was repealed on the 13th day of March, 1843. It was the law one year, six months, and fourteen days.

This ended all successful legislation for the passage of a bankrupt bill until after the war, when, on account of the ravages of war, and the number of persons who had made failures where they were no way at fault, a bankrupt bill might at that time have been of some service to the honest debtor class; but it was put through Congress mainly by the influence of the creditor class, as the mass of the people in the country towns and villages and rural districts never favored it. However, on the 2d day of March, 1867, a general bankrupt bill was passed, and on account of the peculiar state of things which existed, the people bore it with more patience than they had exercised in the case of either of its predecessors. However, the clamor came up to Congress repeatedly for its repeal, and the pressure became so great that on the 7th June, 1878, the act was repealed. This law lasted eleven years four months and five days, and the whole country breathed freer and felt greatly relieved when it was stricken from the statute-book.

The first session of Congress was held under the Constitution in 1789, ninety-seven years ago. The three bankrupt laws to which I have referred, when taken together, lasted but sixteen years seven months and four days—in round numbers one-sixth of the time since the first Congress met under the Constitution. If the people of the United States had desired a bankrupt law, and it had been believed by them to be wise and proper to have such a law, who can suppose that they would have kept it upon the statute-book for only one-sixth of the period of time since the organization of the Government under the Constitution?

Then we have had three bankrupt laws at different periods of the Government. In each case the law has become very unpopular, and the people have been averse to its operations and have demanded its repeal.

I take it, therefore, judging from the history of the past, that the people of this country are opposed to a bankrupt law; and if we should enact the present bill into a law, as soon as the people realized its workings they would, as on former occasions, within a very short period consign it to the same fate which has attended each of its predecessors.

As already stated, we have had three general bankrupt laws passed and repealed; but I think no one of them contained as many bad provisions as are proposed by the present bill. The class of involuntary bankrupts under the proposed act are designated in the bill as traders. Who are traders? For all traders as defined by the proposed act are subject to the bankrupt law. First, traders as defined by this bill include all merchants, no matter whether large or small, whether they are in the large cities or the country towns or villages, or at the cross-roads in the country. Every man who is a merchant is subject, for the causes to which I will hereafter refer, to be put into bankruptcy. The bill also includes all persons who make it their business, or a part of their business, to buy or sell lands, goods, chattels, bills, bonds, stocks, or shares.

Now note this language, Mr. President; it does not apply to persons whose business it is to buy and sell lands, goods, chattels, bills, bonds, notes, stocks, or shares, but to any one, a part of whose business it is not to buy and sell, but to buy or sell any of the kinds of property already mentioned. A man, therefore, no matter in what pursuit he is engaged, who makes it only a part of his business, and the bill does not say how small a part shall suffice, but if it is any part of his business to buy or sell lands, goods, chattels, &c., he is subject to be put into bankruptcy. There are very few farmers who do not make it part of their business to buy some of the articles mentioned or occasionally to sell lands or chattels, &c. If it is only a part, and even a small part of the farmer's business, and he makes it a part of his business to buy or sell the articles mentioned, he is subject to be put into bankruptcy.

But the act does not stop here. It includes manufacturers, warehousemen, bankers, and brokers. Now, manufacturers are a very large class, Mr. President. There are several millions of our people engaged in the manufacture of different articles. A man whose business is manufacturing, whether he manufacture boots, shoes, or hats, or paper sacks, or paper collars, or cottons or woolens, or any other article or articles that are manufactured in this country, is a manufacturer, and is the subject of bankruptcy. We have a large class of warehousemen, and they, too, are subject to be put into bankruptcy for the causes that I will mention further on.

But I have not yet enumerated all who are made subject by this bill to involuntary bankruptcy. The next class are builders and contractors. Every person engaged as a builder therefore is subject to be put into bankruptcy. Or if he is a contractor in any sort of business where he falls under the general designation of contractor he is the subject of bankruptcy under this bill; so are shipwrights; so are publishers, and this is a very large class. They are scattered all over the United States. They are in every city, town, and village. Like other classes, they are not able always to be prompt in meeting their engagements, and for a little delay they may be put into bankruptcy. Then it applies to inn-keepers, livery-stable keepers, and all artisans who buy the material for their business on credit.

A sign painter is an artisan, and if he buys on credit the paint and the brush used in painting signs he is the subject of bankruptcy. But the bill very graciously excepts a class of persons who are generally able to take care of themselves. It declares that it shall not apply to persons who buy goods and merchandise for sale only to their tenants and employés and laborers, nor who buy to sell again any goods or chattels from such tenants, employés, and laborers. So that the wealthy man who employs a large number of tenants, employés, and laborers may buy from them to sell again goods they may have to sell, and though he may not pay for them within the time prescribed in the contract, or within thirty days after the debt is due, or may never pay for them, he is not the subject of bankruptcy. This is the case of the man who employs large numbers of men, and is usually a man of wealth. He may buy from his employés and laborers and never pay them, and still not be put into bankruptcy.

The bill graciously exempts one or two other classes. It declares that it shall not apply to mechanics of any kind who habitually labor at their trade. If they are artisans and buy on credit the materials for their business, they would come within the provisions of the act; but if they are simply laborers, as mechanics, they are not subject to be put into bankruptcy. Nor does it apply to farmers having no place of business in any village, town, or city, who buy or sell agricultural products, or buy live stock with a view of fattening them for sale, unless such person so excluded be otherwise a trader within the meaning of this act. A farmer, then, may buy live stock with a view of fattening them for sale without going into bankruptcy even though he should fail for thirty days to pay for one. But if he buys young heifers or a young bull for breeding purposes and does not pay for them within thirty days after the debt is due, the farmer may be put into bankruptcy. In a word, he can not deal in live stock at all without being subject to bankruptcy unless he simply buys with a view of fattening them for sale. If he wants them for milch cows or for breeding stock or for any other uses, but with a view to fattening them for sale, he may be subject to bankruptcy on the contract.

And if the farmer has any place of business in a village, town, or city he is subject to bankruptcy as any of the other classes I have mentioned. In other words, the only privilege that the act gives to the farmer of trading without being subject to bankruptcy is the privilege of buying and selling agricultural products, or of buying live stock with a view of fattening them for sale. In all other matters of trade the farmer would be as subject to bankruptcy as any other trader.

Now, Mr. President, I have pointed out the classes who are subject to bankruptcy under this act, if it should become a law, and they are very numerous, embracing almost everybody.

Now, what are the grounds upon which this large class may be put into bankruptcy? As the bill was reported by the committee, if any trader, which under the bill embraces all the classes mentioned, owing debts exceeding in amount $1,000, after the passage of this act, depart from the State, district, or Territory of which the person implicated is an inhabitant, with an intent to defraud his creditors, or being absent remains so with like intent, or conceals himself to avoid arrest or the service of legal process, or makes a fraudulent transfer of his property, or conceals or removes the same to avoid process, or with intent to defraud his creditors, or suffers judgment against him, or gives a warrant to confess judgment or judgment-note with like intent, or who being actually insolvent suffers his property to be seized on execution and fails within twenty days thereafter to redeem the same from such seizure, he may be put into bankruptcy.

The act must be done with intent to defraud his creditors, but any three irresponsible, malicious persons, or enemies, who desire to break a man up, may take the necessary steps to put him into bankruptcy by alleging that his acts are done with intent to defraud his creditors every time he goes out of the State, district, or Territory where he lives, without having the remotest intention of defrauding his creditors. The result is that he must come into court, demand a trial, and be able to prove that he did not leave the State or Territory of his residence with any view to defrauding his creditors. In any of the cases above mentioned malicious persons who desire to involve a fellow-citizen in litigation and trouble, and to destroy his credit, by taking steps to put him into bankruptcy, may cause it to go all over the country that the person implicated has become a bankrupt, and if he should be able on trial to show that the allegations of intended fraud, &c., were all false, he has still been involved in heavy expense, his property has been seized and taken from him, and he is almost ruined.

But this is not all. If any one of the numerous classes already mentioned has suspended, and not resumed payment of his commercial paper made, passed, or contracted in the course of his business for a period of thirty days after the same were payable, he is to be put into bankruptcy. Take the case of the hotel-keeper in a small village, and if he fails to pay a debt due his grocery merchant for a period of thirty days after it is due, this bill, if it becomes a law, provides, no matter how solvent he may be, for putting him into bankruptcy. What would our plain country people say to such an act? Our merchants, our manufacturers, our warehousemen, our builders, our contractors, our shipwrights, our publishers, our inn-keepers, our livery-stable men, and all our artisans who buy their material for their business on credit, what would they say to such an act?

What would they say to a law that breaks them up, takes their property from them, and ruins their credit because they have been unable to pay their debt for as much as thirty days after it is due? Everybody familiar with the general business of the country knows that our country merchants, who are more prompt usually than the other classes above mentioned, very often fall behind more than thirty days in meeting their paper with their wholesale merchants, and nobody thinks in all this large class of persons of breaking down and destroying a man because he has suspended payment and failed to pay a debt for as much as thirty days after it is due. As I have already shown, the bill makes a very large proportion of our people subject to bankruptcy, and then it provides for putting them into bankruptcy for the most trivial grounds, for instance, a farmer buying live stock, with no intent to fatten them for sale, who fails to pay for them only as much as thirty days is subject to have his whole property seized and to be put into bankruptcy and ruined.

Mr. President, the people of this country never did sanction such an iniquity for any considerable length of time, and they never will do it. But this is not all. A person who, being insolvent, gives a preference to a creditor as hereinafter defined, or makes an assignment for the benefit of existing creditors, with or without preference, shall be deemed to have committed an act of bankruptcy, and may be adjudged bankrupt by any court of bankruptcy in the district in which he may have been resident, &c. Now if he is insolvent and has a debt of honor, of the most sacred character, that every right-thinking man would feel that it was his duty to pay in preference to other indebtedness, and he gives a preference to that creditor, no matter how much in honor bound he may be to do so, he may be dragged into bankruptcy for doing it, or if he makes an assignment for the benefit of existing creditors with or without preferences. In other words, if he finds he is in failing circumstances and does not want to go into the bankrupt court where his little estate will be absorbed in expenses and costs and lawyers' fees, and he prefers to make an assignment to some upright, intelligent citizen for the benefit of his creditors, and does it without giving preference to anybody, he shall be seized and dragged into bankruptcy for doing it. Could anything be more unfair? Those who covet the passage of this bill seem to have but one idea, and that is that everything ought to be wound up in bankruptcy.

A man who is insolvent may not make an assignment of all his effects for the benefit of his creditors, giving no preference to anybody, and if he does he shall be put into bankruptcy for doing it. In other words, it is necessary that the officers in bankruptcy and lawyers shall have fees, and there must be a great many cases made for their benefit; and therefore it will not do to permit insolvent persons to make assignments even without preference, as each assignment would keep one case out of bankruptcy.

But, Mr. President, if the estate is small, in such case the debtor will be ruined and the creditors will not get the benefit. It will go mainly to the officers of the court, to the lawyers, and to the Government. Bear in mind that a man who manufactures paper sacks and gets $1,000 in debt and fails to pay a debt of $10 for as much as thirty days after it is due may be put into bankruptcy. Now, what will become of the thousand dollars of estate? In the twenty-sixth section of this bill it is provided that the costs and counsel fees of involuntary proceedings which have proceeded to adjudication may be paid out of the assets to an amount not exceeding $200 if the court shall so order. Here, then, $200 of the thousand has gone as costs and counsel fees.

Then, in section 20 it is provided that every trustee shall pay in to the clerk 1 per cent. of the gross amount of money realized from the assets in excess of $500, and every debtor making a composition shall in like manner pay one-half of 1 per cent. upon the total amount thereof, which is to be paid into the Treasury of the United States. Then, in section 72 it is provided, first, that 1½ per cent. upon the gross assets above $500, for the use of the United States, as provided in section 20, shall be one of the prior liens; second, the costs and charges of proceedings, including the entry fee of $60, when not paid by the bankrupt, and all costs duly charged against the assets. Here then, is $60 more, running the amount up to $260; and then there is an indefinite provision for all costs duly charged against the assets. No one can tell how much costs will be duly charged against the assets.

Then, in section 75 it is provided that the trustee shall be allowed from the assets in his hands all his necessary disbursements and such reasonable compensation for his services, having regard to the circumstances of the case, as shall be allowed by the committee of direction, or if there be no committee by a majority in value of the creditors; and in default of such allowance by the commissioner, not exceeding the rate of compensation allowed for similar services by probate courts of the State in which the proceedings are pending. And the allowance shall in all cases be subject to the decision of the district judge and the supervision of the circuit court. Where the commissioner acts as trustee the allowance shall be made by the judge. Here, then, is another indefinite arrangement for fees and costs for the trustee, which is to include all his necessary disbursements and such reasonable compensation for his services, having regard to the circumstances of the case, as shall be allowed by the committee of direction, &c.

By the time all this is through with, I should say at least $500 of the thousand-dollar estate is absorbed in costs and counsel fees and percentage, to go to the Treasury of the United States and compensation to trustees, &c. The bill is very careful that the manufacturer of paper sacks or any other of the classes above mentioned shall not make an assignment either with or without preference, but if he does he goes into bankruptcy, and when he gets there, nearly or quite one-half of the estate of a thousand dollars will be eaten up in expense, he will be ruined, and his creditors will get but little benefit.

Section 26, as reported by the committee, provides that at any time before or within three months after the adjudication, upon proof being made by affidavit to the satisfaction of the judge that any bankrupt or person against whom proceedings in bankruptcy are pending is about to leave the district, and that his departure will hinder, impair, or delay the proceedings therein, the judge may issue his warrant to the marshal directing him to arrest the said bankrupt, or supposed bankrupt, and him safely keep until he shall give bail or recognizance in a sum to be specified in said warrant for his appearance from time to time as required by the court, and for his obedience to all lawful orders of the court in said proceedings. What is the liberty of the citizen worth in a case of that character?

A proceeding has probably been commenced against the bankrupt without just cause by some enemy or malicious person for the purpose is destroying his reputation, and if he attempts while the proceeding of pending to leave the State for any cause, and his absence would hinder or impair or even delay the proceeding for a single day, he may be arrested, and if he does not give security for his appearance at court, put in jail, and his little estate swallowed up by costs and charges as already mentioned.

There is an old maxim of the law, Mr. President, that "the law protects the vigilant and not the sleepy," and that among creditors those who are vigilant and commence proceedings when they may legally commence them get preference and natural preference over those who are negligent and careless in doing so. This bill proposes to destroy all that entirely.

As reported by the committee it is provided in section 33 that all property of a debtor levied upon or seized on execution within thirty days of filing the petition by or against him by any process of law applied to the satisfaction of sales on execution, or the proceeds thereof, shall be held by the judgment creditor for the general creditors and shall be recovered by the trustee on proper process, except so much as is necessary to reimburse the cost of such execution. Here is a case where suit has been brought say in the State court by a creditor who has obtained judgment levied upon the property of the debtor and had it sold and has received his money, as he had a right to do, and if the defendant, or debtor, at any time within thirty days applies for voluntary bankruptcy, or some creditor proceeds against him as a bankrupt, for causes already mentioned, the judgment creditor who brought suit and obtained judgment and sold the property of the debtor and received his money is bound to hold the money for the general creditors and is subject to suit by the trustee in bankruptcy who has a right to recover the money from the judgment creditor for the benefit of the general creditors.

In such case the creditor in bringing the suit in the State courts, for instance, may have acted in perfect good faith, and after proceeding to judgment and having the property of the defendant sold for the satisfaction of the judgment and having received his money he is cited to hold the money for the benefit of the general creditors. But if after the judgment was rendered and after the property was sold, and after the money was paid to him without any notice to him of any act on the part of the defendant for which he could be put into bankruptcy, some of the creditors of the defendant in the bankrupt court proceed against him, the bill then provides that the trustee in bankruptcy may bring suit against the vigilant creditor who has collected his money by regular legal process and compel him to hold it for the benefit of the general creditors of the defendant now bankrupt. I am satisfied that the people of this country desire no such legislation.

There is no great emergency such as existed at the close of the war to call for a bankrupt law, and scarcely anybody desires it except a few reckless or dishonest debtors, or the class of large merchants or bankers in commercial centers who as a creditor class desire to hold the bankrupt law as a rod over their debtors to compel payment.

It is true, Mr. President, that there is a provision in the bill authorizing persons who are debtors to go into voluntary bankruptcy, and that is held out by the friends of the large creditor class and the advocates of the bankrupt bill as one of its best provisions.

While there would occasionally be an instance where it might be beneficial to a debtor to permit him to go into voluntary bankruptcy where he had made an honest failure and would never be able to pay his debts, where no censure could attach to him, yet, as a general rule, the class of persons who would take the benefit of voluntary bankruptcy would be those who were either dishonest or who, with knowledge that they could avail themselves of the benefit of the bankrupt law, would take risks and trade carelessly with a view to that character of relief if it should ever become necessary to avail themselves of it. But if that is the chief excellence of the bill, why not permit those opposed to it to have stricken from it all the provisions which relate to involuntary bankruptcy? That motion has been made and the advocates of the bill very vigorously oppose a motion to amend the bill in that particular.

Mr. President, ours is a Government of the people, and while combinations of wealthy citizens, or corporations, or interested parties may occasionally be able to secure legislation that is not for the general good and does not meet the popular approval, and such legislation may sleep for years upon the statute-book without attracting popular attention, still the popular judgment will ultimately control it, as has been the case in reference to the bankrupt acts which have heretofore been enacted.

This is a question of so much importance and so far-reaching in its operations that the attention of the people is necessarily attracted to it when a bankrupt law is put upon the statute-book; and I think I have shown very conclusively that popular sentiment has frowned upon every such act and that the representatives of the people have been compelled to yield and join in its repeal. I take it for granted that there is no great emergency requiring this legislation and no popular clamor demanding its enactment. Indeed, judging by the past, I take it for granted that there is a very overwhelming popular sentiment against it.

Then I object to the bill on account of the unjust and unreasonable provisions which I have already pointed out. It seizes unsuspecting persons who have intended to do no wrong, takes their property from them for short delays of as much as thirty days in meeting their obligations, and denies to them the right to make assignments for the benefit of their creditors, even without preference to any one. Everybody knows that it is not in the power of the large classes of people described in this act to meet promptly all their engagements within thirty days, and this is the case of persons perfectly solvent. Country merchants do not do it, hotel-keepers do not do it, farmers can not do it, and manufacturers can not do it, and so with all the classes mentioned. Then why pass a law that everybody knows can not be executed without immense injury to the honest laboring masses of our people, and a law which everybody knows will not be permitted to stand long upon the statute-book until they will require its repeal?

It seems to me it has been tried often enough; that its advocates ought to begin to learn that the people do not favor their views on this question. For these and other considerations which I might mention I feel it my duty to cast my vote against this bill, and I earnestly protest, in the name of the people I represent, against its passage.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be restored to its place on the Calendar.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had agreed to some and disagreed to other amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes; that it asked a conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and had appointed Mr. WILSON, Mr. J. J. ADAMS, and Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, managers at the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota for the incorporation of insurance companies, and for other purposes, and to authorise and empower the Legislative Assembly of said Territory to pass such general laws; that it agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the said bill and the amendments thereto, and had appointed Mr. HILL, Mr. BOYLE, and Mr. BAKER managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown.

The message also announced that the House had passed a concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 2357) for the relief of H. H. Faulkner and Mary Woodlee; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

RECALL OF A BILL.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I ask that the concurrent resolution which has just come from the House of Representatives for the recall of a bill be laid before the Senate, as it is important that it shall be passed at once.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following resolution of the House of Representatives:

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, June 2, 1886.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that the resolution be concurred in and that the request of the House of Representatives be complied with.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. VAN WYCK.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, yesterday I made a statement of the amount of land donated by Congress to this road, which was correct. I changed the statement in the hearing of the Senate, and I find that the original statement was correct. In order to remove all doubt on that subject, I have learned from the statute the true state of facts on the subject to be this: In the States there were granted twenty sections of land to the mile, and in the Territories there were granted forty sections of land to the mile. I will read now from the third section of the act incorporating the Northern Pacific Railroad Company, so as to verify that statement. That section reads as follows. I read only part of it:

SEC. 3. And be it further enacted, That there be, and hereby is, granted to the Atlantic and Pacific Railroad Company, its successors and assigns, for the purpose of aiding in the construction of said railroad and telegraph line to the Pacific coast, and to secure the safe and speedy transportation of the mails, troops, munitions of war, and public stores over the route of said line of railway and its branches, every alternate section of public land, not mineral, designated by odd numbers, to the amount of twenty alternate sections per mile on each side of said railroad line, as said company may adopt, through the Territories of the United States, and ten alternate sections of land per mile on each side of said railroad whenever it passes through any State.

Ten sections per mile on each side in a State makes twenty sections per mile. Twenty sections on each side in the Territories makes forty sections per mile.

I do not intend this morning to continue the debate, but I have some memoranda from which I desire to speak during the progress of the debate. I do not desire to go on now. I only desired to make the correction, and during the progress of the debate I shall have something further to say.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK], which will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 10, after the word "main," it is proposed to strike out—

Line which extends from Wallula Junction, in Washington Territory, to the city of Portland, in the State of Oregon, except such of said lands as appertain to and are conterminous with the branch line across the Cascade Mountains.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

And branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished on the date of the passage of this act.

So as to make the section read:

That all the lands heretofore granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company by an act entitled "An act granting lands to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, on the Pacific coast, by the northern route," approved July 2, 1864, and subsequent acts and joint resolutions of Congress, which appertain to and are conterminous with that part of its main and branch lines where the railroad required by said acts has not been constructed and completely finished on the date of the passage of this act, be, and the same are hereby, resumed by the United States and restored to the public domain, and made subject to disposition and settlement under the general laws relating to the public lands.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this amendment the yeas and nays have been ordered.

Mr. CALL. I do not think a question of so great importance ought to be allowed to pass without some further consideration of it. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Nebraska raises the entire question of the expediency of the forfeiture of railroad land grants. When a measure of great public importance is pressed upon the attention of Congress by a large body of public opinion, when it has been presented by the platforms of both the great political parties of the country, when the Democratic party in the last canvass presented distinctly to the country the pledge that all unearned railroad grants should be forfeited, that the policy of granting the lands in homesteads to actual settlers was a necessary one for the well-being of the whole country, that the policy of these large land grants to railroad corporations was a hurtful one in every respect, when the great body of the associated labor of this country has indorsed that view and has spoken in the most emphatic terms recently to the country, it can scarcely be justified that we should fail to take action upon it, and it is certainly true that a failure to act when the question is presented and the passage only of a law which relates to a very small portion, an insignificant portion of this vast domain, thus evading the question raised before us by the public opinion of the country, will be regarded as a denial, as hostile legislation, and whatever the motives, it will in effect and in fact be a denial of this proposition and of this demand by the public opinion of the country.

It does not matter that this small proportion of this unearned land grant shall be forfeited and that it is right that it should be. The great question upon which the people of this country demand Congress to take action, and upon which in my judgment the very stability of our republican institutions depends, is left untouched; and it is left untouched in the interest of these vast land grants; it is left untouched in the interest of accumulation without consideration of vast properties in the hands of a few individuals; it is left untouched in the interest of that great amount of taxation upon securities issued without consideration and taxing the productive power of the people of the United States without the authority of law, but which is as practical and as effective in oppressing the industries of the country as if imposed by an act of Congress itself. And for one, therefore, I am not in favor of allowing this question to pass without some expression of opinion on the part of the Senate.

In the report of the Committee on Education and Labor, the intelligent representatives of the associations of labor presented the views and the opinions of that large and influential body of our fellow-citizens upon that subject. Since that time the subject has continued to grow in importance. I will read a few extracts from the testimony taken before the committee on this subject, the testimony of Mr. William Godwin Moody found on the seven hundred and twentieth page of the first volume of that report:

EXTENT OF LAND GRANTS TO RAILROADS ILLUSTRATED.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Have you ever made a calculation of how many States of the size of New York those 215,000,000 acres of public lands granted to the railroads would make?

A. Yes, sir; I have made a calculation, though it is not based on the size of New York. The 250,000,000 acres that I speak of cover an area nearly equal to the eight States of Pennsylvania, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin, Iowa, Missouri. Those States together have an area of 258,000,000 acres, only 8,000,000 acres more than what has been given to the railroads. The amount of the public domain that has been absolutely granted to the railroads is more than three times greater in area than England, Ireland, and Scotland combined. It is an area equal to the Austro-Hungarian Empire and the Kingdom of Italy, with Switzerland and the Netherlands thrown in.

Q. One empire, two kingdoms, and one republic.

A. Precisely. It is about equal to the Empire of Germany, with the Kingdoms of Italy, Greece, Portugal, and the Swiss Republic as a make-weight, they having in the aggregate an area of only 251,000,000 acres as against 250,000,000 acres that have been granted to our railroad despots.

Q. Assuming that you are correct in the statement that the odd-numbered sections of the public land dominate and control the even-numbered sections, then that calculation would be doubled?

A. Exactly so.

EVIL EFFECTS.

Q. Now, Mr. Moody, what hurt does it do?

A. The hurt is manifold and manifest. It is perfectly apparent. One of the most manifest features of it is that it has driven our American people off the farms. I intended to have said that under the conditions of the grants of the homestead lands the amount of land so granted to each American citizen was limited to two quarter-sections at the most; one acquired by homestead right or purchase and the other by tree culture, making altogether 320 acres. Under the grants to the railroads no limitations have been made, and no conditions have been imposed as to the disposal of the lands. The railroads take them purely as speculators, and they enter upon the disposal of them as upon a gigantic speculation. They are filling our country with these great estates; estates that sink to insignificance the latifundia of old Rome, which were the cause of her destruction. They are planting upon our soil a social system that is in utter and direct conflict with all our institutions, and it is growing with a rapidity that is almost beyond belief. That system is driving from the soil those who should there find their homes with full occupation, abundance, and happiness. Hundreds of thousands, ay, millions, of our people are driven off the land into the towns and cities, where they are hived up in hovels and tenements such as the gentlemen of this committee have seen, I believe, to some degree, and the sight of which, I understand, was so exceedingly offensive to their olfactory nerves that they abandoned that method of investigation—at least it has been so reported by the papers. The facts are that while there are hundreds and thousands and millions of acres of our lands, cultivated and uncultivated, in the hands of private owners, without a single fixed inhabitant upon them, we have here in the city of New York a population so dense that it is reckoned at the rate of 500,000 people upon a single square mile. By the medical reports and other statistics it appears that there is a population of 760 persons to the square acre in some places here, which makes 486,000 to the square mile; a mass of people living in a state of wretchedness unendurable to the sight of gentlemen of this committee, and absolutely unendurable to the life of those people themselves—for we find that the mortality in those districts is double what it is in the other sections of New York."

This testimony has been verified in the report of the Commissioner of Labor, in the fact that there are a million of unemployed people now in this country, in the fact that labor is disturbed and there is unrest everywhere, in the fact that there is among our people a disposition for change, for new legislation, or something that will cure the manifest evils that affect the family, that affect the comfort and well-being of the entire community. We are not at a loss to understand why that is when we understand that between three and four thousand millions of securities which have no consideration, but as was said by the Senator from Texas [Mr. COKE] the ink and the paper upon which they are made, but which carry with them a taxing power upon every man, woman, and child to meet the gross amount of nearly $900,000,000 a year, that being the total gross earnings of these corporations, and between three and four thousand millions appears to be the most reasonable estimate of this character of securities bearing a proportionate part of this vast amount of tax paid for railroad transportation.

Mr. President, we have here this vast grant of something like thirty or thirty-two million acres which are involved in this question of forfeiture, which were not earned within the time specified in the granting acts, which were given upon the express condition, so specified in the law, that it should not be a grant unless that condition was complied with; and we find upon an examination of the reports that have been made to the two Houses of Congress and a careful estimate of the facts that between thirty and forty million dollars will be made from this land grant by the few projectors of this enterprise, those who hold and control its stock, over and above the entire cost of the construction of the road. We find that the indirect effect of this action of Congress is to tax the people who shall occupy these public lands not only with the actual cost of the construction of this road and then give it to a few individuals, but with thirty or forty millions above and beyond the cost of the road. Such is the statement which is contained in House report, first session, Forty-seventh Congress, in 1881–'82.

Mr. GEORGE. Do I understand the Senator that the Government paid enough to build and equip the road fully from end to end and $30,000,000 besides?

Mr. CALL. That is the effect of it.

Mr. GEORGE. So as to make them a present of the road and $30,000,000 as a bonus for building it? Is that the idea?

Mr. CALL. That is the idea. In this report, signed by J. Proctor Knott, DAVID B. CULBERSON, R. W. TOWNSHEND, Van H. Manning on the 11th of July, 1882, and by L. E. PAYSON on the 21st of July, 1882, is this:

Or, assuming the mean between the estimates of the auditor and the president of the company, and also the mean between the average price of the lands already sold and the auditor's estimate of $2.50 per acre, the following will be the result:

Proceeds of lands already sold	$11,565,466 65
26,919,947 acres unsold, at $3.12½	84,100,146 87
Total	95,665,613 52
Cost of 2,409¼ miles road, at $33,407.65	80,495,732 75
Surplus	15,169,880 77

That is the mean estimate.

Or, adopting the extravagant estimates submitted by the president in his response to the committee, the figures will stand thus:

Value of land sold	$11,565,466 65
The residue, 39,416,047 acres, at $2.50	98,540,117 50
	110,105,584 15
Cost of 2,409¼ miles of road	93,526,668 86
Surplus	16,578,915 29

Or, taking the mean between the two, the following will result:

Value of lands sold and unsold, estimated as last above	$110,105,584 15
Cost of 2,409¼ miles road, at $33,407.65	80,495,732 75
Surplus	29,609,851 40

The undersigned suppose that all that could be asked of the Government in the exercise of the most prodigal generosity would be a sufficient amount of lands to enable the company to construct its road without costing it a single dollar of its own money, and as either of the foregoing hypotheses shows a surplus of many millions more than are necessary for that purpose, it has occurred to them that it might be to the interest of the people of the United States generally to look somewhat after that surplus, whatever it may be.

There is a further view to be taken of this subject, however. The undersigned have no means of knowing precisely how much land has been earned by the company, but estimating it at 30,000,000 acres, and appraising the portion unsold at $2.50 per acre, which the auditor supposes to be reasonable, and we have the following:

26,916,047 acres unsold, at $2.50	67,290,117 50

* * * * * * *

The president of the company, in response to the inquiries proposed by the committee, states the cost of constructing 1,203½ miles of completed road and 170 miles of finished grade at $51,019,402.99, and estimates the cost of constructing 1,206 miles yet to be built at $42,507,265.87, making $93,526,668.86 for 2,409¼ miles, or $38,815.79 per mile; while the auditor, in the report above referred to, after having, as he says, "made special inquiry in order to obtain the fullest information," and, as the undersigned understand, from data furnished by the company itself, estimates the entire cost of 2,700 miles at about $75,000,000, or at the rate of $28,000 per mile. After some remarks concerning the work which had already been done, he says:

The road yet to be constructed and accepted may be stated as follows, with the estimated cost of the same, namely:

Wisconsin division—Montreal River to Thompson Junction, 122 miles, at $20,000 per mile	$3,440,000 00
Missouri division—Missouri River to Yellowstone River, 217 miles, at $12,000 per mile, including an iron bridge over the Missouri River at Bismarck, the cost of which is estimated at nearly $1,000,000, or about	3,500,000 00
Yellowstone, Rocky Mountain, and Clark's Ford divisions—Yellowstone River to Lake Pend d'Oreille, 820 miles, at $30,000 per mile	24,600,000 00
Pend d'Oreille division—Lake Pend d'Oreille to Columbia River, 209 miles, at $21,500 per mile	4,500,000 00
Columbia River division—Junction of Columbia and Snake Rivers to Portland, 238 miles, at $31,500 per mile	7,500,000 00
Cascade Mountain division—Junction of Columbia and Snake Rivers to Puget Sound, 219 miles, at $30,000 per mile	6,570,000 00
Pacific division—Portland to Kalama, 40 miles, at $25,000 per mile.	1,000,000 00
Total road to be constructed, 1,865 miles, at an estimated average cost of $26,868 per mile, amounting to	50,110,000 00

The entire road when completed, 2,700 miles, will have cost about $75,000,000, or at the rate of $28,000 per mile. (Report Secretary of Interior, Vol. II, p. 575.)

Notwithstanding that due allowance is made by the auditor for the million-dollar bridge over the Mississippi River, as well as for those portions of the road of more difficult construction, it will be observed that the discrepancy between these two estimates is $10,815 per mile, or $26,048,732 for the whole line of 2,409¼ miles. Which is nearer correct may possibly be ascertained by a little closer analysis.

It appears that under all these estimates there is a fund of from sixteen to thirty million dollars over and above the entire cost of the construction of this railroad, valuing its lands at $2.50 per acre. I have been informed that there has been offered by an English syndicate an amount nearly equal to $300,000,000 for the land if the title can be confirmed. I do not know anything in regard to the correctness of this statement, but it comes to me from a gentleman connected with the Government and with the legislation of this body, and standing high in the confidence of the country, not as a matter of knowledge on his part, but as a matter of information which he has derived from persons of character and respectability.

Mr. GEORGE. It appears that the average sales of lands made by the Northern Pacific Railroad Company up to the present time come within a fraction of $4 per acre instead of $2.50, as estimated by the Senator.

Mr. CALL. Now, Mr. President, here is a great public question, a question involving the safety of the Republic, for both political parties have asserted, and it is plain to the eye of reason and argument that there can be no republican government if there be several hundred millions of dollars in value of the public land granted without consideration and as a gift to individuals. Upon that proposition there can be no kind of doubt or question that the people of this country will not sustain this Congress, and that it can not be covered up by any delusive and illusory propositions and arguments in regard to the consideration of the construction of a railroad. The necessity of railroads, the advantage to the public, the necessity of them to the civilization of the country is one thing in which all will acquiesce. The construction of them even by donations from the Federal Treasury is another thing, which does not concern that question. If it be expedient that the public policy shall be established of building these great public highways by donations from the public Treasury, none will contend but that it should be limited to the cost of the road. None will deny that in the case of the subsidy to the Northern Pacific Railroad it should be a lien upon the property returnable to the people in some shape or form. No one can justify the imposition by law being the direct effect of a grant of the public lands, of the burden of building a railroad upon the settlers upon the public lands, taking from them and their hard-earned toil the entire cost of a railroad, and then adding to it as much again as the cost paid by them, and then give this enormous sum of from sixteen to forty million dollars and the franchise and the completed railroad built by the labor and toil of these people to a few individuals who manipulate and control and own the stock of the road. That is the question that is presented from which there is no escape and no denial, and the question is how are we going to deal with this condition of things.

We are told by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] and others that there are differences of opinion in this body and that we must respect those differences of opinion, that this great public question must not be dealt with, taken hold of when it comes up, and settled and determined. I am in favor of a final settlement of this question. I have no enmity to corporations. I recognize them as an instrument of modern civilization. Associated effort, which can only be effective in the form of corporate authority, is the great instrument of modern civilization; but it is a distinct question whether they should be left without restraint, whether railroads should be built by impositions upon the settlers and the hard earnings of those who toil upon the public lands, and then give them away with two or three times their cost with the power of taxation of those people. That is a different and a distinct question. That has nothing to do with the utility of railroads, nothing to do with the policy of aiding them either by grants of public money or otherwise. It is that question of abuse of the legislative power of government in making donations of public lands and increasing the power of individuals to impose unreasonable burdens on the country which we have to deal with.

It is no answer to this line of argument to say that the public in carrying into operation a transportation system has been greatly benefited, that freights have been reduced, that transportation has been made easy. We have a right to demand that it shall be done with the least cost to the people consistent with a reasonable and liberal profit to those who engage in these enterprises.

How did that distinguished man, whose great capacity none will deny, the lamented President of the United States, deal with this question when it came before him? I refer to the late President Garfield. What did he say to the American people, with the authority of his great name and reputation, with regard to that question which the Senate proposes to set aside and not deal with as demanded by the people—the question of this vast corporate interest unrestrained by law, the question of the donation of millions upon millions of acres of the public land without reference to the cost of construction? President Garfield, in his address upon "The Future of the Republic," delivered before the literary societies of the Western Reserve College, of Hudson, Ohio, on the 2d of July, 1873, said:

All railroad experience has verified the truth of George Stephenson's aphorism, that, "when combination is possible, competition is impossible."

* * * * * * *

It is easy to see that we are repeating the experience of Great Britain on a vast scale. We have doubled our miles of railway in the last eight years. In the last two years we have built and put into operation 14,206 miles of road—more than a quarter of all we had in January, 1871.

The cost of constructing the roads we are now operating was $3,160,000,000; and during the year 1872 there were transported by rail more than 200,000,000 tons of freight. The process of consolidation of our leading lines of roads has been even more rapid than that of construction, and whatever dangers we may expect from the system are rapidly culminating to the point of full development. In antagonism to these and to similar combinations of capitalists are the combinations of laborers in trades unions and labor leagues. The indications are abundant that we shall soon see, set in full array, a conflict between capital and labor—a conflict between forces that ought not to be enemies, for labor is the creator of capital, which is only another name for accumulated labor. It is the duty of statesmanship to study the relation which the Government sustains and ought to sustain to this struggle, and to provide that it shall not be the partisan supporter of either combatant, but the just protector of both. The right to labor has not been sufficiently emphasized as one of the rights of man. The right to enjoy the fruits of labor has been better secured.

In view of the facts now set forth, the question returns, What is likely to be the effect of railway and other similar combinations upon our community and our political institutions? Is it true, as asserted by the British writer quoted above, that the state must soon recapture and control the railroads, or be captured and subjugated by them? Or do the phenomena we are witnessing indicate that general breaking up of the social and political order of modern nations so confidently predicted by a class of philosophers whose opinions have hitherto made but little impression on the public mind?

He then reads the declaration of Fourier sixty-six years ago:

These declarations read something like prophecy, so far as they relate to the effects of combined corporations. New mechanical forces have hastened the development of corporations since Fourier wrote. We need not take alarm at his prophecy of the speedy decay of civilization; but the analogy between the industrial condition of society at the present time and the feudalism of the Middle Ages is both striking and instructive. In the darkness and chaos of that period the feudal system was the first important step toward the organization of modern nations. Powerful chiefs and barons intrenched themselves in castles, and in return for submission and service gave to their vassals rude protection and ruder laws. But as the feudal chiefs grew in power and wealth, they became the oppressors of their people, taxed and robbed them at will, and finally, in their arrogance, defied the kings and emperors of the mediæval states. From their castles, planted on the great throughfares, they practiced the most capricious extortions on commerce and travel, and thus gave to modern language the phrase "to levy blackmail." The consolidation of our great industrial and commercial companies, the power they wield, and the relations they sustain to the States, and to the industry of the people, do not fall far short of Fourier's definition of commercial or industrial feudalism. The modern barons, more powerful than their military prototypes, own our greatest highways, and levy tribute at will upon all our vast industries. And, as the old feudalism was finally controlled and subordinated only by the combined efforts of the kings and the people of the free cities and towns, so our modern feudalism can be subordinated to the public good only by the great body of the people acting through their governments by wise and just laws.

States and communities have willingly and thoughtlessly conferred these great powers upon railways, and they must seek to rectify their own errors without injury to the industries they have encouraged.

Now, Mr. President, these words of Mr. Garfield, who unquestionably, whatever may be said of him, was a man of great thought, a man of profound reflection, come to us with great force when we are considering the question of dealing in our discretion with a grant of thirty-odd millions of acres of the public land over which Congress has plenary and absolute power for a railroad constructed outside the terms of the law with notice to every one that the law giving that grant had expired, for I undertake to say that there is not a single ground of argument to the contrary.

It has been said that no lawyer would express an opinion that this grant was not vested up to the point of the present completion of the railroad company. Why, there is not a decision of the Supreme Court and there is nothing but a single decision of the district court in Oregon and one or two others that Congress has abdicated its sovereign power of legislation and created a vested right, in defiance of the power and the duty of Congress, to an empire of public land under an act which in express terms required that if a certain thing was not done, to wit, the completion of the road by a certain time, it should be without force and effect, or as the Supreme Court says, in the decision that I have before me, in words the law is a law as well as a grant and the grant is controlled by the law. Without the law it has no existence, and the law says it shall exist only upon condition, a condition which was never performed, and to this force and effect is every word of every decision, and the single fact that the Supreme Court has said that the words "there shall be and is hereby granted" create a present interest is the only foundation of an argument without reason and without countenance in the authorities which seeks to overturn the fact that the law controls the grant and that it is an act of sovereign legislative power for a great public purpose limited by time, because it is absurd to say that to do that a hundred years hence which to do to-morrow would be of great public service would be a compliance with the public necessities and the public uses. Therefore time is of the essence of the law, made so expressly by the reason of the act itself, sustained by the reason of the law and by the public policy upon which it was based. Therefore I undertake to say that neither can there be an argument or pretense of an argument or reason for the assertion that the power of Congress is not absolute and discretionary over this subject.

I undertake further to say that it is a demonstrable fact that if we are to aid this railroad corporation, if this franchise to this great corporation of the road built by it does not furnish a compensation for its cost, we had better pay for it out of the public Treasury and pay the reasonable and proper and just cost of the construction of the road than to impose upon the people of this country the burden of paying two or three times its value, or to impose it upon that portion of the people of this country who live in Oregon, who live in Idaho, who live in the States and Territories along the line of the road. The policy of this law was to say before that country was occupied "we will give this land if you will construct this road within the time limited," and in doing that from this enormous empire, greater than has been acquired by conquest almost at any period of the history of the world by the armies of one nation from another—from this great empire of public land, this act of Congress making the grant undertook to say there should be paid out of the labor and toil of the people who settled upon it whatever might be demanded as the cost of the construction of the road, which even at the present value of this land would realize to the grantees probably $100,000,000 more than the entire cost of construction of the railroad.

Certainly the intendment of the act was that it should be a reasonable cost of construction, but, as Mr. Garfield said, these grants were made unreasonably, recklessly, without the limitations which sound policy would have imposed, and from the report to the two Houses of Congress the report of the president of the company, the report of the auditor, and in estimating as the committee of the House did the mean between the two reports they find that in addition to paying the entire cost of the construction of the road there was a difference of from sixteen to thirty or forty million dollars of profit over and above the estimated cost of the road, even taking the completed portion of it, and that was at the valuation of two dollars and a half an acre for the land.

Mr. GEORGE. The entire cost of the road has been estimated by the Commissioner of Railroads as $75,000,000; the whole land grant, 42,000,000 acres at $4 an acre, would be $168,000,000; deducting from that $75,000,000, the cost of the road, would leave $93,000,000.

Mr. CALL. Now, Mr. President, it can not be disguised that what is proposed and what is sought to be done is a gift of an amount estimated from $16,000,000 to $93,000,000 to some few persons, and that this is sought to be covered up under the pretense of vested rights—vested rights under a law that gave notice to every one that they should have no existence until the condition upon which the grant was made was performed. Now, what does the Supreme Court of the United States say on that matter? The law as I have said required the completion of this railroad by 1879. It has been said that there is an equity that arises against the United States because it was not enforced, because Congress took no action, that the law, which is mandatory, which by its very nature can not be a law except it is absolute and is notice to every one, was set aside and repealed. That is not the nature of law. It is not permissive, but it is commanding. It is an exercise of sovereign power; it admits of no distinction and of no qualification. The law said there shall be this grant made on condition that this road is completed by a certain time, and not otherwise.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. May I ask the Senator from Florida a question right there?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Suppose after the time has expired for the completion of the whole road as designated in the act, as has been stated here—I do not know that it is correct—after the 4th of July, 1879, that then the Congress of the United States instead of declaring a forfeiture as they undoubtedly had the right to do at that time, proceeded to pass an act granting the same company further privileges in connection with the road by giving them the right of way through Indian reservations and all that, what effect, if any, in the judgment of the Senator from Florida would that have on the question now under consideration?

Mr. CALL. It would depend entirely upon the language used, and the purpose as declared for which such extension was made. The mere fact of perfecting its right to go through an Indian territory would have nothing to do with the land grant. It would not touch the question. It could not destroy the effect of the exercise of sovereign, absolute legislative power in the original grant. The mere fact that you extended the road and provided for it, and by legislation effected its extension through an Indian territory, would have no connection with the grant of lands or money or anything else with which it was to be done.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I wish to ask one other question, if the Senator will allow me.

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I am not contending to the contrary, for the present at least. I simply wish to have the views of the Senator upon that question and upon some other questions which have been suggested in reference to this matter. There is one other question I should like to ask the Senator and to have his views upon.

Mr. CALL. Certainly; I am very glad to hear the Senator.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. It is this: Can there be such a thing as a waiver in law upon the part of the General Government in reference to a land grant by failing to proceed to take advantage of the failure to complete the road within the time and declare a forfeiture?

Mr. CALL. I think not. I think such a thing as that would be a clear denial of the force and effect of the law. Nothing can waive a law or repeal a law except the sovereign legislative power that enacted it, and which by constitutional authority has express power to do it. But that question has been decided in The United States vs. Clarke (8 Peters, 436), confirmed and affirmed by repeated decisions subsequently, and especially in the case from which I read, The United States vs. Thompson (98 United States Supreme Court Reports), where the court then said:

The United States possess other attributes of sovereignty resting also upon the basis of universal consent and recognition. They can not be sued without their consent. (United States vs. Clarke, 8 Pet., 436.) If they sue, and a balance is found in favor of the defendant, no judgment can be rendered against them, either for such balance or in any case for costs. (United States vs. Boyd, 5 How., 29; Reside vs. Walker, 11 id., 272.) A judgment in their favor can not be enjoined. (Hill vs. United States, 9 id., 386.) Laches, however gross, can not be imputed to them. (United States vs. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat, 720.) There is no presumption of payment against them arising from lapse of time. (United States vs. Williams, supra.) They can maintain a suit in their own name upon a non-negotiable claim assigned to them. (United States vs. White, 2 Hill, N. Y., 59.)

The rule of nullum tempus occurrit regi has existed as an element of the English law from a very early period. It is discussed in Bracton, and has come down to the present time. It is not necessary to advert to the qualifications which successive Parliaments have applied to it.

The common law fixed no time as to the bringing of actions. Limitations derive their authority from statutes. The king was held never to be included, unless expressly named. No laches was imputable to him. These exemptions were founded upon considerations of public policy. It was deemed important that, while the sovereign was engrossed by the cares and duties of his office, the public should not suffer by the negligence of his servants. "In a representative government, where the people do not and can not act in a body, where their power is delegated to others and must of necessity be exercised by them, if exercised at all, the reason for applying these principles is equally cogent."

That answers the Senator from Oregon. If no laches can be imputed to the Government, if the negligence of the servants of the Government can not affect the law, but it stands until repealed, where can the waiver be? A law by your Constitution is repealed, is deprived of its force and effect, only by a certain exercise of sovereign legislative power. It can not be modified, it can not be diminished, it can not be altered in its force or operation except constitutionally by the exercise of the sovereign legislative power that enacted it. Therefore, if it can not be altered or affected or qualified or repealed, there can be no waiver of it. Considerations of equity address themselves to the general legislative discretion of Congress.

But what did Mr. Garfield say upon the subject of this question of vested rights which are so often interposed to deny and qualify the exercise of the sovereign legislative power of the Government? The subject is not by any means affected or concerned by this question, because it does not arise here. I quote Mr. Garfield, because these questions are being forced upon the American mind. The very existence of property depends upon its use in such form that it shall not burden the people of the country with such taxes and such impositions as will make life uncomfortable, as will deprive it of ease and comfort. The existence of corporate power and property depends, as he says, upon wise and just and temperate legislation by the Congress of the United States and by the State Legislatures within their respective spheres. He says:

Since the dawn of history the great thoroughfares have belonged to the people—have been known as the king's highways or the public highways, and have been open to the free use of all, on payment of a small, uniform tax or toll to keep them in repair. But now the most perfect and by far the most important roads known to mankind are owned and managed as private property by a comparatively small number of private citizens. In all its uses the railroad is the most public of all our roads; and in all the objects to which its work relates the railway corporation is as public as any organization can be. But, in the start, it was labeled a private corporation; and, so far as its legal status is concerned, it is now grouped with eleemosynary institutions and private charities, and enjoys similar immunities and exemptions. It remains to be seen how long the community will suffer itself to be the victim of an abstract definition.

It will be readily conceded that a corporation is strictly and really private when it is authorized to carry on such a business as a private citizen may carry on. But when the State has delegated to a corporation the sovereign right of eminent domain—the right to take from the private citizen, without his consent, a portion of his real estate to build its structure across farm, garden, and lawn, into and through, over or under the blocks, squares, streets, churches, and dwellings of incorporated cities and towns, across navigable rivers, and over and along public highways—it requires a stretch of the common imagination, and much refinement and subtlety of the law, to maintain the old fiction that such an organization is not a public corporation.

In the famous Dartmouth College case it was decided, in 1819, by the Supreme Court of the United States that the charter of Dartmouth College is a contract between the State and the corporation which the Legislature can not alter without the consent of the corporation; and that any such alteration is void, being in conflict with that clause of the Constitution of the United States which forbids a State to make any law impairing the obligation of contracts. This decision has stood for more than half a century as a monument of judicial learning and the great safeguard of vested rights. But Chief-Justice Marshall pronounced this decision ten years before the steam-railway was born, and it is clear he did not contemplate the class of corporations that have since come into being. But year by year the doctrine of that case has been extended to the whole class of private corporations, including railroad and telegraph companies.

But few of the States, in their early charters to railroads, reserved any effectual control of the operations of the corporations they created. In many instances, like that of the Illinois Central charter, the right to amend was not reserved. In most States each Legislature has narrowed and abridged the powers of its successors, and enlarged the powers of the corporations; and these, by the strong grip of the law and in the name of private property and vested rights, hold fast all they have received. By these means not only corporations but the vast railroad and telegraph systems have virtually passed from the control of the State. It is painfully evident, from the experience of the last few years, that the efforts of the States to regulate their railroads have amounted to but little more than feeble annoyance. In many cases the corporations have treated such efforts as impertinent, intermeddling, and have brushed away the legislative restrictions as easily as Gulliver broke the cords with which the Lilliputians attempted to bind him. In these contests the corporations have become conscious of their strength and have entered upon the work of controlling the States. Already they have captured several of the oldest and strongest of them; and these discrowned sovereigns now follow in chains the triumphal chariot of their conquerors. And this does not imply that merely the officers and representatives of States have been subjected to the railways, but that the corporations have grasped the sources and fountains of power, and controlled the choice of both officers and representatives.

The private corporation has another great advantage over the municipal corporation. The jurisdiction of the latter is confined to its own territory; but by the recent constructions and devices of the law, a private corporation, though it has no soul, no conscience, and can commit no crime, is yet a citizen of the State that creates it, and can make and execute contracts with individuals and corporations of other States. Thus the way has been opened to those vast consolidations which have placed the control of the whole system in the hands of a few and have developed the Charlemagnes and Cæsars of our internal commerce.

In addition to these external conquests, the great managers have in many cases grasped the private property of the corporations themselves; and the stocks which represent the investment have become mere counters in the great gambling-houses of Wall street, where the daily ebb and flow of the stock market sweeps and tosses the business and trade of the continent.

This is the answer which has been made by a great leader of the Republican party. This was the answer which the platforms of the Republican and Democratic parties gave to the question of leaving this vast unearned land grant in the possession of a few individuals. No proconsular power in the Roman Empire was ever so great as the dominion of the thirty-odd millions of acres of magnificently fertile land, to be inhabited by millions of the people of this country, in defiance of the public law of the country which dedicates that land to homestead settlement, to actual settlement, which recognizes the principle that the land of the country belongs to the people who toil and work upon it, which the public interest demands shall be in their hands with the least possible cost. This is the answer that is given to the proposition now made, which is involved in the Senate's turning its back now upon the proposition of forfeiture and attempting to appease the public mind by a forfeiture of an insignificant portion of the territory, not desired by the corporation, over which it has built no road, while the great practical question before the country, Shall the unearned grant, unearned within the time specified in the act, be forfeited, is answered by non-action and by indirect efforts to confirm it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. Pending the consideration of that bill I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the message from the House of Representatives in regard to the District of Columbia appropriation bill.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Florida may proceed with his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] has the floor upon the pending bill.

Mr. PLUMB. So far as I am concerned, when this conference matter is out of the way I shall have no objection myself to the Senator from Florida proceeding with his remarks within some reasonable limitation.

Mr. HARRIS. A conference report is always in order.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATION BILL.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the action of the House of Representatives on the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, non-concurring in certain amendments of the Senate to the bill, and asking for a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Mr. PLUMB. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments to the bill disagreed to by the House of Representatives, and accede to the request of the House for a conference.

The motion was agreed to.

By unanimous consent, the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate; and Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL were appointed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GEORGE. I ask the consent of the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] and the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] be allowed to proceed and finish his remarks.

Mr. DOLPH. I wish to make a statement only. I have given way the third time when I had the floor to conclude my remarks begun some time since. I have no objection to giving way to the Senator from Florida to finish his remarks to-day, provided the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. VAN WYCK] who has charge of the pending bill is willing that that should be done. But I do not propose to give away the whole of the afternoon, as I have other arrangements.

Mr. GEORGE. I only ask that the Senator from Florida be allowed to finish his remarks.

Mr. VAN WYCK. The bill has been up a great many times for consideration. It seems to me that it ought to be disposed of. If the Senator from Florida is anxious to finish his remarks to-day, of course I shall not insist on going on with the unfinished business now.

Mr. CALL. I had no idea that I was interfering with anybody's time. I supposed the bill on which I was speaking had come up in regular order for discussion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. It will come up in regular order to-morrow morning, if it would suit the Senator from Florida as well to finish to-morrow.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not wish the Senator from Florida to understand that I am interposing an objection to his proceeding now.

Mr. CALL. Certainly not. I appreciate it entirely. I shall not occupy a great deal more of the time of the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the unfinished business the Senator from Florida is understood to have unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the conclusion of his remarks.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I have said that there was no ground whatever, in my opinion, for any question as to the absolute and unquestioned power of Congress over this subject. In the case of The Dubuque and Pacific Railroad Company vs. Litchfield (23 Howard, 88), the Supreme Court, in deciding the case, say:

All grants of this description are strictly construed against the grantees; nothing passes but what is conveyed in clear and explicit language; and as the rights here claimed are derived entirely from the act of Congress, the donation stands on the same footing of a grant by the public to a private company, the terms of which must be plainly expressed in the statute; and if not thus expressed, they can not be implied. (Charles River Bridge vs. Warren Bridge, 11 Peters, 420.)

There can be no laches against the Government. There can be no implied power or interest against the public. There can be no implied extension of a grant not warranted by its express terms. That has been the decision not only in this country but in every other country. If you will go back to the days of the civil law you will find in every system of law the same proposition laid down, and laid down as the only security on the part of the commonwealth, of the people, that their constitutional rights, their fundamental rights will not be taken form them by the negligence, the laches, or the failure of their servants to perform the obligations imposed upon them by the law. It would be in effect to maintain that the force and effect of law be given as against the public right by the failure of a public servant to perform his duty. So the Supreme Court, in Gaussen vs. The United States (in 97 United States Supreme Court Reports, being the eighth volume of Otto), say:

But laches of the officers or agents of the Government is confessedly no bar to the assertion of its rights. This is admitted by the plaintiff in error, and it has not been contended in argument, as it could not have been successfully, that delay or neglect in prosecuting its claims against the co-sureties of the defendant's testator is any bar to this suit.

I think it is scarcely necessary, as this subject has been so fully and thoroughly investigated, to cite any further authority. In 21 Wallace, in the celebrated case of Schulenberg vs. Harriman, the Supreme Court, in laying down the doctrine on which this power must be exercised, say:

In what manner the reserved rights of the grantor for breach of the condition must be asserted so as to restore the estate, depends upon the character of the grant. If it be a private grant that right must be asserted by entry or its equivalent. If the grant be a public one it must be asserted by judicial proceedings authorized by law, the equivalent of an inquest of office found at common law, finding the fact of forfeiture, and adjudging the restoration of the estate on that ground, or there must be some legislative assertion of ownership of the property for breach of condition, such as an act declaring the possession and appropriation of the property, or that it be offered for sale or settlement.

In an earlier case, United States vs. Repentigny (5 Wallace, 258), the court say:

The mode of ascertaining or assuming the forfeited grant is subject to the legislative authority of the Government. It may be after judicial investigation, or by taking possession directly under the authority of the Government, without these preliminary proceedings. In the present instance we have seen the laws have been extended over this tract, the lands surveyed and put on sale, and confirmed to the occupants or purchasers, and in the mean time an opportunity given to all settlers and claimants to come in before a board of commissioners and exhibit their claims. This is a legislative equivalent for reunion [re-entry?] by office found.

If this doctrine be true, if it be true that the law be as Blackstone declares it to be, an exercise of the power of a sovereign, mandatory and absolute in its nature, if it be true that a law can be repealed only by the sovereign legislative power that enacted it, then there is no ground or reason for holding that there can be a waiver, that there can be a modification of the terms of that law save by the sovereign legislative power. There can be no doubt of the proposition that, however present may be the interest vested in the grantee, it is only the interest created by the law; it is only the creature of the law that has life; it is not a child born without law and living in defiance of law.

We would scarcely call that reasoning which says that the law can be waived by the neglect of the executive department of the Government or by the neglect of the Congress to act in the mode prescribed by the Constitution. The law must stand, if it be a law, until it is repealed, and there can be no ideas, no reasoning in contravention of this proposition.

Then if it be true that there can be no laches as against the Government, and reasons of grave public policy demand it, if it be true as was asserted by Mr. Garfield, by the Republican party, by the Democratic party, that the interests of this country demand that the public lands shall be given to actual settlers, that vast empires shall not be concentrated in individual hands, if it be true as a matter of economy that when railroads are built and required to be constructed within a definite and given time aided by grants of public land or public money, one hundred years is not a compliance with the grant when ten years is specified, if it be true that within ten or twenty years in this Republic a territory which was a wilderness when a grant was made may become a vast industrial community with thousands and tens of thousands of productive laborers and industries upon it, if it be true that it would be a stultification and an act of folly to say that that might be done in twenty years which the law requires to be done in ten years, when a vast population had in the course of events, from economic causes, been transplanted upon that territory, and that still the letter and the spirit of the law requires that it should be done—even if all this were true, I stand here to-day in my place to say that I should prefer to vote from the public Treasury the money to pay the reasonable and just cost of construction of any railroad rather than to impose the burdens of an unlimited purchase-price and an unlimited taxation in the interest of securities issued far beyond the just and proper cost of construction, or in the interest of giving value to the fraudulent and spurious securities which are proved by the report made and discussed here in this body within ten days upon the interstate-commerce bill, alluded to in the speech of the Senator from Texas, to be between $3,000,000,000 and $4,000,000,000 of fictitious value with a power of taxation upon all production and upon all transportation.

I have no hesitation in saying that the neglect or failure to forfeit these unearned land grants will be directly in the interest and for the protection of this vast mass of three or four thousand millions of fraudulent securities, fictitious securities at least, but fraudulent in the sense that they are without real value and carrying with them a living power of taxation of $400,000,000 annually upon the people of the United States.

PRESIDENTIAL APPROVALS.

A message from the President of the United States, by Mr. O. L. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries, announced that the President had yesterday approved and signed the following acts:

An act (S. 670) to increase the pension of the widow of the late Commander T. A. Craven;

An act (S. 91) to amend an act entitled "An act to grant a right of way for a railroad and telegraph lines through the lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Nations of Indians to the Saint Louis and San Francisco Railway Company, and for other purposes;"

An act (S. 788) granting a pension to John L. Bruce;

An act (S. 895) granting a pension to Rachel Fleming Cellar;

An act (S. 1124) granting a pension to William Bethuren;

An act (S. 1169) granting a pension to John S. Bridges;

An act (S. 1235) granting an increase of pension to Joseph W. Rhinehalt;

An act (S. 1257) granting a pension to Henry Shively;

An act (S. 1348) granting a pension to Sarah E. Henry;

An act (S. 1770) granting a pension to J. H. Thornbury;

An act (S. 2022) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Hattie A. Burnett; and

An act (S. 1357) granting a pension to Sarah A. Thomas.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD LAND GRANTS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HARRIS in the chair). The Senate resumes the consideration of unfinished business.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes, the pending question being on the amendment proposed by Mr. HOAR to add:

That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person; and any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States, without any act of entry or other process whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. DOLPH. Mr. President, the importance of the bill under consideration is my excuse for occupying any more of the time of the Senate upon it. When I had the floor before upon this bill I stated that I had joined in the report of the committee; that I believed some legislation was necessary to make the lands granted to railroad companies taxable in cases where they had been improved and made productive, and that this bill appeared to be the best measure that the wisdom of the committee could devise, or at least that they could agree upon. I detailed the process by which railroad lands are segregated from the public domain. I referred to the fact that a grant of lands in place does not carry with it all the odd sections within the limits of the grant, but that there were certain exceptions in all the railroad grants, such as mineral lands, lands within Indian reservations and military reservations, lands which had been previously granted, lands which had been occupied under the homestead and pre-emption laws and were therefore separated and withdrawn from the great body of the public lands; that before it could be determined that any section or legal subdivision of public lands was included in the grant to a railroad company it was necessary to have an official segregation; that this was done by a process called "listing," a selection of the lands supposed to be embraced within the grant, in the local land office, from the maps and records of the office; that when these lists were made up they were sent to the Department of the Interior to receive the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and until that approval was had the lands could not be said to have been officially ascertained to belong to the railroad company.

I referred to a report recently made by the Secretary of the Interior in regard to the number of acres of land which had been surveyed within the limits of the Northern Pacific grant, the number of acres of land which had been selected, and the number of acres which had been approved. It there appears that out of about 21,000,000 acres of land surveyed within the limits of the grant there had been selected by that company something over 11,000,000 acres, of which only a trifle over 700,000 acres had been approved to the company. Evidently the Department of the Interior was not willing to proceed with the certification of these lands while the question of the right of forfeiture and the question of the title of the company was unsettled. I also said that we were proposing in this case in effect to turn over the power, which under the present laws and regulations of the Interior Department is exercised by the Secretary of the Interior, to the local assessors and to permit them to determine for themselves, for the purposes of taxation, what lands are the lands of the railroad company.

Now, while this may be the best measure that can be secured, it will be apparent to every one, I think, that it will not be executed without difficulties; and I desire to call attention to the provisions of this bill, and especially the attention of those Senators who contend that the entire land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company and of other railroad companies which have failed to construct their entire roads within the time limited in the granting acts can be forfeited. Commencing in the twelfth line of this bill is the following proviso:

Provided further, That this act shall apply only to lands situated opposite to and conterminous with completed portions of said roads, and in organized counties.

The effect of that provision is plainly that the lands which are situated opposite to and conterminous with the completed portions of the road may be taxed as the lands of the railroad company; and that proposition, in my judgment, is entirely incompatible with the idea that those lands are forfeitable or will be forfeited by Congress notwithstanding the provision contained in the third section of the bill that this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare forfeiture of any lands so granted. For my part I do not object to that provision, because I believe, as I stated on a former occasion, that whenever a section of road under these grants has been completed and commissioners have been appointed and have examined it, and they have reported that it has been constructed in accordance with the terms of the granting act and the President has accepted it as such, the grant for that section becomes absolute, is no longer defeasible, and is beyond the power of Congress. Therefore, as I say, I find no fault with this provision, but I call attention to it as proceeding upon a theory entirely incompatible with that advocated by the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL] when on the floor to-day.

There were before the committee two distinct propositions. One was a proposition to declare by law that these railroad lands should be taxed, or might be taxed by the States, Territories, and other municipalities in which they are situated. Another proposition, and the one which prevailed, was for the United States to provide by law that the lien of the Government for the cost of selecting, surveying, and patenting should not prevent the taxation of these lands for local purposes. There were three ways to accomplish this. It was proposed that the United States should repeal the act or acts which required the railroad companies to pay these costs, they being trifling in amount, and thus remove this obstacle to the taxation of the lands. That the committee were unwilling to do. It was said that that would be, in effect, giving so much money to the railroad companies.

There was another proposition, which was to provide that these costs should no longer be a lien upon the lands, but that the railroad companies if they did not pay them within a given time should be sued by the Government and judgment obtained and the costs collected by legal process. The majority of the committee were not willing to waive the lien of the Government. Consequently the other proposition was adopted, that is, to provide that the United States would step out of the way so far as its lien was concerned, and remove that obstacle to the taxation of these lands, and also provide that if the costs of surveying and selecting and patenting were not paid within a reasonable time after demand, it should be the duty of the Attorney-General to sue the parties liable for them.

As I said before, the execution of this bill will be accompanied with difficulties. One objection in the opinion of some no doubt will be that it in effect declares that the lands which lie conterminous to the completed road shall be taxable as the lands of the company. Another objection to the bill is that it allows every local assessor, every clerk of a school district whose duty it is to make an assessment for school purposes, every assessor of a city or incorporated municipality, every assessor of a county, in any of the States or Territories where these lands lie, to determine for himself whether they are included in or excepted from the operation of the granting act, whether they are mineral lands, whether they are lands within the limits of reservations, or whether they had been sold previous to the passage of the act, so that the company does not take them under its grant; in a word, to determine whether the lands are or are not the property of the railroad company for the purpose of taxation. Of course mistakes will be made; lands which belong to the Government will be assessed, taxed, and sold, and there will be more or less confusion growing out of the exercise of the taxing power before the railroad lands have been officially segregated and identified.

There is another matter to which I desire to call attention, and I can not better illustrate it than by reference to the grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company in Montana. The road of that company in Montana is about 800 miles long. I am told the amount of their grant is about 21,000,000 acres in Montana alone, and that of the 21,000,000 acres there is not exceeding a million and a half acres that is of any value for agricultural purposes. That being the case, there must be a large amount of land in that Territory that the company will probably not pay taxes upon. That land will undoubtedly be assessed as fast as it is surveyed. There is no reason why the surveys should be delayed, because as fast as the surveys are made the company is required to pay the costs of survey, and that vast body of land will within the near future undoubtedly be put up for sale, and the best portions of the lands will be purchased by people who know where the valuable sections and smaller subdivisions lie; and I fear that the result will be that large bodies of these lands will pass into the hands of private owners.

A much better plan, in my judgment, than that proposed by the bill under consideration would have been to have settled this question as to whether the lands which lie adjacent to constructed roads belong to the company or not, and to have authorized the Secretary of the Interior to approve to the companies lists of such lands as belong to them. That would at once make over 11,000,000 acres of the lands of the Northern Pacific Railroad Company taxable without question, because they would be patented at once; and then if the companies entitled to these grants would not proceed to select their lands in the manner provided by the regulations of the Interior Department within a reasonable time, to provide that they should within twelve months or some other reasonable time after the surveys are extended proceed to select their lands under certain penalties for default to be provided.

Those two simple provisions would have met and solved this whole question of taxation and would have permitted these lands to be segregated and officially identified by the Secretary of the Interior.

There was no provision of law requiring the Northern Pacific to pay the costs of selecting, surveying, and patenting its lands until 1870. Whatever may be the hardship to the company, whatever may be the disadvantages to the Government, whatever may be the effect of this bill in enabling persons and corporations to obtain title to large tracts of land covered by railroad grants and on which the company do not choose to pay taxes, the company and the Government will be placed, if this bill becomes a law, in precisely the same attitude toward this question of taxation as they occupied prior to the act of 1870; and it is upon that ground that I joined in the report of the committee upon this bill, although I think in the interest of the Government and in the interest of settlers something better might have been proposed.

Now, I desire to call attention for a moment—as I am about to leave the Senate Chamber to attend a meeting of the Committe on Commerce that has the river and harbor bill under consideration—to the amendment offered by the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR] and adopted by the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. This amendment proposes—

That lands purchased by the Government shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as now provided by the laws relating thereto.

I suggested the other day, and it seemed to meet with no opposition, that there should be inserted in this amendment the words "and not redeemed," because under the laws of perhaps all the States and Territories there is a certain time given for redemption from tax-sales of land, and if the owner comes forward and redeems the land within the time and before the deed is made to the purchaser the title does not pass, and in such a case we ought not to provide that the land should be restored to the public domain.

I should like to inquire of the Senator what he means by the word "preferred"—"preferred purchaser?" "Lands sold for taxes" are sold at public sale, and are sold to the highest bidder generally, the least subdivision which will pay all the taxes assessed against the individual owning the land being sold. I think the word "preferred" here would be inoperative.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not think it important that the word remain there. It was only designed in case there were not purchasers that the Government should take the land. I am not particular about the word remaining.

Mr. DOLPH. Now, I will make a further suggestion. If there is any question about the power of the United States to purchase land, it would require an amendment of the Constitution to authorize it. I do not think there is any question.

Mr. BLAIR. We purchased Louisiana.

Mr. DOLPH. We purchased Louisiana; we purchased Florida; we purchased a portion of Mexico; we purchased Alaska.

Mr. BLAIR. And we have purchased sites for public buildings.

Mr. DOLPH. I do not think there is any question about the power; but what I am coming to now is that the Senator's amendment, which I believe to be a good one if it is put into a shape to accomplish the purpose designed, does not accomplish it. It provides that at a sale of land under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser. The United States has power to purchase now, but if we want the United States to purchase we must authorize some one to act for the United States and to use the money of the United States for the purpose of making the purchase. The criticism I would make on the Senator's amendment is that to accomplish his purpose he should authorize the Secretary of the Interior or some other representative of the Government to purchase these lands for the United States, instead of providing that the United States may become a purchaser, which we know they may do if they have the constitutional power. We must authorize some one to act for the United States, to use the money of the United States to make the purchase, in order to make the amendment operative. I submit that for the consideration of the Senator from New Hampshire.

Now, I desire to say something in regard to an amendment that is to be proposed. The amendment I refer to is the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], which is:

> That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person; and any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States without any act of entry or other process whatever.

I called attention a moment ago to the theory of this bill which is not to providea ffirmatively that lands in this State or that Territory shall be taxable, or that an equitable interest in lands shall be taxable, or a legal interest only shall be taxable; but the theory of the bill is for the United States to get out of the way, to provide that its lien for the costs of surveying, &c., shall not be an obstacle in the way of the local taxation of these lands. What does the Senator from Massachusetts by his amendment propose to do? He proposes to step in and deal with these lands as if they were still the lands of the Government, as if we were by this bill authorizing States and Territories to tax the Government lands, and he proposes to attach a condition to the fee of these lands, a condition which is to run with the land forever, that at tax-sales which may be held under the laws of the States and Territories, no man shall purchase more than 640 acres, and no man shall thereafter acquire more than 640 acres of the lands so sold.

Why, sir, if we were simply providing in this bill (which we are not) that the lands of the United States shall be taxed, submitting these lands to taxation, treating them as lands of the United States, I do not believe it would be competent for Congress to attach a condition which would restrict their alienation for all time to come. But when we consider the fact that we are not by this bill attempting to provide that the lands of the railroad company shall be taxed, or how they shall be taxed, or how they shall be sold, or in what quantities, the want of authority on the part of Congress to enact such a provision appears to me to be still more apparent. By what warrant of the Constitution would Congress undertake to say that the lands of a railroad company in a State or Territory sold for taxes should only be purchased in quantities of 640 acres? While if Congress had power to make such a provision it would remedy one of the difficulties I have already referred to that may grow out of this bill it is clear to me there is no power on the part of Congress to do it. We must treat these lands as the lands of the railroad companies and say they may be taxed so far as the interests of the Government in them is concerned, or treat them as the lands of the Government and say they shall not be taxed.

Does any Senator suppose that if we provide that all the lands heretofore granted to railroad companies which are conterminous with completed roads shall be taxed and may be sold and the purchaser shall pay the costs of surveying and selecting and patenting them Congress is ever going afterward to turn around and say, "Notwithstanding we have said these lands may be taxed as the lands of the railroad companies and may be sold and the purchasers may step in and discharge the obligations of the railroad company and receive the title to the lands instead of the company we are going to turn around and forfeit them or attempt to forfeit them?" Congress would not be guilty of such an inconsistency. So I say to those Senators who contend for such a power in Congress that this bill proceeds upon entirely a different theory from that.

That is all I desire to say. The bill is important. Some legislation is necessary. This bill may be the best that can be had. I think not. I think there might have been a better bill; but I am ready to vote for this. I desired, however, that the Senate should understand all the difficulties which, in my judgment, will arise under this bill in its execution. The proper thing to do would be to deal with the question of forfeiture at once, and determine the question of title, and thus settle the question of taxation. The lands of the railroad companies will be taxed when they obtain title. Congress ought to direct the Secretary of the Interior to proceed to certify the lands to the companies which in the judgment of Congress belong to them, and thus make them subject to taxation, and then if necessary to require by stringent legislation the companies that do not select their lands within a reasonable time to make the selections. That was in my opinion what should have been done, but that was not the opinion of a majority of the committee.

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate on this bill. I do not think there will be any serious difference of opinion about the propriety of its passage, but it is proper that I should state the facts upon which it is based and the theory of the committee in regard to it.

In reference to the most considerable railroad grants in the United States, those to the Union and Central Pacific Railroads and to the Northern Pacific Railroad, there was a reservation practically of title in the United States until such time as the railroad companies should pay for the cost of surveying and selecting and conveying the lands to the companies. That reservation in the case of the Union and Central Pacific was contained in the twenty-first section of the act of 1864, being the amendatory act under which the railroads were subsequently constructed. In the case of the Northern Pacific road it was not inserted in the grant, but was inserted in a subsequent act of Congress. In the case of the Union Pacific I have no doubt it was designed to cast a burden upon the company by requiring them to do that which but for the legislation would not otherwise be done, and would have resulted in loss to the Treasury; but it practically resulted in their favor, because it enabled them by withholding this small payment of about four or five dollars to the quarter-section to prevent the payment of taxes in the localities in which the lands were situated. Originally it was held otherwise, and in the State of Kansas the lands were taxed; but in the case of the Railroad Company vs. Prescott, treasurer of Lee County, the Supreme Court decided that so long as the surveying fees remained unpaid there was a title in the Government which could not be subjected to taxation, and recently the Supreme Court has rendered a similar decision in the case of the Northern Pacific lands.

It therefore appears that the Government of the United States for the purpose of recovering to itself this surveying fee is preventing the taxation of these lands by the local authorities of the localities in which the lands are situated. This has been going on for a long time, and it is time that the lien of the Government was lifted or that something was done which would permit these lands to be subjected to taxation as other lands are.

The statement has been made by the Senator from Oregon and by others that the Government itself has been to some extent derelict because it has not certified these lands to the railroad companies, and that therefore the companies have no title—I mean in cases where they have tendered the fees—and that there has been no title which could be made the subject of taxation, and that as long as the Government was thus delinquent it was not fair to regard the railroad companies as delinquent. But the fact is that notwithstanding the lack of certification, whether it be due to the failure of the railroad companies or to that of the Government, the railroad companies have sold their lands far in advance of any payment by them of fees or any tender by them of fees, and far in advance also of any certification by the Government. Therefore they have had the use practically of these lands for the purposes of sale.

I am not aware that in any case they have withheld the lands from sale. On the completed portions of their railroad they have mortgaged them all in advance, and therefore had the benefit of the credit which the lands gave them for the purpose of floating the bonds which they put upon the roads.

Then, as I stated, in addition they have been able to find and have found purchasers for these lands far in advance of any certification. So they have been in actual possession for all practical purposes of the lands just as completely as though they had a patent.

In this condition of things the Government of the United States is preventing the localities in which the lands lie from levying upon them the taxes which they ought to bear as their fair proportion of the burdens of the Government which protects them in the exercise of their property. And by reason of this withholding by the maintenance of this Government lien the effect is, as these lands have not been subject to taxation, that the taxes on the lands of private persons in these localities have been correspondingly enhanced.

This bill proposes to take away this Government lien as a barrier to the taxation of the lands which have been granted to the railroad companies. It does not deal with the question directly as to the authority of the localities in which they lie to levy taxes when the Government lien is removed. It simply takes that lien out of the way and says that whatever authority exists independently of that lien may be exercised by these different localities.

Mr. President, there are other questions that will naturally come up in the course of the exercise of jurisdiction by the localities in which these lands are located, which may affect in some way the validity of these grants. They are liable to affect not only the validity of the grants, but the extent of the grants where there is no question about their validity. Naturally the question will come up when you get on to the borders of this land as to whether a particular tract was included within the grant or not. That is a question which the committee did not feel like entering into. It is a question about which Congress can not act unless it is ready to take up and adjust every single question that can arise growing out of these grants of land. Therefore the committee said: "The Government has heretofore stood in the way, and by the exertion of its lien for the cost of surveying and selecting and conveying these lands has preverted their being taxed. It will now take that lien out of the way and will leave Colorado, Nebraska, California, Montana, Oregon, Washington Territory, and all the localities in which these lands lie the right to go ahead, the lien of the Government to the contrary notwithstanding, and to settle for themselves all these other questions that arise just the same as they do in the exercise of all their taxing power when they come to deal with the question of the ownership of real estate or other property which is subject to taxation."

We enter on no doubtful ground. It is simply an exercise of honest, fair dealing under the principles of justice upon the part of the Government with regard to these new communities struggling as all new communities especially have to do with the difficulty of making both ends meet between the raising and the expenditure of revenue.

Mr. BROWN. Do you tax any man's land before a patent is issued?

Mr. PLUMB. We do not provide for taxing these lands at all. We simply say that whatever power exists in these communities to tax shall not be interfered with by reason of the Government lien. We simply take the Government out of the way. We do not confer any power. We leave that to be dealt with under the organic act of the Territories or under the laws of the several States. Whatever power they have independently of this Government lien we provide that they may go on and exercise. The Senate will see that we intrude ourselves in no wise to raise the question of taxation, but leave those localities to settle this question precisely as they do in regard to individual holdings.

I might say a great deal about the burden which this Government lien has inflicted on the communities through which these railroads run. The Union Pacific Railroad in the State of Kansas not only has not paid its taxes, but it has sold land on eleven years' time, one of the considerations of the purchase being that the railroad company should not take out the title, should not pay and discharge this lien, but should carry the non-taxable condition of the land forward for eleven years in the hands of a private purchaser, and, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SPOONER] suggests, they get a higher price for the land in consequence of their ability to allow it to escape for eleven years the burden of taxation, while all around the hardy settlers who have made that country what it is are paying additional burdens by reason of the fact that the Government has stood in the doorway with this lien to prevent the locality from taxing them. It is not necessary to go especially into that.

Independent of all that, this bill is entirely justified. The Government has no right to substantially part with its title, to put it in the power of any one to sell, to mortgage, to speculate in the lands of the United States, and then prevent the localities in which those lands lie from having the benefit of them as property upon which taxes can be levied. So, independent of the special hardships in this case and which are not alone pertinent to Kansas but apply to Nebraska, Colorado, and other communities through which the Union Pacific Railroad runs, and also to all the communities through which the Northern Pacific runs, because, as I said before, under a recent decision of the Supreme Court the Northern Pacific is in the same category with the Union Pacific. Congress having intended to put on them the burden of paying the cost of surveying these lands, the Supreme Court held that that lien remains with a consequent title on the part of the Government, and the new communities of Dakota and Montana are prevented from taxing those lands though the company has mortgaged them and is selling them, and is exercising all the authority any owner can over any portion of his property. The communities through which the railroad is built are carrying on all the operations of government, building school-houses, furnishing them with teachers, organizing cities and towns, and subjecting themselves to taxation for the purpose of the protection of life and property, and are paying all the taxes, while the railroad company gets its fair share of the benefits from government and pays none of the taxes, except what it pays on its road-bed and rolling-stock.

Mr. PLATT. May I ask a question for information?

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly.

Mr. PLATT. At what period in the history of a land grant to a railroad does the Senator hold that the lands ought to become taxable by the local authorities? I see the third section of the bill provides that nothing in this act shall prevent the right of Congress "to declare or enforce a forfeiture of any lands so granted." Does the Senator hold that the lands are taxable before they are completely earned, so that no forfeiture can be declared?

Mr. PLUMB. So far as that is concerned, that is a question which is not attempted to be settled by this bill. We simply say that whatever right these communities have with reference to taxing these lands as other property is taxed we will not interfere with. We therefore withdraw the Government lien. The third section, which provides that this shall not be construed as in any wise affecting the right of the Government to declare a forfeiture, is a very proper provision to be inserted, because no one, I take it, desires to confirm by legislation now any land grant to any railroad company, and this only repels a possible inference.

I see what is in the Senator's mind. He is thinking of a case where by the withdrawal of our lien a community might tax these lands, and yet thereafter Congress might declare a forfeiture. That would simply bring into exercise at once the conscience of Congress. Congress in forfeiting a land grant undoubtedly would provide for the payment of whatever money had been invested in the payment of taxes on the land. It has ample authority also over all the agencies of the Territorial government. It may provide that the Territories which had levied these taxes should repay them if it were necessary; but I have no fear that Congress in the exercise of any power of forfeiture hereafter will do any injustice to any individual who may buy these lands by reason of the fact that we have taken our lien off them, so that they may be made subject to taxation.

Mr. CHACE. Will not the Senator permit an amendment to that effect?

Mr. PLUMB. Then we simply project ourselves into a condition of things that may never exist.

Mr. CHACE. But such cases may exist.

Mr. PLUMB. Such cases do not exist. That is a field which the Committee on Public Lands felt that it was not wise to enter into. We felt that the least the Government could do and that it ought promptly to do was to stand out of the way. Why should not the Government even give up entirely and relieve the companies from the necessity of the payment of the cost of surveying in order that these lands may become subject to taxation, and thereby a source of revenue instead of a burden to the new communities in which they lie? So far as I am concerned, if it were necessary to do that, which it is not, I should be willing to remit to the railroad companies, or to the communities in which the railroad lands are situated, this entire lien, this three dollars and a half or four dollars a quarter-section, or whatever it is, so that we might no longer do injustice to these new communities which so much need to have the right to tax these lands. But, as I said, we simply stand out of the way; we provide that our lien shall not be in the way of the taxation of these lands, and we provide that whoever purchases the lands at any tax-sale under the laws of any State or Territory shall, in addition to the payment of the tax, pay the lien of the Government, under regulations to be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, in such a way that while the Government stands out of the way it loses no cent of all the money that it is entitled to receive back as the cost of surveying and selecting and conveying these lands. Those fees are to be paid by the purchaser at the tax-sale. But I shall propose an amendment at the proper time to provide for the repayment to the purchaser of any money that may be collected from the railroad companies on this account hereafter under the provisions of the second section.

After having given to this subject a great deal of consideration heretofore, having been the author of a bill which has twice passed the Senate but failed to pass the other House of Congress, on this subject, I do not believe that it is possible to adopt a wiser or better rule than the one we have proposed in this bill. The fundamental idea that the Government shall stand out of the way, shall cease any longer to interpose its lien between the taxing power of the communities and the railroad companies, I think, is the least we can do, and we ought to do that very promptly, I think.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to ask a question of the Senator from Kansas. Does he understand section 3 to mean that this act does not affect any other lands than those confirmed to the companies?

Mr. PLUMB. No lands whatever that have been made the subject of grant shall be in any wise affected in reference to the right of the Government to forfeit them by the passage of this act. If there is any form of words that will make that any more comprehensive, I am authorized on the part of the committee to accept it. In other words, we did not intend to deal with any question except the one of taking our lien out of the way in such manner that whatever result follows to other people's property would follow to the railroad property.

Mr. EVARTS. I have an amendment to offer. If it be now in order I will offer it. If not, I will have it read for information.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Senator from New York will be read for information. The Chair is informed by the Secretary that the pending amendment is that offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. PLUMB. Will the Secretary please report that amendment? I was not aware of the fact that it was pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, and then the amendment suggested by the Senator from New York.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to add:

That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person; and any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States, without any act of entry or other process whatever.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will report the amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. EVARTS. The amendment which I ask to have read for information will come in on the eighth line of the first section, after the word "therefor," and is of limited extent and operation.

But this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed, nor to lands not ascertained and allocated as within such grant.

An objection has been felt and insisted upon in delays of taxation by the interval occurring between the issue of the patents and the salability or marketable condition of the lands which might be and which were availed of by sales by the corporation. As I have conferred with my learned friend the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB], I believe there is no objection felt to the first member of this clause, to wit:

But this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed.

Mr. PLUMB. The committee did not think that the bill covered unsurveyed lands because unsurveyed lands can not be made the subject of that description which would make a levy of tax upon them possible. Therefore, there is no objection to making that certain.

Mr. EVARTS. My learned friend is therefore willing that it should be certain. The second member of the amendment that I offer is simply to have it appear that the tax shall not be exacted from the railroad companies until it has been made apparent that the lands on which they are to pay the tax are within the grant. That seems to me entirely reasonable, and it should be suitable to all the purposes of the bill, unless it run at all counter to the object of not making taxability depend upon the position of the Government, of readiness to receive taxes and issue patents.

If this amendment be admitted it will, I suppose, satisfy all the reasonable requirements; and perhaps it is not unreasonable that the railroad companies should be called upon to submit to them. It would seem to be on principle not at all variant from the rights of the railroad companies that they should not be called upon to pay taxes upon lands when they were not in position to make sales that would bring the best price, for the want of a good title. Absolute security of that kind can not be evidenced in dealing with railroad grants any more than with private ownership until there is consummated in the possession by the vendor a patent to the very section or quarter-section that is to be disposed of.

It is, I believe, true, as the Supreme Court has held, and rightly held, as we all understand, that the grants are grants in præsenti, and do not need to be made dependent upon the issue of patents for the validity of the right. These railroad companies have been in the habit of selling in advance of the patent, and the taxability of what would pass out of their ownership into private occupation is what is sought for, and properly sought for, if you please for the argument, in taxing them; but it does not seem to me at all reasonable that taxation should be exacted from a particular lot of land from the railroad companies until some action has been taken by the Government which shows that that very parcel of land is within the grant. My amendment is intended to go no further than that ascertainment.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Suppose there should be some of this land where there has been no legal title vested in the railroad company, to which they claim title and over which they exert some degree of authority, what would be the condition of the case then? If they are exercising authority over it, if they are seeking to sell it, ought there not to be some right to tax the lands that they claim to control?

Mr. EVARTS. The scheme of this taxation is not made to depend upon the fact that the railroad companies have parted with their parcels and that they are in the hands of private owners; it is proceeding upon the scheme that the lots are the subject of taxation although remaining unsold, because they may be made the subject of sale.

In the great railroads that traverse the continent no party is more interested in the proper conservation of the values of the properties of these companies, including the land grants themselves, than the United States as the great second mortgagee that is to look out for the protection of the Treasury. The Government therefore is interested in dealing with all these granted lands upon the principle of dealing with them as an owner should deal with them in getting the best price by a market being sought under the most favorable circumstances of exposure.

It has no interest in encouraging sales of these lands by these companies upon a doubtful or a speculative value, from uncertainty either in regard to forfeiture or in regard to authenticity of allocation. The Government has the same interests, as the great and the second mortgagee on these properties, that the stockholders or those who have to come after the first mortgage have, that the sales should be conducted and the exaction of taxation should fall upon the true principles that govern between owner as vender and purchaser as vendee. Recognizing the propriety of having no vague and unsettled space of time by the act to be arrived at, as it seems to me, I propose in the interest of all concerned that the best prices shall come and that taxation shall not fall prematurely, by desiring that there shall not be this faculty of State or local taxation from these railroad companies until it is ascertained so as to be in a marketable condition, if not by patent at least by ascertainment, that the parcel itself is the subject of ownership and the subject of sale.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not know that I have any objection to the first branch of the amendment. I will suggest with the consent of the Senator from Massachusetts that his amendment be laid aside informally until certain amendments which I shall offer from the committee are adopted.

Mr. HOAR. I desired to have my amendment pending in order that I may not be compelled to renew it again if I should happen to be absent. It was the order of the Senate that it should be treated as pending. I wish to have that order continue, but I am willing that it shall be laid aside temporarily.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If there be no objection the amendments suggested by the Senator from Kansas will be acted upon, considering the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts as pending. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 2, line 3, after the word "company," I move to insert the words "or for its use and benefit," so as to read that "lands granted to such company or for its use and benefit."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 2, line 3, after the word "company," it is proposed to insert "or for its use and benefit;" so as to read:

That if any railroad corporation required by law to pay the costs of surveying, selecting, or conveying any lands granted to such company, or for its use and benefit, by act of Congress, shall for thirty days neglect or refuse to pay any such costs, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to add to section 2 the following words:

But when any sum shall be collected of such railway company as costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying any tract of land which shall have been purchased under the provisions of section 1 hereof, the Secretary of the Interior shall out of such collection reimburse said purchaser, his heirs or assigns, the amount of money paid by him as the costs of such surveying, selecting, and conveying.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In regard to the amendment of the Senator from New York, as I said the committee believed that the bill as limited did not authorize the taxing of unsurveyed lands, because until they are surveyed there is no way whereby they can be described so that they can be placed on the tax-list. If it is deemed advisable to make that any more certain, speaking for the committee I shall have no objection to the first part of the amendment of the Senator from New York, but in regard to the latter part I can not agree that that shall be adopted.

The trouble about this matter heretofore has been that the railroad company would not act, and without the action of the railroad company the Government would not act. If the Senator's amendment is inserted it will leave the condition of things exactly as it is now: the railroad company will not pay the costs of surveying, and selecting, and conveying the lands, and the Government will not therefore issue the patent, which according to the idea of the Senator from New York is the way, and the only way, whereby these lands can be allocated.

There is no act of segregation, of special distinction concerning these lands which is not found in the statute granting the same that can be exercised or done by the Government except the issuance of a patent or a certification which under the law amounts to the same thing as a patent. Therefore the one thing between the railroad company and title to-day is the issue by the Government of a patent, and it is the only thing that can add specification to the particular tracts of land which may be known as railroad land within the terms of any act granting land to a railroad company.

In regard to these lands, there are two classes. They are what are known as lands in place; that is to say, the particular sections named in the statute, as, for instance, the odd sections, which are usually the class of sections granted by the various acts of Congress; and the lands which are known as indemnity lands. The Pacific railroads have got nothing except lands in place. They get no indemnity lands. They were entitled to the odd sections within a certain limit on each side of the line as definitely located, unless those lands had before that time been in some manner segregated from the public domain, or title thereto parted with by the United States. They got no indemnity for the lands they lost by reason of the fact that before that time some of the sections were disposed of and were not subject to the grant.

Therefore it is known absolutely and unqualifiedly what lands each one of these railroad companies got, because they got all the odd sections within the granted limits that were not otherwise disposed of. The owners of the Pacific railroads know to-day precisely where their lands are and they have been surveyed. They know them for all the purposes of mortgaging and for all the purposes of sale, and there is nothing that can be done now by the United States Government to further pick out and select and designate and make certain those sections except the issuance of a patent; and that does not make it any more certain, because, as I said, the sections are named, and losing the sections they get no others. Really a patent would not make it any more certain except in some very remote contingency; and as it is the fact that the railroad companies have not demanded the patents, and that the Government have not issued the patents that makes this difficulty which we are seeking to avoid, and it would seem to me to be worse than useless to provide for re-enacting the same difficulty in the present bill.

When it comes to the Northern Pacific grant, which is the other conspicuous one to which the bill would apply, that company got the odd sections within certain limits on each side of its constructed line in the States through which it passes and within certain broader limits in the Territories through which it passes; and if any of those sections had been disposed of before by the Government, then they are entitled to go into certain other limits outside and select lands in lieu of the place lands which they thus lost.

The way in which those lands are determined is by the company certifying to the General Land Office a list of the lands that it has lost; that is to say, a list of the odd sections which it would have had except for the fact that they have been otherwise disposed of by the General Government, and then being authorized to go out into the indemnity limits and select other lands in place of the lands so lost, and in selecting they are bound to name the particular section or quarter-section which they take. That makes the grant in all those particulars perfectly certain and without any possibility of mistake arising in regard to it.

Whatever is necessary to make the lands certain within the limits of the Northern Pacific grant is within the power of the railroad company itself; and to say that the lands should not be taxed unless they thus made their grant certain would be to say that they should not be taxed unless they elect to have them taxed. That is the difficulty with which we are confronted now, that they do not elect to have their lands taxed; they do not pay the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, and thus the lands escape taxation. Therefore you would be providing in one section that our lien should not stand in the way, and at the very next breath providing that a railroad company might at all times interpose the same objections it has heretofore interposed to prevent taxes from being levied and collected.

I do not suppose that any law ever to be passed will operate with absolute equality everywhere and upon all persons, under all circumstances and conditions; but the simple proposition is, that whereas today we have got a lien amounting to a considerable sum upon this land for the cost of survey, and by reason of that the land can not be taxed and thereby great burdens fall upon the local communities in which the land lies, in consideration of all these things, in view of the exigencies of the case, the justice of it, the fact that these railroads have escaped taxation so long, Congress simply lifts the lien and says that whatever other obstacles there may be in the way of the imposition of the very proper burdens of government upon this land it shall be treated as all other property within the local jurisdiction.

For these reasons I can not consent to the adoption of the last part of the amendment of the Senator from New York. The first part is, as I said, what I believe the bill to be now. The last part, in my judgment, would render the bill largely if not wholly nugatory.

Mr. EVARTS. The only answer that I have heard from the Senator from Kansas on the second branch of my amendment is that all the lands are ascertained and allocated just as distinctly as they can be or need to be. I have only asked that taxation shall not fall until that predicament which he assigns to these parcels of land shall be actually evident and known. He says that all these lots of land that I desire shall not be taxed until they are ascertained and allocated as within the grants are sufficiently ascertained already, because all of these parcels named in the granting laws according to the lines and routes of the railroad are by those laws well ascertained.

Very well; I only ask that in this second branch of my proposition as in the first about unsurveyed lots, there shall be left nothing open for litigation on the part of States and counties, or open for court agitations on the subject except that very thing, that the present license of taxation now given by authority of the United States and thus springing into active force immediately by virtue of this proposed law shall be exactly on those parcels of land and no others, that are definitely ascertained upon the statement of the learned Senator from Kansas. But I do desire now that the legislation takes its inception in the authority accorded by this Government to the States and the counties, that it shall be a taxation only upon those parcels of land that are brought into that condition of ascertainment which the Senator has been ready to designate as properly following the lines of these grants.

Therefore it does not seem to me that there is any better reason for objecting to the second branch of my amendment than there was to the first; that is, that it is not necessary because the ascertainment and allocation has been had. Should it be so declared, then, and only when it has been declared, there shall be this taxation. Indeed, the Senator went so far as to assert that everything had been done in the way of ascertainment except issuing the patent. I do not ask so broad a statement as that, but I do ask that before the parcels of land are thrown open to taxation by the concession of the United States, it shall be only upon lands that are ascertained as under the grant; if by the terms of the grant, all the better, and that is the view of the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. PLUMB. The difference between the Senator from New York and myself is just this: I say that the location of the land has already been ascertained, and ascertained as soon as the land was surveyed, because then we know what the odd sections are; but the Senator wants something to be done hereafter in addition to that, and that is what I object to, because that must rest with the railroad company itself to have it done, and resting with them as heretofore they will not have it done, and therefore the lands will continue to escape taxation.

Mr. EVARTS. That brings it narrower, then. There is not a word in this clause which looks to the future. If it has already been done, so much the better. If it has not been done, then it may need to be done. The language which I propose to insert is:

But this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed, nor to lands not ascertained and allocated as within such grant.

Mr. TELLER. If the land is to be ascertained it must be ascertained by some action of the proper department of the Government, and that is the Land Office. So the Senator's amendment is practically a declaration that there shall be no tax until there is an adjustment of all these grants. That is a work which will not be accomplished for many years. It would be utterly impossible for the department to ascertain and adjust all the difficult contesting questions between settlers and the railroad companies for a number of years to come, in regard to a portion of this land, at least.

The person who takes the tax title, who bids at the sale upon the theory that this is the property of the railroad company, is the only person who can suffer, if the ascertainment has not been made. He buys with his eyes open. If it turns out that it is the railroad company's property, the railroad company is not affected. If it turns out that it is the property of the Government of the United States, then of course the Government of the United States is not affected. If it turns out that it is a settler's property, it is not then taxable because the title is still in the United States.

If the second branch of the amendment of the Senator from New York is incorporated in the bill, the bill might as well be dropped. There would be no assessment and no taxes levied for years to come under the bill, because if it means anything it will be when the Land Department has declared officially that all of these lands belong to the railroad companies, and each section or each fraction of a section, as the case may be, it will be necessary that they should certify to somebody or in some way declare that it has been determined by the proper authority that it belongs to the railroad company, and that can not be done while a single quarter-section is in controversy.

The question was asked by the Senator from Connecticut, when should this railroad company pay taxes? When should they do what everybody else in the country does, pay taxes upon their property? I say whenever they have absolute dominion over it, whenever they have earned the land, whenever the Government has surveyed it, then they ought to pay the tax on it, because for all practical purposes it is theirs and is so treated by the railroad company. Why should they not pay taxes on it when they can sell it, when they can give permission to occupy it, when they can realize benefits from the grant? Why should they not pay taxes on it as well as sell it?

I have no objection to the first provision of the amendment of the Senator from New York, because I think that is what the present bill means, and practically that is what would be done. No assessor would go out and tax unsurveyed land. The impossibility of describing it, the impossibility of the purchaser who bought it at the tax sale finding it, would render that thing impossible. Everybody understands that one of the essentials of a tax title is a proper description. It has been held everywhere, and would be held in every community in the world, that property must be definitely pointed out before it can be taxed, and before it can be sold the deed must convey by boundaries. Practically that provision is in the bill now, but I have no objection myself to its being put in the bill specifically.

The Senator from Oregon, speaking of the Northern Pacific, says that that company has only received a small proportion of its land and that the fault has been with the Department. In 1870, in an appropriation act, there was an appropriation made for the payment of the costs of surveys. It was provided that the company should receive no further patents or certificates of land until it should have paid the costs of surveys, &c. Without noticing that, it being in an appropriation act, the Department in 1873 certified some 700,000 or 800,000 acres of land to the company. It discovered later that there was about $26,000 due to the Government of the United States, which ought to have been paid before the patent issued. The company declined to pay. They declined to pay upon the ground that they had taken their grant without any such provision, and Congress had not the right to insert such a provision in the statutes, and thus affect and change their grant. That controversy continued until 1882, the matter having been at different times the subject of more or less discussion. In May or June, 1882, the railroad company applied to the Department for the certification of further lands. The matter was presented to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, and finally referred to the Secretary of the Interior, and on the 5th of June, if I recollect aright, he decided that they were liable to pay for these surveys before they were entitled to their grant, and they were again notified for the second time, as they had been notified in 1874 by the then Commissioner of the General Land Office, that until they did pay the $26,000 there should be no more certification of lands to the company. Later, in September, 1882, the company paid the $26,000 and put themselves in such a relation to the Department that they were entitled to have the land certified to them as they paid up. So it was not the fault of the Department, but it was the fault of the company itself that from 1873 to 1882 there was no land certified to them at all.

Under the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States there is not any necessity that this company should have a patent; they have got an absolute grant and all they need with a patent is to show that they have got it. Their title remains practically the same without the patent as with it, and neither they nor any of these railroad companies, with rare exceptions, have been anxious to have their patents. I think I may state it as a rule that the railroad companies have not demanded patents or certifications of title except when they wanted to sell and when the purchaser demanded of them some evidence of title. They have studiously as a rule refused to pay the cost of the survey and the cost of the selection and have kept just sufficient title in the Government of the United States, a shadowy, doubtful title, but just sufficient so that the Supreme Court would always interpose and say, "There is a possibility that the land may revert to the United States because you have not paid the $3 or $4 a quarter-section, and therefore the land is not to be taxed." It is upon that theory that the taxes have not been levied, and the Supreme Court recently declared that in the case of the North Pacific no tax could be levied until this money was paid.

As was said by the chairman of the committee, this is not an authorization to anybody to tax this property. We do not say to any State or to any Territory, "tax this property." We simply say that the title, the possibility of a reversion to the United States, shall not stand in the way of a tax, and that is all. No authority is given, I repeat, and all questions as to whether they are properly taxed will be settled with the railroad company in the courts of the jurisdiction where the taxing is done exactly as the case is settled with the citizen.

I can not conceive of any reason why great anxiety should be expressed that this railroad company should have that which is denied to the settler. The moment that the settler enters his pre-emption claim and gets his certificate, his duplicate, nobody waits for the patent. The taxing authorities go to the land office and discover all who have entered up to a certain date when the time comes for laying the taxes, and then insert them in the list of taxable property, and the settler pays at once a tax upon his land that he has got the title to long before he gets the patent. Why should not the same rule apply here? The settler pays at once when he has an equitable title. These parties have got a legal title, and yet they decline to pay, waiting either for the evidence of it or waiting until they shall have discharged a duty imposed upon them by law, the payment of the costs of survey, selection, &c.

Mr. EVARTS. The Senator from Colorado seems to treat this amendment in a different aspect from that which the Senator from Kansas has imputed to it. The Senator from Kansas, as I understand, held that the grants then ascertained and located the lands that might be taxed.

Mr. TELLER. I did not raise a question of that character. I simply said that it is a direction to the department to do some affirmative thing, and that there is no affirmative thing it can do except to adjust the whole area of the grant.

Mr. EVARTS. Having stated the view of the Senator from Kansas, I was proceeding to state the view of the Senator from Colorado, that instead of being a harmless clause as viewed by the Senator from Kansas, it was a fatal clause as viewed by the Senator from Colorado, because the parcels that might thus be taxed would need to be ascertained by some action of the Government whether they did or did not fall within the grant. That is precisely what I wish to have determined now in the bill. It is to avoid the difference of opinion in courts and in administration by the laws and authorities of the States, as is now evidenced by the great dispute between so competent authorities as the Senator from Colorado and the Senator from Kansas.

There is not any word "hereafter" in my amendment. There is not any proposition of future action in it at all. I wish to guard against this taxation except upon land that is known by law as being within the grants. If shown by the grants themselves, very well, and I think for the great part they are so shown; but my proposition is, that it should be in the bill upon the same ground that unsurveyed lands are not to be subjected to taxation.

I must therefore submit, with great respect to these views of more competent Senators on these topics, that this is not an amendment which attacks the true spirit and meaning of the measure as framed and intended, but is merely to explain and make secure what its meaning is.

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask for a division of the question on the amendment. I think there will be no objection to the first part of the amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] is not now pending, but the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR].

Mr. EVARTS. I supposed the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts had been informally set aside, and therefore my amendment might be now in order.

Mr. PLUMB. That was the understanding, I think. The Senator from Massachusetts had no desire to have his amendment come up until the other amendments were offered.

Mr. EVARTS. That passed while the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS] was in the chair, and I supposed that my amendment could be now regularly offered.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If it is understood by Senators that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts is withdrawn, the Chair will receive the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. PLUMB. It is not withdrawn, but simply remains pending until the other amendments are disposed of.

Mr. HARRIS. By unanimous consent the Senate agreed to act upon certain amendments which the Senator from Kansas, from the Committee on Public Lands, proposed to offer, with the understanding that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was pending.

Mr. PLUMB. In that event I will ask that the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts be interposed at a point succeeding the amendment of the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BLAIR], which was adopted at a preceding session of the Senate. I have no objection to it myself. I ask that it be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts will be read as proposed to be inserted at the point designated.

Mr. PLUMB. Let it go in as a proviso to succeed the proviso which was adopted on the motion of the Senator from New Hampshire.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add as an additional proviso to section 1:

Provided further, That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person; and any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States, without any act of entry or other process whatever.

Mr. TELLER. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Massachusetts, if he were present, upon what theory he proposes that in the State of Colorado a purchaser at a tax-sale shall only buy a certain amount of property that is subject to taxation in that State?

Mr. DOLPH. And if he does buy more that it shall be forfeited to the United States?

Mr. TELLER. Further than that, if he buys more, although he may buy it of somebody else, or if he holds it in trust for somebody else, it shall be forfeited. I am willing to go as far as anybody in limiting the area of the public land to purchasers; I am willing to do anything that is proper to prevent the monopoly of property in land after it has ceased to be public land; but I deny the right of Congress to say how much land shall be bought in the State of Colorado that is subject to taxation under its laws.

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think there can be any valid objection raised against the power of Congress in this case, so far as the limitation upon the amount to be sold is concerned, because, the title proceeding from the United States and the United States at this time lifting a lien in order that the land may be taxed, I have no doubt that it is entirely within the competency of Congress to put such conditions on the sale as it may see fit. So far as the last clause of the amendment is concerned, that ought not to be adopted, because that would go upon the assumption that the tax-sale absolutely divested the title without any interposition even of a deed, and that, if land shall be purchased at that sale in violation of this provision, it should then revert to the United States, which absolutely cuts out the railroad company, which may have earned, which must have earned the land, and must have had a valid title to it before it could be subject to taxation at all. That is something which can not be done in this way. The railroad company of course has got a right there, the right of redemption under the local law up to the time of the issuance of the deed, and probably, as in most of the States, until a certain specified time thereafter; yet under this amendment the moment one person shall purchase more than 640 acres of land the title must revert to the Government, that is to say, the valid title. That certainly can not be the case. I have no objection at all to the first part of the amendment, but the last part undoubtedly ought to be stricken out. I therefore move to amend the amendment by striking out all after the word "person," in line 4.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment moved by the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In line 4 of the proposed amendment, after the word "person," it is moved to strike out the remainder of the amendment, as follows:

And any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States without any act of entry or other process whatever.

So as to read:

Provided further, That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person.

Mr. PLUMB. The suggestion is made to me that, as the Senator from Massachusetts who moved the amendment is probably in the building, it would be well to ask unanimous consent that the amendment lie over until the other amendments have been disposed of. He has been sent for.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas asks unanimous consent that this amendment be laid over until the other amendments are disposed of. That will be considered as agreed to if there be no objection. The next amendment will be stated. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has proposed an amendment.

Mr. EVARTS. As the first clause of my amendment, if the Senator from Kansas will give me his attention, may be considered as out of debate and objection, that perhaps may be treated as accepted, as retained.

Mr. PLUMB. So far as I have authority to accept it I will accept it. However, I suppose it will need a formal adoption in order to incorporate it in the bill.

Mr. HARRIS. Let there be a division of the question, and let the first clause of the amendment be agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS. I will therefore divide the question in this way; I offer the amendment to add:

But this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed.

Mr. PLUMB. At what point in the bill does the Senator from New York propose to insert those words?

Mr. EVARTS. After the word "therefor," in the eighth line of the first section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment as now proposed by the Senator from New York.

Mr. SAULSBURY. It occurs to me that that clause of the amendment covers the whole question. It says that the provision shall not apply to lands which are unsurveyed. It can not apply to all the sections named in the original grant unless they have been surveyed. It occurs to me that the Senator from Kansas in accepting the amendment has given away the whole question in dispute, if I understand it.

Mr. PLUMB. If the lands are not surveyed there is no way of telling what portion of them the railroad company has got. They can not be made the subject of description on the tax-roll until surveyed, and consequently there can not be that certainty which must necessarily be observed in order to designate the particular object of taxation. These lands must necessarily be described on the tax-roll in the method observed in their survey, as for instance, the northeast quarter of a certain section, or the whole of a certain section, giving also township and range in which the section is found. Then it becomes definite and certain; but in the absence of a survey which establishes the fact where the odd section is which becomes the subject of the grant there can be no such description of it. All the other lands which have been surveyed of course can be put in the tax-roll just as they can in the case of individual ownership.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I understood the Senator to say in his former argument that wherever the section was specially designated in the land grant, though there may have been no survey specifically dividing up that section, yet that was sufficiently identified for the purposes of taxation. If so, then the amendment of the Senator from New York would exclude that entire section from liability to taxation, because there had not been any survey of the different quarter-sections and half-sections under the grant. I may have misunderstood the Senator.

Mr. PLUMB. There is a lack of apprehension in the Senator's mind as to how these surveys are made. The lands are surveyed, first, into townships. Then they are subdivided into sections; and then not actually subdivided into quarter-sections, but there is put at equal intervals between the corners on each side a stone, the result of a survey, which is supposed to furnish the means of subdividing into quarter-sections.

The meaning of the amendment of the Senator from New York is not that the section shall be surveyed, but that the general section of land in which is the particular section that the railroad company is entitled to shall be surveyed in order that the section to which they are entitled by reason of the grant may be positively known.

Mr. TELLER. Located.

Mr. PLUMB. That it may be located. There can be no question about that, and without the survey the land shall not be taxed at all. The committee believed (and it was the subject of specific discussion in the committee) that the bill as it now stands does not provide for the taxation of unsurveyed lands for the simple reason that they can not be located or described.

Mr. INGALLS. Neither could they be patented.

Mr. PLUMB. No; they could not be made the subject of any action.

Mr. INGALLS. So that the amendment next suggested by the Senator from New York has absolutely no meaning in connection with this paragraph. In the first place, the provision is that the exemption shall not be "for the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same." Of course there can be no cost of surveying unsurveyed lands.

Mr. PLUMB. Certainly not.

Mr. INGALLS. And there can be no patent issued for unsurveyed lands. Therefore, all the lands to which the provisions of this clause can apply are surveyed lands, and it is simply repeating in another phrase the absolute significance and sense of the paragraph by saying that it shall not apply to unsurveyed lands.

Mr. PLUMB. That is entirely true, but the Senator from New York was anxious about it, and submitting it to some members of the committee they said if he desired to have it more certain they would not object, although practically it repeated, as my colleague says, the previous language of the bill.

The question has been asked by the Senator from Massachusetts sitting in front of me [Mr. DAWES], who is responsible for the survey or non-survey of this land? I will say to him that the Government controls that question and not the railroad company. Therefore the question as to how fast the surveys shall continue of lands which have not heretofore been made the subject of surveys is a question to be settled by the Government and not by the railroad companies; so that they will have no option; they are unable to say that any portion of the land which they claim under the grant shall not be surveyed, and therefore be made subject to taxation under the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS].

Mr. TELLER. Which amendment is this?

Mr. EVARTS. The first half.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment will be again read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In section 1, line 8, after the word "therefor," it is proposed to insert:

But this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed.

The amendment was agreed to—ayes 24, noes not counted.

Mr. EVARTS. Now I move the second clause, to follow immediately after that which is now adopted:

Nor to lands not ascertained and allocated as within such grant.

Mr. PLUMB. I think we had better have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest to the Senator from New York to employ the technical term that has long been used in regard to the public lands, and that is "located" instead of "allocated." "Allocation" means to place one thing after another. The location of the public land and the question of locating the public land has been the subject of legal definition for the greater part of a century without disturbance or question, and I submit that it is rather late to introduce a new phrase into our terminology. And if the Senator does not object I would rather vote on this with the word "located" than "allocated."

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I can not consent to the change upon the reasons given by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. INGALLS]. In the first place "allocated" is much more technical than "located" is.

Mr. INGALLS. Bring me a dictionary, please.

Mr. EVARTS. And in the second place "allocated" does not mean putting one thing after another. "Allocation" means "assigning to." I will, however, for other reasons agree to the change proposed, especially if I can count on having a support of the amendment after that change.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PLATT (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. CAMDEN].

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas. I am paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON], and as I do not know how he would vote if present, I withhold my vote.

Mr. ALLISON. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. VOORHEES] asked me to pair with him for the day, and therefore I refrain from voting.

Mr. CONGER. My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE] for the day.

Mr. PLUMB. I am paired generally with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], but being assured that he would vote against this amendment I have voted.

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY].

Mr. BERRY. The Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] was compelled to leave town. He is paired with the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE].

Mr. WALTHALL. I was requested by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BLACKBURN] to announce that he is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. BROWN. I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know how my colleague would vote if present, and the Senator from Illinois may do as he pleases about voting on this proposition.

Mr. RANSOM. I am paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 32; as follows:

YEAS—9.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOAR. I suppose my amendment is now pending, to be inserted as an additional section.

Mr. PLUMB. Let it be a proviso.

Mr. HOAR. Very well; I will offer it in the shape of a proviso.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts will be stated.

Mr. HOAR. Let it be added as a proviso to the first section.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. To which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. PLUMB] has offered an amendment to strike out the last clause. The question is on the amendment to the amendment.

Mr. EVARTS. Let the whole amendment be reported.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment and the amendment to the amendment will be reported.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the proviso at the end of section 1 the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That not more than 640 acres of the lands sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person, or shall thereafter be acquired, or owned, or held in trust for any one person; and any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States without any act of entry or other process whatever.

The amendment to the amendment is to strike out the last clause, as follows:

And any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States without any act of entry or other process whatever.

Mr. CALL. I shall be very glad to hear from the Senator from Massachusetts how it is competent for Congress to make a law of this kind operating in the States. I can see how it might attach a condition running with the land, but I do not see how it can be a perpetuity to last for three lives or more; nor do I understerstand how as to lands within the States any act of Congress can be operative to limit the tenure of lands or the amount of lands held by individuals contrary to the laws of the State.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, it does not seem to me that there is any difficulty in that regard. As I understand, the authority for the sale of this land comes from the United States. It is land which has not yet passed under State jurisdiction for any of the purposes of alienation. It is land the property in which is held by the United States, or is held by a railroad company, not subject to be divested by a tax-sale. Now we confer that authority, and we may confer it with such conditions as we may choose to require. If we may confer the authority to tax and to dispose at tax-sale of these lands, we may limit that authority by saying that they shall only be sold on condition that they shall be owned only in quantities not exceeding 640 acres.

The purpose of this amendment, I suppose, will commend itself to almost all the Senators who have watched the dangers in modern times that attend the accumulation of lands in vast quantities in the hands of individuals or corporations. I suppose the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL], like other Senators, has seen some of the alarming statements which have been made that great masses of land are held in the hands of aliens, of corporations, whose stock is or may be hereafter in the hands of foreigners.

A bill which has passed the Senate prohibits the acquisition of real estate in our Territories by aliens who have not initiated steps to become citizens. If I recollect aright, however, that bill has not provided for the case of corporations whose stock may be held by aliens.

Mr. PLUMB. Oh, yes, it does.

Mr. HOAR. I was not present when that bill passed. I have no objection to conceding the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas—that is, that the prohibition shall be expressed without requiring the title to revert to the United States. I call for the yeas and nays on the amendment.

Mr. DOLPH. I sympathize with the purpose that the Senator from Massachusetts has in view, but I see the same difficulty that the Senator from Florida has expressed.

The Senator from Massachusetts, it appears to me, has a wrong idea about what we are here proposing to do. I do not understand that we are proposing to submit the lands of the United States to taxation. I do not understand with him that we are proposing to say that a part of the public domain shall be taxable. We are proposing to tax the lands of the railroad companies upon which the United States has a lien for a very small amount, supposed to be equivalent to about 3 cents per acre. Now we are proposing to do that by saying that these lands shall be taxable.

Mr. HOAR. Are you not also proposing to make land taxable which the railroads are entitled to patents for but which patents they have failed to take.

Mr. DOLPH. I will explain that. The United States has a lien on these lands for the cost of surveying, selecting, and patenting, amounting to about 3 cents an acre, a very small interest; but small as it is the courts have said that it is such an interest in the lands that they can not be taxed until the lien is removed from the lands. Now, we are not proposing to say permanently that these lands shall be taxed. We do not understand that we have any more power to say that the lands shall be taxed in Dakota or Montana than we have to say that the Senator's sheep or horses or merchandise, if he has any, in Massachusetts, shall be taxed.

Mr. HOAR. The Senator desired to have me reply to his suggestion.

Mr. DOLPH. Allow me to get through.

Mr. HOAR. And therefore he will permit me to have an understanding as he goes along.

Mr. DOLPH. I was only explaining what I supposed to be the theory of the bill.

Mr. HOAR. Does not the Senator understand that a large portion of the land upon which this bill is to operate is land the title to which has not yet passed from the United States to the railroad and is not to pass until the railroad performs a certain condition hereafter?

Mr. DOLPH. No, I do not understand that. I understand that the title goes with the act, and when the conditions are performed the title relates back and vests, commencing from the date of the grant. I understand simply that the United States has a lien upon the land and holds that lien until the cost of surveying is paid; and when the patent is issued it is only the evidence of a previous title.

Now, what are we proposing in this bill? We are proposing to say that this lien of the United States shall no longer be an obstacle in the way of the taxation of these lands; that they may be sold for taxes notwithstanding the lien of the United States, and the purchaser at the tax-sale may come in and pay off the lien and have the land discharged from the effect of the lien, and then he acquires title and takes the patent instead of the railroad company. We are proposing simply to step out of the way. That being the case, I should like to know under what constitutional provision we are going to say that there is to be attached to the title of the land of the railroad company a condition which shall run with the land for all time to come and which shall prevent the free alienation of it. I should like to understand further by what provision of the Constitution Congress is proposing to step in and say to the State of Colorado, "You may make your laws for the sale of lands, but in regard to this particular land in which the United States steps out of the way and permits to be taxable there shall be a condition attached that one man shall buy only 640 acres and that for all time to come one man shall own but 640 acres."

It seems to me, with all due deference to the legal attainments of the Senator from Massachusetts, that he has not considered properly what we are proposing to do by this bill and the title with which we are dealing. I do not believe it is competent for Congress to attach this condition. If it is competent I should be glad to vote for the amendment. I should be glad to meet the difficulty which the Senator sees in the way, and which I called attention to at some length this afternoon, of the purchase of large bodies of this land by single individuals, but I think we are traveling out of the power of Congress, we are getting out of the legitimate scope of this bill when we undertake it.

Mr. EVARTS. I think, Mr. President, we should all understand what the scope and force and reach of this amendment will be.

Great amounts of land have been granted by this Government to various railroad companies. This bill relates in a certain sense to all those grants. In the original grant there is not any requirement that in subsequent sales there shall be no holder of more than 640 acres of the lands granted. So, in the first place, this amendment seeks to put upon the land grants already conferred, under the operation of this amendment to this extent, that whenever any of them shall be sold for taxes in the States there shall be a perpetual exaction that no more than 640 acres of them shall be held by any person. That, of course, is a burden upon the sales that these railroad companies make in the ordinary course of their management of the property, that whoever buys the lands, if there be a sale under the tax laws in any State, can make no acquisition of more than 640 acres. It is a burden, a perpetual agreement on the part of the purchasers at these tax-sales, that more than that amount or land can not be held together.

But aside from that, we come to another very difficult proposition, as it seems to me. I will treat this clause of the amendment with the provision for forfeiture to the United States, and then consider what will happen after that is cut off. The provision is:

That not more than 640 acres of the land sold under the provisions of this act shall be purchased by any one person.

That is a definite and ascertained transaction, that a person buying any of these lands thus put up for sale can not purchase more than 640 acres. But thereafter follows this:

Or shall thereafter be acquired or owned or held in trust for any one person.

That is, no portion bought under the provisions of this act, though not originally purchased in 640 acres, can afterward be aggregated and held in more than 640 acres. So you have a land act as one of the laws of the Territory or State thereafter so far as these lands are concerned that there can not be a holding of more than 640 acres.

If I am not right in that construction, this aggregation is not well made; but I can see no other construction of it.

Mr. HOAR. That is the purpose of it.

Mr. EVARTS. Very well. That is to say, if one person buys 600 acres and another person buys 600 acres, nobody can put them together and own the 1200 acres.

Mr. HOAR. That is it exactly.

Mr. EVARTS. Nobody can have 1,200 acres at any time in the future. In other words, it is a perpetual land law applied to all these sections forever and forever. That is to say, while the general land laws of the State have no such restriction and persons can buy and add together as purchasers whatever amount of acreage the State laws do not prohibit, there shall be another line of land running on forever in those States that can not be aggregated because the title was limited under a tax sale. That is the proposition. The wisdom of any such arrangement does not approve itself to me.

Mr. DAWES. On any subsequent taxation after the lien is lifted, any subsequent assessment of tax is affected.

Mr. EVARTS. It is a condition of the land, and it can not be aggregated upon anywhere by anybody under any circumstances, although the general law of the State or Territory may permit any aggregation.

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to say to the Senator from New York that the purpose of the amendment is exactly what he describes; and if there is any doubt about it, it results from my failure to effect my purpose by language.

I desire, so far as the constitutional authority of the United States can go, to prevent in the future a repetition of the experience of Great Britain of the holding of a vast mass of land in one ownership, and to make it when this land goes out of the United States a perpetual condition that that shall not be accomplished, and as far as possible to secure the future American against that danger in the new Territories, and so far as this law applies in the new States.

Mr. EVARTS. Well, is 1,200 acres a vast amount of ownership of land? Is that a proper limit to assign to farms—1,200 acres? Is it the rule, is it the idea, is it the notion anywhere in any of the States of this country that a farmer can not have more than 640 acres, and that forever and forever land shall be followed in these subdivisions? If it is a good rule and a good law governing the transmission of estates and their acquisition, why should you pounce upon these tax-sales and say they shall be held under a law that is not applicable to any other land?

Now I come to the question, as I have not been wrong in construing the true meaning of this amendment of the forfeiture:

And any title or interest acquired in violation hereof shall be forfeited to the United States without any act of entry or other process whatever.

That is to say, the United States is kept the lord paramount under the English law system that can insist upon forfeiture under all circumstances and at all future dates if the condition imposed by law happens to be violated. That ties up and takes out of commerce all these lands. There is not a piece of land in the city of New York that is salable which is hampered by a condition of a lord paramount, so that at any time hereafter for forfeiture there shall be an entry. The common law has guarded forfeiture by every degree of astuteness, every degree of severity against such a tenure as that. And now it is proposed that the United States shall take the position of being lord paramount and hanging up the freedom of land which is the freedom of any land.

But how does it stand if this forfeiture to the United States is stricken out? What happens then? Who is lord paramount? Who then can enforce the forfeiture? Is it then a brutum fulmen? Or is there latent somewhere a power of forfeiture that can be claimed in the name of some one? Is it by the State, is it by the county that has sold the land? Where is the forfeiture? Strike out the forfeiture, and you have it left at large; and who can define the position at common law of the estate being forfeited by a breach of condition is to be enforced?

But, Mr. President, whatever might be said about the propriety of declaring that these immediate and primary sales should not exceed 640 acres, it seems to me abhorrent to the whole system of free ownership of land that any line of land whatever should be perpetually held and hampered by a condition at common law.

I do not speak of this as having the least reference to the interest of railroad companies except so far as it will affect anybody else; and that is the deprivation of the jus disponendi so as to burden and reduce the value of land in the market—land now, land hereafter, land under all circumstances.

I venture to say that whatever repugnance the United States and its people may have to large aggregations of land in private owners, this Government will never impress upon the public domain that it shall part with in the distribution among its citizens of public lands this forfeiture to be retained to the United States. If this Government will never adopt that rule as a rule of real property in any of the arrangements of the public lands, why should it insist upon it as to these particular parcels where the title is to be acquired by this particular tax-sale?

It seems to me, therefore, while it may be reasonable to provide that a sale shall not be made under these tax-sales of more than 640 acres in a parcel, that to impress on that land the necessary permanent condition of forfeiture is abhorrent to the whole system of freedom in the tenure of land.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, when I was taking my seat before, the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] rose and asked me if I would answer a question and make an explanation of a difficulty which was in his mind. Under the ruling of the Chair the very elaborate speech of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] has intervened between the question and the answer.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the Senator from Massachusetts as having yielded the floor.

Mr. HOAR. I supposed the Chair so understood, or the thing would not have happened. But I owe this apology to the Senator from Oregon for not having sooner answered his question.

The Senator from Oregon asks if I understand that there is a title to these lands in the United States, or only a lien. I certainly do understand that the lands upon which this bill is to operate are largely still held in fee by the United States as owner. They are lands not even made certain or allocated, to use the phraseology of the Senator from New York. They are lands to which these roads have not yet received their patents, and are not to receive them until they have paid certain costs of survey. Now, I do not understand that that transaction passes a title to the railroads. Unquestionably it passes an assignable interest to the railroads except so far as restrained by the legislation which created them. But it is quite immaterial. It is clear that these lands can neither be taxed nor sold for taxes without the assent of the United States, whether that necessity is caused in regard to any portion of them by our having a lien inconsistent with the power of taxation, or whether it is caused by our having a fee which we are not to part with until a certain condition takes place.

Mr. DOLPH. Will the Senator allow me to make a suggestion? The act providing for the payment of costs was passed several years after the grant. It was not a part of the condition of the original grant.

Mr. HOAR. Patents have not issued and the land is not determined. How can it be said that a title is vested in these railroads when nobody knows but that it is to depend on something in the future even what land they are to get?

Mr. DOLPH. I will not take up time to explain that; but that was the very thing I talked about a long time to-day.

Mr. HOAR. That is immaterial to my purpose, because the right of the United States to put a condition upon a transaction that can not occur without its assent either way is perfectly clear.

My honorable friend from New York thinks that this proposition is objectionable, because it is creating a certain lord paramount, as he expresses it. He knows it is to enforce this condition.

Mr. President, the nation from which we have come has suffered, her working people have suffered, from the fact that her lands, small as they are compared with ours, have been engrossed by great landed proprietors and great noblemen. It is a fundamental maxim with all persons who understand the history of constitutional liberty or of the American or English system of government that where the title in the land is, there is the sovereignty, in the long run, of the state. De Tocqueville speaks of the effect of a suitable land system. Speaking of the abolition of primogeniture in New England under the operation of our body of liberties adopting the Kentish custom instead of the law of primogeniture in 1641, De Tocqueville says that when that system was adopted in the New England States, the American Revolution and the American Constitution followed as a natural sequence; and Mr. Webster in his great oration in 1820 at Plymouth said that you had but to ascertain the land laws of a people and you could predict without erring their history. I quote the substance, of course, and not the language of these great authorities.

Here are in Great Britain these great landed estates through which two or three thousand men have directly or indirectly wielded the political affairs of that empire for more than a thousand years. The workman, the small farmer, the tenant are turned out to make the preserves or the hunting grounds for the pleasure of the rich landed aristocracy. Our most thoughtful observers, especially those who have studied the labor question that is upon us, see already the signs of that danger in our own sky. There are cases already where in our Territories in the Northwest men of other countries are acquiring and corporations are acquiring vast landed estates; and it is now, as this opportunity comes, the purpose of this amendment to dedicate forever so much of the public lands as is within our power and as we are now dealing with to the ownership of the small homesteader, instead of to the ownership of the great alien corporations and of the great alien proprietors.

What is there of danger, what is there of the lord paramount in this? The United States, of course, so far as it legislates is the lord paramount, but it is a lordship paramount exercised for the entire people and in the interest of the entire people.

The Senator from New York asks if no farm should be permitted to exist of more than 640 acres. I answer that 640 acres is enough, as a general rule. Certainly when you consider the fact that there is much land that we can not reach by our legislation, 640 acres is enough to preserve the title of the small homesteader to whose interest we are looking.

The Senator asks me why we fix this rule for these particular parcels. The answer is, because we have let other particular parcels go, to the injury of the people, out of our power without having fixed it.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Allow me to ask a question for my own information. I understand the bill applies to lands already granted by act of Congress to certain railroad companies. Would not this be adding a condition subsequent to the grant of those lands? And can we do that?

Mr. HOAR. It is only adding a condition when we are providing for the authority for a particular method of sale. We say that if these lands are to be taken for taxes by a power not now authorized to tax them it shall only be done on the condition that the title acquired under that tax-sale shall be forever held in amounts not exceeding 640 acres. That is all. I do not understand that anybody questions the constitutionality of the condition, so far as it relates to the sales made under the authority of this act.

Mr. HAWLEY. I suppose the Senator from Massachusetts hardly anticipates anything like an exact repetition of the evils of large holdings of land in Great Britain; but we are in danger of reaching those evils by a different course altogether. I am unwilling, however, to encumber this bill as reported by the committee with any attempt to cover the whole general subject. This has a wise and just purpose. It is a bill based upon one I had the honor to present myself and which received the approval of some of the ablest lawyers in Dakota, and others presented by other gentlemen and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. The committee in its wisdom reported the present bill.

There is a great deal more that I desire to do, but I do not propose to reach it through amendments, I may say hastily prepared for the pending bill. Let us have another bill.

I was not here when the bill was passed concerning alien holding (though I had previously stated my approval of it) to avoid the great evils of extensive absentee landlordism. In general, as I recollect the bill, I approve it.

There is a pending bill to repeal and end forever the pre-emption law, and to repeal the timber-culture law also, so that there may be but one way hereafter of getting possession of the public lands; that is to say, under the homestead act, with the exception of the provisions for holding larger extents of grazing and desert lands. But there is more yet needed.

Sir, the history of the State of New York from 1840 to 1850 is more instructive than the history of any other States in this matter, owing to the very fierce excitement that arose there known as the anti-rent agitation. There were felt the evils of large and permanent holdings of lands, and the people endeavored to strike at the root of the evil. I picked up the other day their constitution of 1846, which revived my memory of the history of those days. Allow me to quote a paragraph or two.

SEC. 11. The people of this State, in their right of sovereignty, are deemed to possess the original and ultimate property in and to all lands within the jurisdiction of the State; and all lands, the title to which shall fail, from a defect of heirs, shall revert or escheat to the people.

I may say in passing that I think provisions such as it is attempted to add to the pending bill will be found to be very burdensome ultimately when this land passes under the control of States. I do not think it is wise that these lands should have attached to them for centuries to come conditions imposed now by the National Government, while we are simply the guardian of infant States. The next section of the New York constitution says:

SEC. 12. All feudal tenures of every description, with all their incidents, are declared to be abolished, saving, however, all rents and services certain which at any time heretofore have been lawfully created or reserved.

SEC. 13. All lands within this State are declared to be allodial, so that, subject only to the liability to escheat, the entire and absolute property is vested in the owners, according to the nature of their respective estates.

Here follows a very significant section that I commend to our Public Lands Committee in connection with their legislation for the Territories:

SEC. 14. No lease or grant of agricultural land for a longer period than twelve years, hereafter made, in which shall be reserved any rent or service of any kind, shall be valid.

That I desire to see held over these Territories until they shall have passed through our guardianship and have become States controlling their own destinies in local affairs.

SEC. 15. All fines, quarter-sales, or other like restraints upon alienation reserved in any grant of land hereafter to be made, shall be void.

I desire that these lands, when they shall pass into the possession of the States, shall be covered by constitutional provisions like these. There is also a statute, passed after the adoption of this constitution, which indicates what I believe to be the right policy for the Territories and for the States in general concerning the tenure of real estate. It is in the laws of 1867, I believe:

SECTION 1. It shall be lawful for any joint stock company or association to purchase, hold, and convey real estate for the following purposes:

1. Such as shall be necessary for its immediate accommodation in the convenient transaction of its business; or—

That is to say, of a bank or insurance company—

2. Such as shall be mortgaged to it in good faith, by way of security for loans made by, or moneys due to, such joint stock company or association; or,

3. Such as it shall purchase at sales under judgments, decrees, or mortgages held by such joint stock company or association.

The statute proceeds to say:

The said joint stock company or association shall not purchase, hold, or convey real estate in any other case or for any other purpose.

Another statute, that I have not but that I remember well, prevents speculation in real estate in the case of any bank, insurance, or similar corporation, and provides that if such a corporation shall acquire possession of lands by foreclosure it shall be required within five years to dispose thereof. So jealous was New York of accumulations of land that, lest these accumulations should be made under the guise of forfeitures and foreclosures, corporations were permitted to hold only for the immediate purpose of their incorporation, and were required to dispose of lands acquired in course of legitimate business within a limited number of years.

In one sense it makes very little difference that we have dispensed with the laws of primogeniture and entailment; for there is another possibility of evil quite aside from those, another form of reaching the same evil. We are all familiar with the fundamental laws and characteristics of corporations in general. They have an eternal life. Land acquired to-day may be held forever. Land acquired by an individual under the chances of society is not likely to be held long in one family. But we are permitting Territorial Legislatures to create certain corporations, possibly we are creating them ourselves, which may acquire land in absolutely unlimited quantities, and have a greater likelihood of holding for centuries than was probable under the ancient laws of England. Who shall say what will be the complaints and the evils that will arise ten, fifteen, or twenty, or a hundred years hence when these Territories shall have passed out of our control, out of our guardianship, and shall have become States? The States will find immense tracts of land in single ownerships, with a perfect title obtained from the United States in the days of their infancy, and we may be providing, without knowing it to-day, for an agitation similar to that and far greater than that which prevailed in New York forty years ago.

I would not permit any corporation whatever to acquire large bodies of land for the purpose of speculation or trade. I would permit none to hold any more than was absolutely necessary for its own straightforward and legitimate business. I would require it to part within a certain short period with all lands that it might acquire in the collection of debts. I would restrict within the narrowest limits the holding of lands by corporations. Moreover, I would restrict the quantity that might be held by individuals while this land is under our jurisdiction and guardianship.

This bill has a perfectly legitimate and honest purpose. I hope the bill will be confined to that. If there be any attempt made, as there ought to be, to reach these other general purposes, it should be in a distinct general bill to be reported by the committee.

Mr. HOAR. Will my friend from Connecticut allow me to ask how he proposes to let this land get out of our power and then affect it by another bill?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not understand the question.

Mr. HOAR. I ask how he expects, if we let this land get out of our power by this bill without this condition, that it will be possible to make any general law that will affect this land hereafter?

Mr. HAWLEY. I do not know that I comprehend all the legal relations of this bill; but the purpose of it is to cure an evil that has arisen in the Territories by which great railroad companies—not one but several—have kept the virtual title of these lands, have practically sold them to settlers, and when a settler was called upon to pay his taxes he went back through the title of the railroad company to show that the title was still in the United States for the lack of the payment of 2 or 3 cents an acre for surveying. Wherefore the fee being still in the National Government, the Supreme Court has decided that the lands are exempt from taxation, and great embarrassment has arisen.

I hope we shall not think it wise to encumber lands now absolutely under our control in the Territories with conditions to remain upon them a century hence. When they shall have passed to the control of States, let those States take and hold them under such title as New York gives to its people and claims for itself; but in the mean time, while the Territories are our pupils, our wards, let us legislate with the very broadest and most generous views of the future so as to avoid all the evils of absentee landlords and immense estates held under perpetual titles.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I sympathize with the desire of the Senator from Massachusetts to prevent now, or at any time when there is an opportunity, by law the great accumulations of landed estates in corporations or in individuals. I think that is the coming danger and the coming curse of the West and of the South and of the Northwest; and for the passage of any proper law to restrict and restrain and direct in that regard I believe I shall always be ready to vote. But the object of this bill, if we may understand it has an object at all, the sole object of this bill is to bring under the law of taxation the vast quantities of land which have been given mostly to States to aid them in building railroads, or directly to the railroad companies themselves, and relieve the settlers through the sparsely settled regions of the country where these lands lie from the whole burden of taxation—to impose it alike upon land held by railroads and upon land held by settlers. That is the object of this bill.

Now, so far as that can be attained by the bill I approve of the measure and shall support it; but to my mind there comes in in this proviso a plan and process which will necessarily and absolutely defeat all the objects of the bill. To accomplish another purpose, to prevent a larger holding by corporations or by individuals through a tax-title than 640 acres, an obstruction is necessarily imposed upon the tax-sales of the larger portion of all the lands to which this bill might subject them.

Those familiar with our new country under the operation of the general land laws of the United States know very well from their own observations and experience that in all new States and in new regions there can be no non-resident lands returned for sale under the tax-laws secured by the purchase of individuals in small quantities. There is no such sale, and never has been, and never will be, in sparsely settled countries. There will never be a sale or a purchase at a tax-sale by individuals here and there. The lands are bought and the taxes are paid, and whatever title runs with the sale for taxes in all such regions the purchase is made by individuals in large quantities, 10 acres of this 40, 20 acres of that 80, the whole of another section bought off for the taxes, and it is bought in subject to the laws of the different States allowing redemption within a reasonable time and at a reasonable percentage added to the tax.

Mr. President, there are some members of the Senate who will not endure to be interrupted by my feeble voice when they are talking because it prevents the current of their thoughts and prevents the continuity of thought if there happens to be any. I would suggest to those gentlemen to listen a moment to what I have to say without interruption, which confuses me, a new man to this kind of business.

I have stated the history and the experience in all new States and in all new countries. Now, I call the attention of Senators to the fact that this applies mainly, I might almost say only, in regard to railroad lands to the vast region hundreds and thousands of miles in extent through which the transcontinental roads extend. Scattered all along these lines, although there may be an organized county, the settlements are very much scattered and sparse. Throughout all Dakota, throughout all Montana, throughout Northern Idaho, throughout Washington Territory, along the line of the Northern Pacific Railroad there are organized counties and a few settlements here and there, and a few residents away from the railroad. Now, suppose under the provisions of this bill all the lands for 2,000 miles may be taxed and may be taxed in counties where the settlers are homesteaders, where they are poor, where every dollar that they can wring from the soil or may have brought with them is necessary to the current expenses and to the livelihood of the year, who can buy these lands? Who can come to the sale and pay the taxes and bid in the lands and accomplish the object of this bill? For hundreds of miles along the Northern Pacific—and I speak of that because I have been along it—there would not be ten men in a county who would have the means to go to a tax-sale in the county and buy up these lands.

In one Territory there are millions of acres of railroad lands stretched along in counties. Who would buy hundreds of thousands of acres of this land if offered for sale? The railroad company finding its lands offered for sale could buy but 640 acres under the provisions of this amendment. The bankers and the capitalists are not the men who have gone along in this new country ready to invest their money in tax-sale lands. Who will buy? No one can buy these thousands and hundreds of thousands and millions of acres under this amendment if it succeeds when they are thrown into the market at tax-sales. The railroad can buy but this 640 acres.

Mr. HOAR. It can pay the taxes.

Mr. CONGER. The railroad can pay the taxes, it is said; but the railroad may not have paid the taxes. I am speaking merely of the impossibility of finding a purchaser. So benevolent societies can go and pay their taxes; benevolent men can go and pay taxes, if they want to do so, for railroad companies. There are possibilities within the range of the imagination of the Senator from Massachusetts which do not have force with me.

Mr. HOAR. Pardon me; the Senator does not understand my point. I understand that the bill proposes a sale on the failure by the railroad company to pay taxes on the lands of the railroad. The Senator's argument is that the railroad can not buy in the land at the sale, but if the railroad pays the tax the title becomes vested in it without any sale or purchase.

Mr. CONGER. Of course. I suppose any Senator of ordinary perception would arrive at that conclusion without the interruption. My argument is that there is nobody to buy the lands at the tax sale. They are there for sale. My argument is that, under the condition the Senator from Massachusetts would impose on this bill, the law itself becomes a dead failure in fact and of necessity; and the chairman of this committee, acquainted with the mode of selling tax lands in the great West and in new countries, and every man who is living where the general land laws of the United States are in force, will see at once that, whether intentionally or not—I have the charity to believe that it was not intentional—the effect is the same as if an enemy had come towards the close of the discussion of this bill, when it might be about to pass, and fastened upon the bill a provision which would render it utterly futile and useless as a law. I can not conceive it possible that that was the object of this amendment, but no man is so dull but that he must see that the necessary result of the amendment would be to prevent the carrying out of the law.

If I have illustrated that, I have made it plain that under the provisions of this amendment if the taxes assessed are not paid, whether assessed by Territories or by counties or by towns or in whatever manner, and the lands are offered for sale to secure the taxes so levied, there can not, in the very nature of the situation of things in that far-off region, be purchasers. No man could buy more than 640 acres. For each mile of this railroad, unless the lands had been sold or disposed of, there are lands granted miles in width. Running along with each mile of the railroad there are ten, twelve, fifteen, possibly twenty sections of railroad land, and for every mile of the length of the railroad 2,000 miles long there must be twenty different purchasers if the lands are taxed and offered for sale. They are not in that country. Every man, woman, and child might attempt to buy at these sales, and there would not be enough to buy in the lands thus taxed and thus desired to be sold.

But suppose the poor settlers could buy along in one place and another, Mr. President, do you or does any Senator here desire to inaugurate a system by which an unsuspicious and confiding people, ignorant of law, ignorant of the subtleties and quirks of the law, shall be induced under any consideration to make a home for themselves by buying tax-title lands, lands to which the Government has some title, to which the railroad company has some title, to which the bondholder has some title, to which the stockholder of the company has some rights, all which is spread out as broad as the limitless prairies through which these roads run, spread out open to future litigation and future contest.

Sir, I have seen too much of the evil effects, the disastrous effects upon those who have ventured to make their homes and own their homes through tax titles, even in the older portions of the country, to ever wish to see such scenes encouraged and renewed. If I had no other objection to this amendment, if the former objections were not of full and sufficient force to me, I would withhold my vote from it. I would vote against it always and continuously and lift my voice against it if it succeeds in encouraging in the slightest degree the poor, innocent, inoffensive, unprotected settler to trust his future for himself and family upon land for his home obtained through a tax title under this law.

Those are partially my objections to this provision being inserted in the bill. There is a place, there must be a place somewhere in the legislation of this country where we can begin now, although late, to limit the vast holdings of real estate, to prevent its being gathered together in the hands of one man or in the hands of one corporation, and shutting out millions and millions of our fellow-citizens now and in the future from the possibility of obtaining a homestead.

Much nearer to the home of the Senator from Massachusetts than to my home this danger of accumulation of land in one hand exists to-day. You may pass through the New England States, ay, you need not travel, you may stay at home and take the census of the New England States, and you will find that year by year, and almost day by day, the thrifty, successful farmer all through the valleys and along the rocky hills of New England has gathered in the 20 acres and the 40 acres and the 80 acres of his less fortunate neighbor; and you may travel along those roads that once had settlers within half a mile or a quarter of a mile or a mile of each other—you may travel along the roads in the rural parts of New England to-day and you will see the one homestead extending over miles of territory.

That is not so in Rhode Island. Thank God, Rhode Island is so small that there is no possibility of an accumulation of great landed estates within its borders. It is the safety of Rhode Island. I say that in answer to the nodding of my friend the Senator from that State [Mr. CHACE]. But in many parts of New England the actual, positive danger and wrong to-day is that the lands, whatever they be, good or bad, valley or mountain, alluvial or rocky, are gradually being accumulated into the hands of a few, and the young men and the middle-aged men are giving up their little parcels of land and going out to the great West to get more land and more sunshine and more air and more freedom. Now if there is any way which we can devise to restrict and restrain this fatal accumulation of small holdings into large holdings in New England, I should like to assist in furthering that object.

Mr. PLATT. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. CONGER. Yes, sir.

Mr. PLATT. I do not know how it may be in the rest of New England, but there is nothing of that sort going on in the State of Connecticut. On the other hand, the holdings are becoming smaller there year by year, the farms being divided up and held in less quantities than they have been formerly.

Mr. CONGER. The census reports do not show that. Unfortunately those who took our census were laboring under a mistake. The reports of the census show that there is a less number of farm-holdings in New England with each succeeding decade. Does the gentleman attack the census?

Mr. PLATT. I do not know anything about the census. The Senator has the advantage of me in that respect. I do know from my observation what I think is true.

Mr. CONGER. A reference which can be readily made by almost any Senator would settle the question beyond dispute.

Why, sir, it is even so in the older Western States, in your own State, Mr. President, that land holdings by the natural course of purchase and sale in the rural districts, in the very county in which you reside, become less in number except—and that is for the present the only redeeming thing about it—except that when those who have large holdings of land in Richland and in Huron and in Wayne and in those large counties die, the love of the farm and the love of the place and the desire to retain part of the old homestead leads continually to a division among the children and the grandchildren. That is so in Richland County within your knowledge and within mine. That for the time being equalizes to some extent the purchasing in of small holdings by the larger farmers.

Sir, that is the case in the southern tiers of counties of my own State. The two southern tiers of counties have a less number of farms to-day than they had ten years ago and a less number ten years ago than they had twenty years ago. It is the natural, inevitable result of prosperity and thrift on the one hand and the desire to sell out and go where more land can be obtained on the other, and it is spreading all through the Middle and the New England States and some of the newer Western States at this day.

Now, sir, while I deprecate the continual gathering together by foreign corporations or by foreign persons, aliens, or by citizens of these vast amounts of our rich alluvial soil in the South and in the West, I do not think the amendment offered here will have any tendency whatever to restrain it. We have sat still quietly, I from my natural diffidence and indisposition to push ahead, and the Senator from Massachusetts from having other and greater cares upon his mind; and he has remained in the House and in the Senate through a quarter of a century almost, and has seen and known that foreigners were accumulating in the United States lands by the 40,000, 50,000, and 100,000 acres, and though there was a little titillation, fear, and anxiety in regard to it, it did not occur to the Senator from Massachusetts that there was great danger in this accumulation till it comes to some paltry tax-sale and the encouragement which should be given to our citizens to buy in lands for homesteads by virtue of that vanishing, fluctuating, visionary, uncertain title to lands, a tax-title here and there and everywhere where tax-titles exist in the land.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, the question of the free tenure of land is vital to American institutions. The division of estates as distinguishable from primogeniture——

Mr. PLUMB. It is evident the debate is to be somewhat extended, judging by the indications, and I ask the Senator if he will yield the floor for a motion to go into executive session?

Mr. EVARTS. I have no desire to continue the debate to-morrow at all. What I have to say to-night I shall probably end within ten minutes. But if the Senators do not wish to listen to me for ten minutes—— ["Go on!" "Go on!"]

Mr. PLUMB. I only thought that as the debate was to go on somewhat indefinitely, this being a new subject, we had better proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EVARTS. I shall take but a little while.

Primogeniture on the one hand and an equal distribution of land upon the demise of the owner on the other, are very important institutions in a country where the one prevails and in our country where the other prevails. I do not understand that this minor clause in this tax-bill interferes with primogeniture or distribution. But, so far as it bears at all, and the Senator from Massachusetts avows the principle which he desires as expressed in this amendment to be extended over this land, it breaks down the freedom of the tenure of land. We hold our land here, all of us, in free and common socage, and not an acre of it is held under any feudal tie. Every acre of land that is to be put up and sold under this clause of this amendment is to be subject perpetually so that no longer can it be held in free and common socage, but is subject to a forfeiture to the United States.

Now, Mr. President, let us look at the very narrow topic that this is to meet. It is to govern tax-sales. If I had provided as a clause in these terms that no greater parcel than 640 acres should be sold under any tax-sale arising under the operation of the bill, and that shall be sold only by a base fee, I could have avoided and defeated the whole measure of this bill. If you pass a general law that all of our free holding of land shall be restored to a feudal obedience to the United States of America or the several States of the Union, that I can understand; but if you want to hamper a tax-sale of lands to which by any possibility these clauses can apply, when all around them there are holders in free and common socage with no baseness in their fee and no defect in its being a fee-simple absolute, you defeat the tax-sale; you change the tenure of the American people. No man with his eyes open buys a base fee, and that is the plain, distinct rule of the common law for that unfortunate conditition into which land may be brought as being subject to forfeiture on a condition at common law.

Now, Mr. President, as to the aggregation of land, pass laws if you please having such efficacy and having such purpose, but do not embrace so vast a subject and so high an object upon grasping in your hands only the trivial tax-sales that may occur, distinguishing them forever from all the other surrounding lands. It is not that land is in great or small amounts; the fact that we are owners of our land is the distinction of free property in land. It is our estate free of tenures that fell back and impeded its transfer and burdened it by forfeitures and entries in the name of mesne or paramount lord.

Mr. President, it is to you and to me and to all the other farmers in this land that we hold our frugal acres as owners for ourselves and our posterity, unhampered by a lord paramount who is to forfeit the estate.

Mr. PLATT. Mr. President, since my ideas with regard to the holdings of land in the State of Connecticut were called in question by the Senator from Michigan I have sent for the Compendium of the Census, and I find that in 1850 in Connecticut there were 22,445 farms; in 1860, 25,180; in 1870, the war intervening during that decade, there was only a small increase, 25,508; and in 1880, 30,598.

Mr. HOAR. Will you read Massachusetts?

Mr. PLATT. Massachusetts in 1850, 34,069; in 1860, 35,061. Then they ran down during the next decade, during which the war occurred, to 26,500, as it is here. I doubt whether that is correct. I think it is a misprint for 36,500; and in 1880, 38,406. So that there was an increase during every decade unless it was from 1860 to 1870.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Kansas to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONGER. Whether I was mistaken in regard to the number of holdings or not as appears here I do not know. I can not tell whether that alludes to such little farms as are around the cities. If it does, I was mistaken. It may have been that; but the fact that the farmers through the rural districts have accumulated to themselves the lands of others around them and that the large holdings take the place of several small ones I venture to say nobody will deny. That is the point I made.

Now, I want to say that all around the manufacturing cities the lands have been divided up. I do not call those the rural districts proper. They have been divided up into little farms, truck farms, things of that kind, 5, 10, 15, perhaps 20 acres, growing up around manufacturing establishments and in the neighborhood of cities. But when any Senator from New England will tell me that away from the cities in the farming lands proper there is not an accumulation of larger farms, the small farmers have sold out to the larger ones, then I will yield the point I have made.

Mr. PLATT. I do not pretend to contend with the Senator from Michigan as to what the condition of things is in the State of Michigan, but I think I know with regard to the State of Connecticut. The number of acres in farms is not being increased in the State of Connecticut and has not been. On the contrary, just the other thing is going on. The old families that had three, four, and five hundred acres, as the old farmers die off, divide their farms, and they are largely being taken up now by enterprising Germans and Irishmen in smaller holdings; and the agricultural towns, which for a time became to a certain extent depopulated, that is, the population decreased in them, are now being increased again just from that fact, that the farms are being divided and that either native farmers or foreigners, largely Germans and Irishmen, are taking up the lands in smaller quantities and working them more thoroughly than they were worked under the old régime.

Mr. INGALLS. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. If the Senator will allow me a sentence——

Mr. INGALLS. My purpose was to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, but for the purpose of enabling the Senator to say a sentence, I will allow that motion to be pending.

Mr. HOAR. I do not wish to go on with a speech to-night, but I would like to state a word in regard to what my honorable friend from Michigan has said.

There are three manufacturing counties in Massachusetts in which the proportion of income in comparison to the value of the capital, treating the farm and the stock, the tools and appliances, as capital, make nearly the very best showing of any community in the United States. There are two counties which I selected last year for the benefit of some addresses to my constituents in reference to the operation of the tariff policy on agriculture. While there are a few counties like Genesee County, New York, and Lancaster County, Pennsylvania, and some few others that excel these, still in spite of our sterile soil, agriculture makes a very handsome showing in comparison with other places. There is, however, what the Senator speaks of somewhat contemptuously—I do not think he meant it contemptuously, however—as the little truck farms. We have twenty-three large manufacturing cities in Massachusetts. In addition to that we have a vast number of towns of ten, twelve, eight, six, or five thousand inhabitants, and small manufacturing villages on the streams, making a market; and the farmers who go into the business of raising berries and fruits and fresh vegetables for those markets get rich. I know a little country town, the town in which my father was born, where quite a number of the private farmers have made handsome fortunes by this business. They are about 12 or 14 miles out of Boston.

It is true that in the more bleak rural communities in Massachusetts and in very small towns, and so of New Hampshire, and perhaps not so much in Vermont, but at any rate in New Hampshire and Massachusetts, what the Senator alluded to has taken place. Homesteads which were occupied a generation ago by the men who were the very bone and sinew of America are not there now. They were farmers, living on those bleak farms, but they made the best jurors, the best legislators, the best governors of towns, the best citizens, if I may be permitted to say so, that ever existed on the face of this earth; and in my ancestral line there are some instances of it. They are the men who planted Ohio and Michigan; they are the men who planted the standard in Nebraska, who settled California; and they are the men whose spirit, living again, has crossed with hungry eyes to Washington and Oregon. It is true that when these villages grew up the younger farmers, when they come home from school like to go to the city, where they can have the advantages of churches, and lyceums, and good schools, physicians, and all the pleasures of society; and these farms were sold.

But as my friend from Connecticut has said in regard to his own State, that is changing now. The Irishman and the Swede, and the German to some extent, are filling up those places. They are not getting these large holdings; my friend from Michigan is mistaken in that. The lands are sold to the poor Irishman accustomed to live in hardship and with economy, to whom the possession and ownership of land, however rocky or sterile, is a great step in fulfilling his ambition. The future of the farming districts of Massachusetts and New England I think we have no occasion to be anxious for. At any rate the evil at which my amendment strikes of having the vast aggregations of land in foreign ownership, or of allowing individuals, the millionaire, the railroad magnate, or the merchant to gather together the title to hundreds and thousands of acres for selfish pride and pleasure, there is no danger will ever exist in New England.

Mr. INGALLS. After the sentence uttered by the Senator from Massachusetts, I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Kansas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After eight minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, June 3, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

John H. Hamilton, to be postmaster at Eureka Springs, Carroll County, Arkansas.

Charles A. Sheldon, to be postmaster at Gainesville, Alachua County, Florida.

William N. Hensley, to be postmaster at Columbus, in the county of Platte and State of Nebraska.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads submits the following report: "On the 10th day of December, 1885, the President nominated to the Senate William N. Hensley to be postmaster at Columbus, Nebr., vice Henry J. Hudson, suspended during the recess of the Senate. The suspension seems to have been made for political reasons only, and the committee has not found anything in the case reflecting upon the personal or official character or conduct of the suspended officer. The nominee seems to be a person competent to discharge the duties of the office. The committee therefore report the nomination of the said William N. Hensley to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.".

J. M. Gilliland to be postmaster at Nashua, in the county of Chickasaw and State of Iowa.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

On the 16th day of December, 1885, the President nominated to the Senate J. M. Gilliland to be postmaster at Nashua, Iowa, vice Joseph F. Grawe, suspended during the recess of the Senate. The suspension seems to have been made for political reasons only, and the committee has not found anything in the case reflecting upon the personal or official character or conduct of the suspended officer. The nominee seems to be a person competent to discharge the duties of the office. The committee, therefore, report the nomination of the said J. M. Gilliland to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Franklin A. Thompson, to be postmaster at McCook, Red Cloud County, Nebraska.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

On the 11th day of February, 1886, the President nominated to the Senate Franklin A. Thompson to be postmaster at McCook, Nebr., vice Alonzo P. Sharp, suspended during the recess of the Senate. The suspension seems to have been made for political reasons only, and the committee has not found anything in the case reflecting upon the personal or official character or conduct of the suspended officer. The nominee seems to be a person competent to discharge the duties of the office. The committee therefore report the nomination of the said Franklin A. Thompson to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

Adam Ferguson, to be postmaster at North Platte, in the county of Lincoln and State of Nebraska.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

On the 16th day of December, 1885, the President nominated to the Senate Adam Ferguson to be postmaster at North Platte, Nebr., vice John E. Evans, suspended during the recess of the Senate. The suspension seems to have been made for political reasons only, and the committee has not found anything in the case reflecting upon the personal or official character or conduct of the suspended officer. The nominee seems to be a person competent to discharge the duties of the office. The committee therefore report the nomination of the said Adam Ferguson to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

C. E. Forbes, to be postmaster at Saint Paul, in the county of Howard and State of Nebraska.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Post-Offices and Post-Roads; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

On the 10th day of December, 1885, the President nominated to the Senate C. E. Forbes to be postmaster at Saint Paul, Nebr., vice Adelbert A. Kendall, suspended during the recess of the Senate. The suspension seems to have been made for political reasons only, and the committee has not found anything in the case reflecting upon the personal or official character or conduct of the suspended officer. The nominee seems to be a person competent to discharge the duties of the office. The committee therefore report the nomination of the said C. E. Forbes to the Senate with a recommendation that it be confirmed.

REJECTION.

Executive nomination rejected May 25, 1886.

Andrew Shanahan, nominated to be postmaster at Rockland, Plymouth County, Massachusetts.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, June 2, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

TAXATION ON PETROLEUM, HOLLAND.

The SPEAKER laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In response to a resolution of the House of Representatives of the 17th of March last, requesting the Secretary of State "to communicate to the House of Representatives, if not incompatible with the public interests, copies of recent correspondence and dispatches between the Secretary of State and the minister of the United States at the Hague, touching the subject of taxation on petroleum in Holland and in the Dutch colonies, and that of the export therefrom of leaf-tobacco to the United States," with reference to my message to the House of Representatives of the 14th ultimo, I now transmit a further report of the Secretary of State on the subject.

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 1, 1886.

CLAIMS CERTIFIED BY COURT OF CLAIMS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House communications from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting copies of order of findings of fact by that court in the several cases of Newit Harris, John A. Oursler, and Indiana E. Hughes against the United States; which were severally referred to the Committee on War Claims.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a bill of the Senate of the following title; which was read a first and second time, and referred to the Committee on Labor, namely:

A bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the privileges secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes relating to hours of labor.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CUTCHEON, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HALL, for two weeks, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, for five days.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. BUTTERWORTH, by unanimous consent leave was granted to withdraw from the files of the House the petition of Eliza Rodde, in reference to an application for pension filed on the 24th day of May.

LAWS OF DAKOTA.

The SPEAKER announced as managers on the part of the House at a conference between the Senate and House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the bill (H. R. 5888) to legalize and validate the general laws of the Territory of Dakota, &c., Mr. HILL, Mr. BOYLE, and Mr. BAKER.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. BEACH. I shall be obliged to object. I suppose that will keep until next Monday.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. WILSON, from the Committee on Appropriations, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, together with the amendments of the Senate thereto, having considered the same, beg leave to report as follows:

They recommend concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 7, 10, 16, 25, 28, 29, 30, 31, 35, 53, 54, 72, 77, 81, 82, 92, and 114.

They recommend non-concurrence in the amendments of the Senate numbered 1, 2, 4, 5, 6, 8, 9, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 22, 23, 24, 26, 27, 32, 33, 34, 36, 37, 38, 39, 40, 41, 42, 43, 44, 45, 46, 47, 48, 49, 50, 51, 52, 55, 56, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 73, 74, 75, 76, 78, 79, 80, 83, 84, 85, 86, 87, 88, 89, 90, 91, 93, 94, 95, 96, 97, 98, 99, 100, 101, 102, 103, 104, 105, 106, 107, 108, 109, 110, 111, 112, 113, 115, 116, 117, 118, 119, 120, 121, 122, 123, 124, 125, 126, 127, 128, 129, and 130.

The SPEAKER. Is the reading of the amendments demanded?

Mr. REAGAN. I should like to have the gentleman from West Virginia state what the principal amendments are.

Mr. WILSON. The Senate added about one hundred and thirty amendments to the bill as it passed the House. Some are mere verbal amendments, and many increases are made of appropriations. The report of the committee recommends concurrence in no case where the amount appropriated by the House has been increased.

Mr. BLOUNT. What is the aggregate of the increase?

Mr. WILSON. The aggregate is two hundred and eleven thousand and some hundred dollars.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection the question will be taken upon agreeing to all of the amendments of the Senate in which the committee recommend concurrence.

The said amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. No separate vote being demanded, the motion will be taken to non-concur in all the rest of the amendments.

The motion to non-concur was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON moved to reconsider the several votes taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. WILSON. I ask now that a conference be requested with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the House will request a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses; and the Chair will appoint the managers at the conference on the part of the House.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. WILSON, Mr. ADAMS of New York, and Mr. HENDERSON of Iowa were appointed as managers on the part of the House at said conference.

AQUEDUCT BRIDGE.

Mr. BARBOUR. I submit the report of the committee of conference on the bill (S. 200) known as the Aqueduct Bridge bill.

The Clerk read the report, as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments to Senate bill No. 200 recommend as follows:

That the House agree to the amendment of the Senate, as follows: Page 1, line 4, after the word "bridge," insert the words "including the piers thereof."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 1, line 12, strike out after the word "same" all down to and including the word "bridge," in line 15.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 1, line 20, strike out the word "one-fourth" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 1, lines 22 and 23, strike out the word "three-fourths" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 2, line 25, strike out all after the word "survey" down to and including the word "bridge," in line 26.

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 2, line 27, strike out the word "one-fourth" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 2, line 29, strike out the word "three-fourths" and insert the word "one-half."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 3, lines 3 and 4, strike out the words "and the length of draw."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 3, line 8, strike out the word "and" after the word "Illinois."

That the Senate agree to the amendment of the House, as follows: Page 3, line 8, after the word "Virginia," insert the words "Saint Louis, Missouri."

At the end of the bill add the following sections:

"SEC. 3. That if in the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge under the first section, at any time, it shall be deemed necessary to obtain from the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal Company, or its grantees, any release or conveyance of any portion of the ground upon which the northern abutment of the Aqueduct Bridge rests, or right to cross the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal from the abutment to Bridge street, or if a good title can not be procured by contract to any property required in the construction of a bridge under the second section, the same shall be acquired by the Secretary of War by condemnation in the manner provided by the act approved May 8, 1872, entitled 'An act making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the year ending June 30, 1873, and for other purposes:' Provided That the condemnation proceedings, if any such proceedings are necessary, shall not prevent the taking possession, on payment of the purchase-money, of the Aqueduct Bridge by the United States, and opening the same to the public as a free bridge, if the same shall be acquired under the first section: Provided further, That the sum of $10,000 of the sum hereby appropriated shall be available to meet the payments under condemnation proceedings, if any shall he had.

"SEC. 4. The act approved February 23, 1881, entitled 'An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River, at or near Georgetown in the District of Columbia, and for other purposes,' is hereby repealed."

JOHN S. BARBOUR,
J. H. ROWELL,
WM. L. WILSON,
Conferees on the part of the House.
H. H. RIDDLEBERGER,
Z. B. VANCE,
JOHN C. SPOONER,
Conferees on the part of the Senate.

The statement of the conferees on the part of the House was read, as follows:

The conferees on the part of the House upon the bill of the Senate 200 respectfully make the following statement to accompany and explain the report of the conference:

The Senate has agreed to all the amendments to said bill made by the House, and both parties have agreed that the words "including the piers thereof" should be inserted after the word "bridge," in line 4, so as to avoid any uncertainty in the interpretation of the aforesaid word "bridge."

JOHN S. BARBOUR,
WM. L. WILSON,
J. H. ROWELL,
Conferees on part of House.

The report was adopted.

Mr. BARBOUR moved to reconsider the vote by which the report was adopted; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I call for the regular order.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

NATIONAL TRADES UNIONS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, from the Committee on Labor, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 7621) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, from the Committee on Labor, also reported back the bill (H. R. 6084) to legalize the incorporation of national trades unions; which was laid on the table.

CONSIDERATION OF EDUCATION BILL.

Mr. DANIEL (by Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri), from the Committee on Labor, reported back with amendments the following resolution; which was read, and referred to the House Calendar:

Resolved, That Thursday, the 10th day of June, 1886, be set apart for the consideration of the bill H. R. 7266, entitled a bill to aid in the establishment and temporary support of common schools.

MRS. SARAH L. LATIMER.

Mr. LANHAM, from the Committee on Claims, reported, as a substitute for H. R. 6051, a bill (H. R. 9124) to compensate Mrs. Sarah L. Latimer for loss of property taken by Sioux Indians; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

House bill No. 6051 was laid on the table.

Mr. BUCHANAN obtained leave to file the views of the minority; which were ordered to be printed with the report of the majority of the committee.

J. W. BEAMAN AND B. F. SCRIBNER.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2990) for the relief of John W. Beaman and B. F. Scribner; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. COMSTOCK, from the Committee on War Claims, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 6649) for the relief of George F. Brott; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

BRIDGE ACROSS EASTERN BRANCH.

Mr. ROWELL, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 4806) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Eastern Branch of the Potomac River at the foot of Pennsylvania avenue east; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

SCHOOL BOARD FOR THE DISTRICT.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, reported, as a substitute for the bill H. R. 5235, a bill (H. R. 9125) to create a school board for the District of Columbia and to prescribe its powers and duties; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

The bill H. R. 5235 was laid on the table.

NATIONAL SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY.

Mr. BARBOUR, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, also reported back with a favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 2589) to amend an act entitled "An act to incorporate the National Safe Deposit Company, of Washington, in the District of Columbia," approved January 22, 1867; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

PARK LANDS AT MARQUETTE, MICH.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with amendments the bill (H. R. 6094) granting to the city of Marquette, Mich., certain lands for park purposes, with amendments; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the amendments and accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue. Pending that motion, I ask unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock this afternoon the committee shall rise and report the pending bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. REAGAN. Might not an earlier hour be fixed?

Mr. HATCH. Some gentlemen informed me there are substantial amendments which they desire to discuss. I have therefore proposed that the committee shall rise at 4 o'clock.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that at 4 o'clock this afternoon the Committee of the Whole shall rise and report back to the House the bill under consideration with amendments. Is there objection?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. If this order should be made would it not have the same effect in the Committee of the Whole as ordering the previous question in the House?

The SPEAKER. It is proposed to direct the committee to report the bill back to the House at 4 o'clock, and then if the previous question is ordered it will have to be ordered by the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This has the effect of peremptorily requiring the committee to rise at that hour, no matter what point in the bill they may have reached for consideration?

The SPEAKER. That would be the effect of the order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. For instance, if we had not yet reached the nineteenth section, which gives the informer a moiety, we should be cut off from the discussion of that section.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to the gentleman that that is one of the sections that we desire to discuss, and there can be no doubt whatever that we shall reach it during the day.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Can we have a yea-and-nay vote on that in the House? I think it is very important that we should have a vote on that section.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to that.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no doubt that we can reach the nineteenth section during the day, but to make this order now would enable parties to waste all the intervening time and prevent our reaching that or other sections.

Mr. HATCH. I assure the gentleman that there is no disposition on the part of those who are in favor of this bill to waste any time on any section.

Mr. HAMMOND. Well, I do not know the disposition of those who are opposed to it. I object. I am perfectly willing that a vote shall be had earlier, but I can not consent to the arrangement proposed.

Mr. DUNHAM. I hope the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] will withdraw his objection.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will not. I would like to have a vote on the bill in an hour, but I do not wish to place myself in a box.

Mr. DUNHAM. As I understand the position of the gentleman——

The SPEAKER. The proposition has been made and stated by the Chair, and it has been objected to by the gentleman from Georgia, who insists upon his objection.

Mr. DUNHAM. I want to see if I understand it correctly. There can be no harm in that.

The SPEAKER. But the gentleman from Georgia objects.

Mr. HAMMOND. It is immaterial whether the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] understands it correctly or not. I object. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of bills raising revenue.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. SPRINGER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.

R. 8328) defining butter; also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 3, section 11, strike out "fifty" and insert "ten;" making it read: "That every person who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped according to law shall be liable to a penalty of $50 for each such offense."

The question was taken on the amendment, and there were—ayes 4, noes 78.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no further amendments to this section of the bill the Clerk will report the next section.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 12. That every person who purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine from any manufacturer who has not paid the special tax shall be liable for each offense to a penalty of $100 and to a forfeiture of all articles so purchased or received, or of the full value thereof.

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word of the section, and do so for the purpose of submitting some general remarks in opposition to the bill.

To the supporters of the measure I concede that if oleomargarine and its kindred compounds are noxious and deleterious to health, which, however, has not been shown during this debate save by vague general assertion, their manufacture and sale ought to be regulated or suppressed according as the nature and extent of the mischiefs to be remedied require. But for the enactment of such laws, I submit, the police power of the States should be invoked and not the limited authority of the Federal Government. I concede further that oleomargarine and other like articles of food ought to be made to stand on their own merits, and that their fraudulent sales as genuine products ought to be severely condemned by public opinion and effectually guarded against by suitable laws.

It does not rest with Congress, however, to apply correctives, though these evils be ever so aggravated and flagrant. This should be done by the Legislatures of the States. In either event, that is, whether the bill be considered a sanitary regulation or a measure for the prevention of frauds and impositions, I can but regard it an invasion by Federal of State authority. And right here let me repeat, with emphasis, what has been so often said before, that the growing disposition of the Federal Government to unduly extend its powers can but be viewed with anxiety and solicitude, if not alarm, by those who would hold its several departments to their delegated functions. This disposition, unresisted and unchecked, must inevitably sooner or later result in strengthening and broadening Federal jurisdiction to such an extent that State lines will exist only on the map and be without political significance or bearing.

We are told by others that the bill is a revenue measure, and therefore clearly within the constitutional grant to Congress of the power to "lay and collect taxes," &c. But does the Government need larger revenues than are now collected? On the contrary the declaration is heard everywhere, both inside and out of this House, that taxation must be reduced, not increased. Again, what are the provisions which it is claimed give a revenue character to the bill? They are the special taxes of $600 on the manufacturer, $480 on the wholesale dealer, $48 on the retail dealer, and 10 cents per pound on the article itself. The testimony of gentlemen familiar with the subject is to the effect that these taxes will render unprofitable and hence impracticable the continued manufacture of oleomargarine. If this be true no revenue, of course, can be derived from the bill. These two conditions, namely, that no larger revenues are needed and that the proposed taxes would practically discontinue the manufacture of oleomargarine, strip the bill of its revenue garb and disclose as its real object the fostering of dairy interests at the expense of a competing domestic industry. Than this no greater departure from early principles and traditions has ever been attempted.

What, think you, would have been the feelings of the men who constructed the Government a hundred years ago on the principle of equal rights could they have foreseen that one of its sovereign powers, that of taxation, was ultimately to be used as a means of protecting one American industry from the competition of another American industry? Despondency, if not despair, would have staggered their energies. And yet, sir, as is openly avowed by its recognized promoters, such is the substantial purpose of the mischievous bill we are now considering. The fact that it comes to us disguised as a revenue measure but intensifies its viciousness. I have not time to discuss at length the constitutional phase of this question, but will submit a simple inquiry: What is the essential principle of the bill? What is the doctrine on which it necessarily rests? It is that hateful principle which invites and justifies legislation in behalf of special interests. It is the odious doctrine of class legislation whose abominable office it is to destroy one domestic industry in order that a more vigorous and profitable growth may be imparted to another domestic industry, a doctrine which can rightfully have no place or standing in a land of free institutions, but which belongs only to aristocratic and monarchical establishments.

In my opinion, Mr. Chairman, there can not be found in all the history of the Republic a more dangerous precedent than that which the enactment of this bill into a law would establish. Could the voices of Jefferson and Jackson be lifted to-day from their graves and reach us on this side of the House their utterances would be those of displeasure if not of wrath. In blistering words would they denounce this bill, not only as un-American, but as violative of the high aims and principles of that great party of constitutional law and equal rights which they founded and preserved, not for particular classes and interests, but for the common good of the generations that were to follow them. They would also implore us to resist and oppose all efforts at class legislation, and to hold fast to the elemental tenet of democratic faith, "Unjust privileges to none; equal protection of the laws to all."

The advocacy of this measure by Republicans is no occasion of surprise. It possesses at least the virtue, if virtue it be, of consistency. Such action on their part is in keeping with the dogmas of that school of political philosophy in which they have been taught. The protective policy of which this bill is but an extreme manifestation is the cardinal economic belief of the Republican party; and under the rule of that party this protective policy has been expanded to such an extent over numberless interests and classes that monopoly in its multiform character has at last grown so great that its huge shadow darkens all the land. No wonder that gentlemen so earnestly, intensely devoted to a particular dogma rush it blindly, madly rush it, to dangerous if not fatal extremes. Of the Republicans, therefore, who support this measure we can but involuntarily exclaim, "Lord, have mercy on them; they know not what they do!" But no such excuse exists for our Democratic friends. They have been brought up in a different school of politics, and the country expects of them better things.

But, sir, in mitigation of the evil of this bill, it is said that it is in the interest of the farmer. We are told also that in meeting the expenses of government heavy, unequal burdens rest upon the agricultural interests of the country. No truth more obvious and at the same time more shameful than the latter statement has ever been promulgated in this House. But how, in what conceivable way, can this bill lift the burdens complained of? Mr. Chairman, the plea that the measure is in the interest of agriculture will not do, nor will it be accepted by the farmers of the country, whose approbation it is designed to secure.

Mr. MILLS obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to my colleague [Mr. WELLBORN].

Mr. WELLBORN. I was about to observe, Mr. Chairman, that American farmers are not readily duped. They are men of intelligence as well as of honesty and patriotism. They realize keenly the grievous wrongs to which they have long been subjected by vicious legislation. They are in arms for relief, and for one I trust that the momentous though bloodless contest will not be ended until their grievances are redressed. But, sir, these grievances spring from poisoned, malignant sources, which this bill does not undertake to touch. Let me enumerate some of them.

First and foremost I place the protective tariff, whose intolerable burdens distress and persecute the fireside of every farmer in the land.

Second. Another fruitful source of injury and harm to the agriculturist is the failure of Congress to regulate interstate commerce. Next to uniform and equal taxation there is nothing which more nearly concerns the farmer than the transportation of his products to the markets of the world on fair and reasonable terms. Corporate privileges—among others the transcendent right of eminent domain—are conferred not for the advantage of individuals but for the public good, and Government should see to it that these privileges are so used as to promote, not defeat, the object of their grant.

In the third place, our contracted, inadequate currency is another evil which afflicts and curses agricultural as well as other laboring interests. A currency insufficient in volume can but enhance the value of money and correspondingly depreciate the prices of agricultural as well as other products of labor.

These are some of the monstrous wrongs to which farmers are subjected. In the face of these wrongs, what is the situation here to-day? What, Mr. Chairman, is the message which this day's proceedings of the House will send to the farmer in answer to his repeated demands for justice? Let me outline it. "Farmers of America, in order to still further increase the colossal fortunes of manufacturers you must continue to bear the intolerable burdens of protection. To the end that railroad magnates and kings may continue to draw large dividends on unreal, watered, fictitious stock you must still submit to those unjust corporate exactions which are inevitable in the absence of laws regulating interstate commerce. In the interests of national banks, of bondholders, and of persons with fixed incomes you must suffer indefinitely the fearful evils of a contracted currency, made more inadequate by the refusal of Congress to restore silver to free and unlimited coinage. But, as an atonement for these multiplied and unutterable wrongs, as compensation for the stupendous burdens you bear and the incalculable losses you sustain in the respects named, know that here under the dome of the nation's Capitol your chosen representatives are now, and have been for days, engaged in a splendid, heroic struggle to crush out that sum of all infamies, oleomargarine, and thus rescue from dangerous competition your surplus butter." [Laughter and applause.]

This may be satisfactory to the large dairy interests of the country; but, sir, I greatly mistake the intelligent, patriotic manhood of the American farmer if he does not respond to this message indignantly and resentfully.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. NELSON. I move to amend the pro forma amendment so as to strike out the last two words. And I will yield my time to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN].

Mr. WELLBORN. Mr. Chairman, I was about to say, that when the farmers come to investigate and reflect deliberately upon this bill so far from indorsing they will condemn it as an extreme development of that odious policy of protection whose robberies have impoverished them to the enrichment of manufacturers. And I say further, that instead of consuming the time of the House in an effort to pull down one interest in order to make another more prosperous, under the delusive plea of benefiting agriculture, better far would it be were we to devote our attention to measures which will bring substantial and permanent relief to this tax-ridden, monopoly-oppressed industry.

The more important of these measures, as I have already indicated, are the abrogation of the protective tariff, the regulation of interstate commerce, and the restoration of silver to free and unlimited coinage. To these I would add another measure or policy of interest not only to farmers but to all classes, namely, the absolute and irrevocable dedication of all that remains of our public domain to homestead uses for those of our people who are homeless and landless. No object of higher, more universal concern than that of placing it within the power of the individual to acquire for himself a home ever had the sanction of American patriotism or challenged the energies of American statesmanship. There are two conditions calculated to attach the citizen to his country and his government:

First. Ownership of the roof, however humble it may be, which shelters his wife and children.

Second. Consciousness of the fact that the law extends over this roof and those beneath it a jealous protection, given to no other species of property, and the fullness of which is aptly represented in those sublime utterances of Chatham:

> The poorest man may in his cottage bid defiance to all the forces of the Crown. It may be frail; its roof may shake; the wind may blow through it; the storm may enter; the rain may enter, but the King of England may not enter. All his force dares not cross the threshold of the ruined tenement.

Give to a man this ownership and this consciousness and he will love the country which holds within its borders, and revere the government which shields from harm and intrusion, what to him is the most sacred of localities. For this country and this government he will fight; for them, if need be, he will die.

Mr. Chairman, while I speak to-day with all the earnestness of my nature, while I speak with all the emphasis that my humble control of language can give, in behalf of an oppressed industry—agriculture, I do not claim to be its special champion to the exclusion of all other interests. And were I to arrogate to myself the exclusive championship of this or any other industry or interest my utterances ought to be despised as the wiles of a conscienceless man degrading the high office of an American Representative into the contemptible rôle of a political trickster.

But I do claim to represent all the interests and all the classes of my constituency, and when one of these is borne down by oppression duty commands me to its attempted relief. And I tell you to-day, sir, the wrongs which I have hurriedly enumerated must be redressed or else the social and political elements of the country will be kept in a state of constant disturbance, not only perilous to public peace and order, but ultimately to the stability of our institutions. Sir, no matter how widely members of this House may differ on other questions, no matter how fierce and bitter party prejudice and passion may at times unfortunately become, there is one question upon which I trust that middle aisle may never divide us—the desirability of perpetuating free constitutional government. To this end we ought sternly to resist all efforts at class legislation, all propositions which look to the building up of one interest at the expense of others. Sir, if we would place the free institutions of our country in fortresses impregnable and lasting we must intrench them in the hearts of the people. To make this possible the people must know and realize that this Government is theirs, and not a government of classes and privileges. Then let our legislation be so framed, let all our public policies be so shaped as to rivet this conviction, this great conviction, in the popular mind, and then the Republic, under a mighty impulse, the love and affection of sixty millions of people of all classes and interests, will move forward to a higher and a more glorious destiny than has hitherto been allotted to any human government. [Great applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection all formal amendments will be considered as withdrawn.

Mr. BEACH. I move, after the word "who," in line 1, to insert "knowingly;" so it will read:

> That every person who knowingly purchases or receives for sale any oleomargarine from any manufacturer.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I do not care to consume the time of the committee in debating that amendment. I think the chairman will see the propriety of its adoption.

Mr. HATCH. I sought the floor this morning for the purpose of offering that amendment. As I said yesterday, I would not object to its being adopted.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. O'FERRALL. Mr. Chairman, the discussion of this bill has been protracted to such an extent I am reluctant to detain the House with any further remarks of mine; but after listening a day or two ago to the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] and this morning to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN] I find, perhaps, it is necessary for me and other Democrats on this floor who favor this bill to take our political bearings and see where we stand. The distinguished gentleman from New York declared this bill was contrary to the tenets and policy of the Republican party, and he warned his friends on the other side of the House who are supporting it that its passage would tend to reduce tariff taxes. If this be the effect of the passage of this bill, then, sir, the gentleman from New York has offered the very best argument he could offer why Democrats should support it, and he has strengthened me in my support of it at least. I am a tariff reformer in its most comprehensive sense. God gave the people of this land their brains and their hands, and what they make by their brains and their hands by the law of the Almighty belongs to them, except so far as it may be necessary to contribute to the support of the national household in which they all have a common interest.

And when this Government puts its hand in the pockets of the people and takes therefrom more money than is necessary to run the Government upon principles of true economy it is committing a robbery by taking from them the fruits of their brains and hands, their sweat and toil and muscle, and committing a wrong which will not down or be covered up by all the sophistries of the high protective-tariff idea.

But, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas comes and says that this bill now is in the interest of protection. I recognize his ability, sir, but he loses sight altogether of the bed-rock principle underlying this legislation. He says it is undemocratic; that it builds up one industry at the expense of another industry, and hence is unconstitutional.

Sir, it is not building up an honest industry at the expense of another honest industry. It is building up a pure and honest industry at the expense of a fraudulent and deceptive enterprise that is daily wronging the people of this country. It is legislating in favor of truth against falsehood; it is legislating in favor of one of the purest of products against one that shuns the light of day; that works in darkness and deceit; that wears a false face and steals the livery of honesty to cover it when it is presented in the markets of the country. Unconstitutional, says the gentleman! I love the Constitution and cherish it. I would not willingly do violence to it, no matter how much public sentiment might demand it or public clamor require it. I am a Democrat, pure and simple; proud of my party, its record, traditions, and glories. I am a strict-construction Democrat; but I believe the Constitution, which was the emanation of the minds of men which seemed to be charged with electric thought, and I might almost say, without sacrilege, of divine inspiration from that God whose eye had witnessed the decay and fall of so many republics before the grand inception of this Republic—I believe that Constitution is broad enough to allow Congress to tax fraud and deceit in the shape of oleomargarine and kindred products, and force the miserable fraud to sail under its own black flag of disease and death.

I believe, in addition, sir, that this Congress has power to tax fraud and protect honest industries; and in raising money by taxing this fraud to make it possible to relieve another honest industry by taking the tax from tobacco; and, failing in that, to empower Congress to reduce the tariff tax, that follows the child from infancy to boyhood through all of the stages of manhood down to old age, and only ceases its vicious pursuit at the grave, and retires with the mourners with its head bowed over the loss of a subject. [Applause.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. O'FERRALL. Yes; but not out of my time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of course, since there is no other time in which to ask it, I must desist.

Mr. O'FERRALL. I will remind the gentleman from Arkansas of an old Quaker proverb: "If one toss salt on thee it will do thee no harm unless thou hast sore places." The gentleman can apply the proverb.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, I am not disposed now to discuss Democratic doctrines. Any man who believes that the taxing power of the Government can be used to prevent the manufacture of good maple sirup out of sorghum-cane (which is now being done in Kansas); any man who believes that the taxing power of the Government can be used to prevent people from selling glucose sugar made of corn as sugar made of sugar-cane, lying every time they make a sale, can vote if he likes for this bill. He was not taught in the same school of politics in which I was educated. I understand these things to be beyond the purpose of this General Government. It is a good thing to stop profane swearing, but this Government can not do that. It is a good thing to stop stealing, but this Government can not do it, except from itself.

But I rose to say I am glad to see the bill improves as it goes along.

The gentleman in charge of it, in order to induce a suspension of the opposition to it, declared that when it came into the House he would himself offer amendments reducing this tax. To-day and yesterday he has put into these eleventh and twelfth sections a word that takes from them all their force. These two sections were literally copied from sections 3366 and 3367 Revised Statutes, to suppress the violation of the internal-revenue laws as to tobacco. It was known when those laws were passed that if you had to prove that the party knew he was violating the law it might be utterly nugatory. The man who made this bill understood that he was asking the House to pass the hard, cold, cruel, internal-revenue system as to tobacco to be used to crush one American industry for another. But the ventilation in this House has made some retract.

And now, not manfully striking out the sections but covertly putting in the word "knowingly," which destroys their force, another fraud is practiced on the House.

The nineteenth section of this bill, framed for the purpose of destroying oleomargarine, offers a reward to all the dirty informers of the land. After Congress had deliberately repealed the laws as to informers as to malt and distilled liquors and tobacco, this bill comes in and renews that system with features worse than before. But the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says he will take that out. He says he will relieve the bill of that feature. In other words, so odious is this measure, that its friends have found they have to trim to keep the majority of the members of this House in support of the bill.

Go on, gentlemen, and make it as little a curse to the farmers as you can. But you still leave in it the right of servants to tell that their mistresses bought oleomargarine, knowing it to be such, or that their mistresses emptied a package of oleomargarine sent home and did not destroy the stamp; and you have an internal-revenue officer or his deputy in every pantry in America. Let the man who desires to vote for such a measure vote for it. I would not for my right arm. [Applause.]

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Here the committee informally rose, and the Speaker resumed the chair.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 2357) for the relief of H. H. Faulkner and Mary Woodlee.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is desired to request the return from the President of a bill which has passed both Houses. The Clerk will read the concurrent resolution which has been handed to the Chair.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the President be requested to return to the House of Representatives the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the resolution was agreed to.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that when the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union again resumes consideration of the bill H. R. 8328 all debate on the section under consideration and amendments thereto be limited to one minute.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 12 by striking out in line 4 "$100" and inserting "$10."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 12 by striking out in line 4 "$100" and inserting "$20."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 12 by striking out in line 4 "$100" and inserting "$25."

Mr. DUNHAM. I ask a division on that amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 98.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read section 13, as follows:

SEC. 13. That whenever any stamped package containing oleomargarine is emptied, it shall be the duty of the person in whose hands the same is to destroy utterly the stamps thereon; and any person who willfully neglects or refuses so to do shall for each such offense be fined not exceeding $50, and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than six months. And any person who fraudulently gives away or accepts from another, or who sells, buys, or uses for packing oleomargarine any such stamped package, shall for each such offense be fined not exceeding $100, and be imprisoned not more than one year. Any revenue officer may destroy any emptied oleomargarine package upon which the tax-paid stamp is found.

Mr. BUCK. I offer a formal amendment for the purpose of making a suggestion in regard to a point made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN], whose eloquence in this matter I admire, as I always do his eloquence, and whose opinions I respect, for they are stated honestly and frankly. That point which the gentleman from Texas made was this: That we were taxing one industry in the interest of another. I do not so regard this measure at all. If I thought so I should vote against it and do all I could to secure its defeat. But, in my judgment, it is simply and only an attempt by legislation to bring about fair play as between one industry and another, to compel an industry which has deceived the people by imitating a genuine article of food to show its hand or suffer the penalties named in the bill. No one wishes to interfere with an honest business honestly conducted. This bill is aimed only at imitation of the real article. If the offensive compound is not made to imitate the genuine product of the dairy and notice is given to all dealers and consumers of its real character, it will not be subjected to any tax at all under the amendment proposed to be offered by the gentleman from Missouri, the chairman of the committee that reported the bill.

Does this bill affect alone the dairymen of this country? By no means. It affects the consumer much more than it does the dairyman or the dealer in the article; and in that view of the case the gentleman's argument is not sound. The object of this bill is not to prefer any one industry above another or to tax one industry out of existence for the benefit of another, but to place each upon an equality with the other. That is the purpose and the effect of the bill, and we very properly use the taxing power given us in the Constitution for the purpose of obtaining jurisdiction of this subject-matter; and after we have obtained jurisdiction of the subject-matter we impose regulations which shall give all the world, both dairymen and consumers, a fair notice and a fair warning of what they buy, what they pay for, and what they eat. And to permit the manufacturers of oleomargarine to foist their product, distasteful as it is, upon the public under false colors is to permit them to have an advantage over another industry which is equally under the protection of our laws or should be.

I can not imagine a more reprehensible way of obtaining profit than the practice of the manufacturers of oleomargarine in the imitation of genuine butter and in selling it to dealers and consumers. It is claimed that many of them stamp their product and in other ways notify dealers what they are buying. This is all very well and as it should be, but how many of them do this? And how many consumers eat this unwholesome stuff supposing it to be a real article?

The committee that reported this bill find:

That such imitations are not only disastrous to the dairy interest directly and to all branches of agriculture indirectly, but that they are detrimental to public health, being the fruitful cause of dyspepsia and other diseases.

That among the articles and ingredients used in the manufacture of such imitations there are the following: Nitric acid, sugar of lead, sulphate of lime, benzoic acid, butyric acid, glycerine, capsic acid, commercial sulphuric acid, tallow, butyric ether, castor oil, caul, gastric juice, curcumine, chlorate of potash, peroxide of magnesia, nitrate of soda, dry-blood albumen, saltpeter, borax, orris root, bicarbonate of soda, caparic acid, sulphite of soda, pepsin, lard, caustic potash, chalk, oil of sesame (or benne), turnip-seed oil, oil of sweet almonds, stomach of pigs, sheep, or calves, mustard-seed oil, bicarbonate of potash, boracic acid, salicylic acid, cotton-seed oil, alum, cows' udders, sal-soda, farinaceous flour, carbolic acid, slippery-elm bark, olive oil, bromo-chloralum, oil of peanuts, sugar, caustic soda.

From the best and most reliable information obtainable your committee believe that about 200,000,000 pounds of spurious and imitation compounds and mixtures are now being manufactured annually, which not only takes the place of so much butter, but stops the consumption of much more by the demoralization of the trade.

Mr. Chairman, if anybody wants to eat this compound, although it is called butter or butterine, I suppose we can not object, but those who do not wish to indulge in this inviting morsel should have the protections afforded by this bill.

Another suggestion is made, that this measure is in the interest of the American system of protection. I do not so understand the bill. It is not protection in that sense that we ordinarily understand the word when speaking of the American system of protection to our home industries. Not at all. There is no fraud in manufacturing silk or cutlery in Europe and importing it into this country under its own proper name, under its own proper colors. Not at all.

We take that silk or that cutlery and we impose a duty upon it that compels it to go into the markets of our country on an equal footing with our own product of the same kind, thereby placing it upon an equality with our own industries, just as this bill proposes to place one industry upon an equality with another so far as fair dealing is concerned. We compel fair dealing by this bill as between some industries competing with each other. But the tariff duty is placed upon the foreign-made article to protect each one of our industries against foreign competition, and to equalize the unequal conditions connected with producing the same article in our own country and in foreign countries.

The best evidence that this bill is not generally regarded as the gentleman from Texas regards it is found in the fact that members of this House are divided upon the bill neither politically nor with reference to protection or free trade. We see that the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK], a protectionist, is one of the champions of this measure, and we see the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], a life-long advocate of the protective system, opposing the bill. We see Democrats and Republicans favoring the bill, and Democrats and Republicans opposing it.

The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], whose eloquence is always so agreeable to us, took occasion the other day to lament the loss of some of his political associates, and to say that upon this question they had fled to the Republican camp. Let me say to him that he need have no fears of that kind, for he will find them all back again with him when the great question comes up on the bill of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON] to reduce tariff duties and place certain articles on the free-list. They will all come back into the fold and do duty against the system of American protection, except perhaps the noble few whom I will call the Parnellites of American protection, led by the Parnell of America in tariff legislation, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. RANDALL].

Mr. Chairman, I shall support this bill, because I wish to see uniformity of law on this subject. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] made a very excellent point against this bill, if his point were well taken, in regard to the legislation by the States. He said the matter belonged to the States, and that the States ought to take care of it. If the States would do so, and do it uniformly, I would be very glad indeed to see them do it.

Mr. HAMMOND. Does the gentleman mean that when the States will not pass laws to suit him Congress should pass them?

Mr. BUCK. Not at all.

Mr. HISCOCK. I would like to answer that question and say, "Yes, if we have the jurisdiction under the Constitution."

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no doubt you would vote for anything of the kind.

Mr. BUCK. Let me answer the gentleman. The States and the United States in Congress assembled have concurrent jurisdiction over the question which this bill deals with, and the fact is that any State may pass a law regulating this matter, as my own State of Connecticut has done and as several other States have done. Florida, I believe, has passed a law on this subject; so has New York; so has Pennsylvania, and so, I believe, has Massachusetts; but other States have not.

In the mean time the farmers, the dairymen, the consumers, have all come here and asked us to make a common law on this subject, which shall apply all over the country, so as to have fair dealing in legislation and fair dealing in commercial transactions.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, there is one reason in favor of this bill, just one, and that is that a certain measure of public sentiment demands it. Now, sir, whenever we reach a point where we measure and shape our legislation exclusively by the behests of popular sentiment, losing sight of the Constitution, we have ceased to be the American Republic, and have become simply the old Athenian democracy, where the people assembled in the market-places and the popular will was both the constitution and the government. That is the condition to which we are coming; no longer a popular will harnessed by constitutional restrictions of the people's own adoption and expressed by careful and cautious representatives. Sir, nothing has more impressed me with the importance of a conservative body of long tenure of office at the other end of the Capitol than the manner in which gentlemen have ridden down every constitutional barrier, every traditional maxim of government, and have flocked in ill-assorted numbers in support of this bill.

The distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH] has warned his protectionists friends that this will advance the cause of free trade because it is protection run mad, and that people will not tolerate it. I trust the impending evil will produce a reaction among the people and lead to reforms. My friend from Virginia [Mr. O'FERRALL], who spoke a few moments ago, seeks to adopt this extreme measure of protection as a means of attaining revenue reform. I do not believe in doing evil that good may come. I believe that every member who supports this bill will ultimately lose ground in public confidence and estimation. So far as I can see, the supporters of this bill have abandoned all pretense of its being a just and proper measure for taxation. They hardly have the face longer to stand before the country professing, as they have heretofore done, that the one great duty of the hour is a reduction of taxes and at the same time contending for this bill as a measure to increase taxation. The other horn of the dilemma is that it polices the industries of the country, and upon that proposition I send to the Clerk's desk a decision of the Supreme Court which I ask to have read. It is the decision in the case of the United States vs. Dewitt (9 Wallace, page 42). It is the unanimous decision of, for the most part, a Republican court, delivered by Chief-Justice Chase, and in the centralizing, reckless era of 1869. It should be heeded at least by Democrats who now seek to go where it solemnly forbids even Republicans to enter.

Section 29 of the act of March 2, 1867, declares—

"That no person shall mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oils, or shall knowingly sell or keep for sale, or offer for sale such mixture, or shall sell or offer for sale oil made from petroleum for illuminating purposes inflammable at less temperature or fire-test than 110 degrees Fahrenheit; and any person so doing shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof by indictment or presentment in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction shall be punished by fine, &c., and imprisonment," &c.

The Chief-Justice delivered the opinion of the court.

The questions certified resolve themselves into this: Has Congress power, under the Constitution, to prohibit trade within the limits of a State?

That Congress has power to regulate commerce with foreign nations and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes, the Constitution expressly declares. But this express grant of power to regulate commerce among the States has always been understood as limited by its terms; and as a virtual denial of any power to interfere with the internal trade and business of the separate States, except, indeed, as a necessary and proper means for carrying into execution some other power expressly granted or vested.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon this section and all amendments thereto may be closed——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I would like to have the Clerk conclude the reading.

Mr. HATCH. Say in five minutes.

Mr. HAMMOND. I desire, before debate is closed, to call attention to the last paragraph of the section.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas (to Mr. HATCH). Make the limitation ten minutes.

Mr. HATCH. Very well.

Mr. HAMMOND. If I can have five minutes of the ten I have no objection.

Mr. HATCH. You can, so far as I am concerned.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] asks unanimous consent that all debate on this section and amendments thereto be limited to ten minutes. The Chair hears no objection, and it is so ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I ask the Clerk to finish the reading of that decision.

The Clerk read as follows:

It has been urged in argument that the provision under which this indictment was framed is within this exception; that the prohibition of the sale of the illuminating oil described in the indictment was in aid and support of the internal-revenue tax imposed on other illuminating oils. And we have been referred to provisions, supposed to be analogous, regulating the business of distilling liquors and the mode of packing various manufactured articles, but the analogy appears to fail at the essential point, for the regulations referred to are restricted to the very articles which are the subject of taxation, and are plainly adapted to secure the collection of the tax imposed; while, in the case before us, no tax is imposed on the oils the sale of which is prohibited. If the prohibition, therefore, has any relation to taxation at all, it is merely that of increasing the production and sale of other oils, and, consequently, the revenue derived from them, by excluding from the market the particular kind prescribed.

This consequence is too remote and too uncertain to warrant us in saying that the prohibition is an appropriate and plainly adapted means for carrying into execution the power of laying and collecting taxes.

There is, indeed, no reason for saying that it was regarded by Congress as such a means, except that it is found in an act imposing internal duties. Standing by itself, it is plainly a regulation of police; and that it was so considered, if not by the Congress which enacted it, certainly by the succeeding Congress, may be inferred from the circumstance that while all special taxes on illuminating oils were repealed by the act of July 20, 1868, which subjected distillers and refiners to the tax on sales as manufacturers, this prohibition was left unrepealed.

As a police regulation, relating exclusively to the internal trade of the States, it can only have effect where the legislative authority of Congress excludes, territorially, all State legislation, as for example in the District of Columbia. Within State limits it can have no constitutional operation. This has been so frequently declared by this court, results so obviously from the terms of the Constitution, and has been so fully explained and supported on former occasions, that we think it unnecessary to enter again upon the discussion.

The first question certified must, therefore, be answered in the negative.

The second question must also be answered in the negative, except so far as the section named operates within the United States but without the limits of any State.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, it seems strange that a committee of this House should contend for lawful power where the decisions are so strong and so unanimous against the position they hold. They adopt the form of a tax-bill so as to escape the courts, to professedly do what now professedly we have no direct power to do. This is a shameful abuse and betrayal of a trust. Without a line in any decision to sustain them—literally taken by the heels and thrown out of Congress by every decision of any court that has passed judgment upon the question—they yet come here and by the power of an unreasoning and selfish public sentiment are forcing through this body one of the most astonishing and odious bill ever presented to it. And, sir, we see put forward to sustain this measure all manner of fraudulent statistics. There is absolutely no demand for a bill of this kind except from the sellers of a competing article, who wish us to do police duty for the States, and to stamp a rival industry out of existence by imposing a tax upon it of nearly if not quite 150 per cent.

Mr. Chairman, it is significant that foreign governments that are singularly skillful in detecting all fraudulent and injurious features in connection with food products, foreign governments that have interdicted our pork and our beef, foreign governments that have rival dairy industries and whose people are consuming annually 120,000,000 pounds of this product, have never yet interdicted it or complained about it. Only from the producers here of a competing article do we hear the claim that there is impurity in it. A member of the committee [Mr. GREEN, of North Carolina] tells me that detection by means of the microscope is perfectly easy. The cellular or crystal formations are wholly different. Two hundred million pounds are consumed annually, yet there is not a syllable of protest from a single consumer, and there is not a single certificate from a physician in this or any other country that any man, woman, or child has ever been made sick by eating the article.

I hold in my hand certificates from the most eminent chemists and physicians in the country and from State boards of health saying that oleomargarine is a wholesome food product. Even if it were injurious it is not our function to remedy the injury, but the States'. The language of the courts is plain. Construction and practice are unbroken. And no special necessity can be pleaded, for the States can inspect every factory, they can detect every ounce of the product anywhere, and they can prevent either the making or the selling. But in the face of all this we are asked not merely to prevent deception, but also to try to stamp out what is to-day politically the weak for the sake of the politically strong. Who will be the next victim to this wretched policy of despotism and wrong and folly? Gentlemen are invoking a power and a form of power that to-morrow they may be the victims of. I belong to a minority section and to a minority industry, cotton-growing, and I view this proscriptive and ruinous legislation with fear for my people and for my whole country. My hope is that our people are too just and wise to long permit such a wrong as this. I protest against all that is being done, and I would disdain to add to the wealth of my people by robbing their brethren, or, if they had them, their enemies. Fair play and fidelity to the Constitution is the path of safety and honor and of true prosperity.

Sir, it seems like belittling the issue to seriously consider the statistical facts about a proposition so monstrously improper and unlawful in doctrine, and when I say unlawful I speak of law in its large and constitutional sense; but, while complaint is made of depression in this rival industry, we find that, compared with periods slightly anterior to the general use of this product, the price of milch cows has risen about $10 per head. We find that the hay crop of this country—and this too in States supposed to be specially interested in this competitive industry and where if the effect had been injurious the hay crop would have declined—has in point of fact increased.

Here are the facts about the milch cows, down through the last report yet issued from the Agricultural Department:

Years.	Number.	Average value.	Total valuation.
1879	11,826,400	$21 73	$256,953,928
1880	12,027,000	23 27	279,899,420

If the progress of events were depressing upon the dairy business we should find a large decline in the acreage in hay in the States concerned and people taking refuge in cereals. But the facts average the other way. Here they are:

And, sir, what about the price of butter itself? The result shows how public wants adjust themselves to increased supplies of wholesome articles, and how unfair are those who come here asking to be subsidized and to be given a "corner" upon their suffering brethern. I have gone to one of the most intelligent grocers of this city, and he has opened his books to me, by which I find that his cost price of butter during last January was as high as in any January for six years past; and the price was 5 cents higher per pound last January than in the corresponding month in 1880.

A MEMBER. What was the average price?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The average price of the article I speak of was 40 cents a pound in the month of January. This butter was from near Frederick, Md.; and the grocer I speak of is John H. Magruder; and he stated that the lower grade of butter followed the same law. He further informed me that the fluctuations through the seasons were great—low in spring and summer, and high in fall and winter; but that the range of prices was about the same on any grade for any given month. I took this one.

Mr. MORGAN. That does not agree with the testimony I have here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Very well; let the gentleman bring in his testimony. I have more testimony to the same effect as that to which I have just referred. I have here figures from a large wholesale butter dealer, one of the most intelligent in the country; and while he does not buy the special brand of butter referred to by the gentleman whom I have just quoted, his figures show that there is not a product in this country the price of which has been so steadily maintained as has been the price of butter. He gives me the prices of "creamery" butter for the month of May—a low-priced month; and he says the other grades run according to the same scale. The prices run as follows: May 16, 1882, 27 cents; May 15, 1883, 26 cents; May 16, 1884, 25 cents; May 16, 1885, 23 cents. Now, for May 15 of this year we have a very low price, 18 cents; but as this competition has been going on for years we must look to some other cause for the present depression. If this competition alone caused it we should have had it during the other years.

The following is from an intelligent writer in a recent issue of the American Grocer, who, speaking of the butter trade, says:

> Taken as a whole, the year of 1885 has been a fairly good one. There have been very few heavy losses among our merchants and no important failures. Many butter-men say there is no money in butter, yet they still continue in the business. They should talk more logically and say profits have been small. Are not small profits better than none at all? The past year has not been disastrous, neither has it been good, but it has been fair, and our merchants should not gainsay the fact to obtain sympathy and condolence from their brothers in the grain, cotton, and nearly all other trades, who are even worse off.

Pray, Mr. Chairman, of what industry can so good an account be given? Yet these people want us to subsidize them at the cost of others whose business they frankly say is so unprofitable as to offer no inducements to themselves to enter them. Are the weak not already, then, sufficiently burdened and poor? Are they to be robbed by the law and under the forms of law? Workingmen consume these goods. It is not the fine butter consumed by the rich that you propose to tax. A million workingmen are now out of work and suffering for food. Are you going to make food dearer to them and for the sake of the most prosperous class of food producers?

This proposes to deal a blow, too, to the rights, not the privileges, of many of the people of the South. Cotton-seed oil, a pure product, that I use in my own family in preference to lard for cooking purposes, enters into the production of oleomargarine. I have had many letters and telegrams, and I will give the following from an official of the Southern Association of Oil-mills:

> OFFICE OF LITTLE ROCK OIL AND COMPRESS COMPANY, > Little Rock, Ark., May 1, 1886.
> DEAR SIR: The dairymen are making efforts, it is stated in the public press of the country, to have Congress pass prohibitory laws against the manufacture of substitutes for butter—oleomargarine, butterine, &c.; articles which are well known to commerce, and welcome in the homes of thousands of families, among the laboring classes especially, as more wholesome than the cheap, low-grade butter from the dairies. These substitutes for butter are manufactured from the fat of beef, pure leaf lard, and cotton-seed oils, all wholesome ingredients; and however attacked by prejudice, stand in the markets of the country, after years of manufacture, as healthful food.
> There is no more right and justice in laws being passed inimical to this industry than there would be for a law against any other farm product. Oleomargarine and all similar commodities are farm products, as much so as butter or anything else raised by the agriculturist. A law unfriendly to such manufacture of substitutes for butter will affect the price of every gallon of oil made by the oil-mills of the South, and, incidentally, the value of the cotton seed to the farmer, pure, highly refined cotton-seed oil entering into the composition of most of these substitutes. It is, therefore, to be hoped that the Arkansas delegation will carefully examine all contemplated legislation on this question, and sustain the manufacturers of cotton-seed oils of their State and of the South with their votes and influence in Congress against unfriendly legislation.
> Very respectfully,
> W. H. WRIGHT, Vice-President.
> Hon. C. R. BRECKINRIDGE,
> Washington, D. C

Cotton seed is peculiarly the source of ready money to the poor and to the colored people in my country in the fall of the year. They ask no favors. They have no favors. Are you going to strike a blow at all these people at the behest of the dairymen?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HAMMOND. Let members of the committee look at the next to the last sentence in this section and say what it means. If any person "fraudulently gives" away a thing, how does he give? How does he "accept" it "fraudulently?" What does it mean? Here is the Congress of the United States making a grave law which is to affect millions in this country and there is not a gentleman in the House who will say that word "fraudulently" does not produce confusion in the text. And why? I will give you the explanation. In the tobacco laws these words all exist except the word "fraudulently." And why? The only way to prevent men from selling their products as they please, and as Americans ought to be allowed to sell their produce, is to require a stamp and that stamp to be canceled by the man who takes charge of it; and if one gives away a package with the stamp uncanceled or accepts a package with the stamp uncanceled to make it a crime. Because if one can give it away he puts it in circulation with the stamp undestroyed. If you had to stop to prove he "fraudulently gave" it away what does the fraud mean? How will you convict him? What is the evidence necessary?

Now I do not propose to make it any better. I am only giving this as another illustration that when they put in those words they did not dare to go in this instance to the enormity of what is already on the statute-book; yet they have not the manhood to say, we will tell you the truth, and stuck in the word "fraudulently." The bill ought to be so stamped. [Laughter and applause.]

How much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will yield that time to the gentleman from Indiana.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Indiana on the next section of the bill.

Mr. HAMMOND. Very well; then I will yield it to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], who wishes to make a brief statement.

Mr. SCOTT. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. I understand the rule of this House to be under the five-minute debate one member speaks in support of the pending proposition and the other in opposition to it. Now, we have a majority in favor of this bill of about 180 and all the speaking this morning has been made against it.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognized the gentlemen who sought the floor and wished to be heard.

Mr. SCOTT. Here are 180 majority in favor of this bill and yet this morning every speech made has been against it.

The CHAIRMAN. That has not been the fault of the Chair. No friend of the bill having risen, the Chair was compelled to recognize those who did rise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to strike out the last sentence of section 13, which reads as follows:

Any revenue officer may destroy any emptied oleomargarine package upon which the tax-paid stamp is found.

It occurs to me, Mr. Chairman, that is rather an arbitrary and unconstitutional power to give to a revenue officer—power to seize where he may happen to find any person with such package and without trial to destroy it.

Mr. MORGAN. That is a literal transcript of the language of the whisky law.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate is exhausted on the pending amendments. The Chair will consider the formal amendments withdrawn and the question recurs on the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The amendment of Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move the following amendment:

Amend section 13 by striking out in line 5 the word "fifty" and insert "twenty-five."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 6, noes 91.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. DUNHAM. I offer the following amendment:

Amend section 12 by striking out in line 4 the words "one hundred dollars" and insert "twenty-five dollars."

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 10, noes 69.

So the amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WHEELER. I move to add at the end of section 13 the following:

Provided, That no person who was reported by the tenth census as unable to read shall be fined or imprisoned for violating the provisions of sections 6, 11, 12, or 13 of this act until one year after the passage of the bill now pending in Congress to aid in the support of common schools.

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read section 14, as follows:

SEC. 14. That there shall be in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue an analytical chemist and a microscopist, who shall each be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall each receive a salary of $3,000 per annum; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service so require, employ chemists and microscopists, to be paid such compensation as he may deem proper, not exceeding in the aggregate any appropriation made for that purpose. And such Commissioner is authorized to decide what substances, extracts, mixtures, or compounds which may be submitted for his inspection in contested cases are to be taxed under this act; and his decision in matters of taxation under this act shall be final. The Commissioner may also decide whether any substance made in imitation or semblance of butter, and intended for human consumption, contains ingredients deleterious to the public health; but in case of doubt or contest his decisions in this class of cases may be appealed from to a board hereby constituted for the purpose, and composed of the Surgeon-General of the Army, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, and the Commissioner of Agriculture; and the decisions of this board shall be final in the premises.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to strike out "three" and insert "two;" so it will read "and shall receive a salary of $2,000 per annum."

Mr. Chairman, the salaries proposed to be paid under this section of the bill are larger than those now paid for similar services in the Departments. For instance, the microscopist of the Agricultural Department gets a salary of $1,800 a year and the chemist $2,500. It will be seen, therefore, that these are considerably above the salaries paid for corresponding services elsewhere, and of course that ought not to be permitted. I understand the gentleman from Missouri, however, will acquiesce in the amendment which I have submitted.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Do I understand the gentleman to say that the chemist's salary in the Department of Agriculture is $2,500?

Mr. HOLMAN. It has been so increased by appropriation.

Now, Mr. Chairman, a word in respect to the merits of this bill. On the propositions laid down by gentlemen who oppose the measure I concede that there are embarrassments in the way. If the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine were a legitimate industry, the manufacture of imitation butter, I concede that there might be some trouble in the way, because it might be truthfully said that this was an attempt to crush out by an act of Congress one industry in the interest of another. But the fact must be borne in mind that it is not a contest between two legitimate industries; the one industry known from the beginning of our Government, that of producing butter in the ordinary way from milk, and the other a process under letters patent in imitation of the genuine article.

As far as the former is concerned it is an industry the importance of which no one calls in question; the other is an industry which has grown up under the patent-right system, and only manufactured and put upon the market through fraud as an imitation of a genuine article of dairy produce. Therefore when gentlemen assume that these are two conflicting industries, and that Congress is interposing to crush the one for the benefit of the other, the proposition, I maintain, is not well founded, for if it was an issue between two legitimate industries I should be compelled to deny the right of Congress to interfere on any pretext whatever.

But I deny that it is a legitimate industry, or that any industry can be a legitimate industry which from the very necessities of the case can only flourish through the perpetuation of fraud upon the public; and it can not be pretended that this industry has flourished or can through any other means.

But it is said this is not a legitimate measure of taxation, and that Congress is, therefore, using the taxing power wrongfully, not in good faith, but simply to crush a particular industry against which, for the moment, demands are made on the part of the people. But gentlemen have no right to assume that the members of this House who favor this bill are not supporting it as a revenue measure, as it purports to be. Their motives can not be called in question in that respect, nor can it be said that the manufacture of imitation butter is not a legitimate subject of taxation. Why? For many reasons, but for one especially, you have always proposed, except in time of war, to impose your taxes upon those articles which can best bear taxation; and ordinarily, as far as practicable, upon luxuries and articles equally liable to bear taxation, especially those not entering into the ordinary and common use of the people. Now here is an article existing through fraud, brought before the public by fraud, sold through fraud, and I submit it is more legitimately a subject of taxation than spirits or any other article that you may call a luxury, whether the tax be imposed under the customs system or under the internal-revenue system. But further, Mr. Chairman, there is a reason for the adoption of this measure away beyond that. I admit that you do not need the revenue; but we are now taxing some articles at the expense of a very high interest in this country. You are taxing under the customs as well as the internal-revenue system salt, lumber, coal, which ought to be free, and heavily many articles of universal use and of prime necessity, and tobacco, the only product of the soil that has ever been taxed by Congress——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Except cotton——

Mr. HOLMAN. Which system is having a very fatal effect upon some industries. Have gentlemen noticed the unfortunate fact that the small freeholders are being reduced in number; the small freeholders upon whom and through whose happy and independent homes depend the perpetuity of our institutions perhaps more than upon any other class of our people—the great conservative element of our population? Have you considered how this patented monopoly (not legitimate, but patented and based upon letters-patent, in my judgment the only mistake our fathers made in their early legislation, for it does not well express the purpose of the Constitution they framed), how that is driving out of existence the smaller estates by destroying the elements of their prosperity? Have gentlemen considered how far the butter, the product of the wife's and the daughter's industry, enters into the domestic economy of the home; how much it does to support the fireside; how this comparatively little product enters into the support of the family, the education of the children, and the purchase of their clothing? I stand here, sir, in behalf of that great industry, great by reason of the multitude who participate in it and the great aggregate results, and in behalf of the small freeholders of this country against this imposition upon them by patented monopoly.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HATCH. I desire to offer an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Indiana which I hope the friends of this measure will accept. After a conference with gentlemen that I could reach, members of the committee and others, I move to amend the amendment by fixing the salaries of these two officers at $2,500 each.

Mr. HOLMAN. That is too high.

Mr. HATCH. That will enable the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to select competent and well-qualified men of high standing in their professions for these positions.

I now yield my time to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HOLMAN. There is no denying the fact that the effect of our legislation for years, from the time our heavy taxation began, has been unfriendly to the small interests and industries of this country. There never is a day or an hour that some great interest is not being forced upon Congress. These are the interests that build up great estates against the interests that would foster multitudes of smaller estates in this country. Your small farms disappear under heavy taxation. Your small farms would disappear under any artificial system of legislation, for the great and industrious multitude of small freeholders are never here, but the monopolists are always with us.

Take your patent-right system, under which great monopolies can be built up, and you see how even a prudent measure of government may become a source of danger in the future. By your heavy taxation, I do not care in what form it comes, you are crowding to the wall small freeholders, and are enlarging year by year your great landed estates.

I support this measure because it is a measure in the interest of the small freeholders of this country. I would support any legitimate measure which is directly in the face of the policy which has been governing for so many years, tending to diffuse instead of centralizing our wealth. If our past system of legislation shall continue, if great monopolies are permitted to crowd out small freeholders, and to enlarge your farms, to a large degree you will destroy the foundations upon which the Government so securely rested in former years.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have sent an amendment to the desk which I desire to have read.

The CHAIRMAN. There is now pending the amendment of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and an amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HAMMOND. Very well; let those be voted on first.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out "$2,000" and insert "$2,500;" so it will read:
"And shall each receive a salary of $2,500 per annum."

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope that will not be done. As living amidst a body of small farmers I protest that my friend from Missouri ought not to insist that a bill like this, in the interest in some degree of the laboring men of this country, should carry larger salaries than the average salaries we are paying. In the name of those farmers I trust a moderate salary will be fixed.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 90, noes 31.

So (further count not being called for) the amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose and the Speaker resumed the chair.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate had agreed to the resolution of the House of Representatives requesting the return from the President of the bill (H. R. 6391) to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HAMMOND. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "that," in section 14, strike out these words:
"There shall be in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue an analytical chemist and a microscopist, who shall each be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall each receive a salary of $2,500 per annum; and."

Mr. HAMMOND. We have already all the officers of the Agricultural Department necessary to run this business. And now let the gentleman who desired to reduce the salary to $2,000 bring in his argument to save it all. There is no earthly necessity for these extra officers. That is all I desire to say on that subject.

Mr. HOLMAN rose.

Mr. HAMMOND. Not in my time, please. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] says, first, that we have ruined a great many small farmers by the odious tobacco internal-revenue law. And now to preserve the remnant of the small farmers of this country he proposes to re-enact this law and make the system popular and permanent.

Mr. HOLMAN. Oh, no. Let me say——

Mr. HAMMOND. Not in my time.

Mr. HOLMAN. I am in favor of repealing the tobacco tax.

Mr. HAMMOND. But you know you can not do it. I agree with the gentleman that it ought to be repealed. But he knows as well as I that whenever this bill passes an insuperable obstacle to the repeal of those internal-revenue laws is placed, over which the Congress of the United States can not vault in the next twenty years. The gentleman says this is not a fight of one industry against another.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Of one legitimate industry.

Mr. HAMMOND. Of one legitimate industry against another. I challenge the gentleman's cool, clear consideration of that point. His proposition is this, that if Congress desires it may in behalf of one industry put down another provided it considers that other an illegitimate or fraudulent industry. Can this House levy a tax on paper-soled shoes that are put upon the market as bottomed by leather made of good hides? Can this Government put a tax on maple sugar made of sorghum cane because the man lies and says it came from a maple tree?

Can we tax out of existence glucose sold as sugar every day? The gentleman will repudiate his argument whenever he thinks about it.

He is hardly driven again to say that this bill is against a monopoly patent. He absolutely says that the patent clause of the Constitution is a curse rather than a blessing.

Mr. HOLMAN. No; not that.

Mr. HAMMOND. I can not argue such a proposition in my limited time. But the history and the experience of this Government will show no other clause, except those that protect life, liberty, and property, that has been half as valuable to this country.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas, was recognized, and yielded his time to Mr. HAMMOND.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thank the gentleman, Mr. Chairman. Let me call attention to some facts which illustrate this. We may put our wives down to knitting stockings for themselves and their children, or we may turn to a machine that will knit seven pairs for one mill. What rest to the wife! What comfort to the babes! With patent peg-wood we peg sixty million pair of shoes per annum in the United States at a cost of five pairs to a cent! Millions of feet are shod that but for that invention would be crippled by the hard frosts of winter. Sir, the Patent Office has changed the whole current of modern life. It has given fewer hours of labor and to more men, less consumption of human muscle, and broader sweep of human mind. Consider the poor men copying the gospels in ink at a price per volume which would pay a king's ransom, and then the thousand times as many men acting as private salesmen of the blessed truths of our religion in bound books, at a nickel a volume. The foundation of that change is the constitutional clause on which is based the Patent Office. It has increased wages, it has increased mental strength and physical strength, mental comfort and physical comfort. When gentlemen are driven, in support of this bill, to denounce any part, and especially that part of the Constitution of the United States, they are indeed hardly driven. [Applause.]

Mr. HISCOCK. Mr. Chairman, this bill proposes to tax a fraud, a deception, a pirate upon an honest industry. It has been frequently charged here that we who favor this bill have been compelled to "hedge." I undertake to say that no friend of this measure has ever understood that it went any further than I have stated, to tax a pirate sailing under a false flag and preying upon one of the great industries of the country. I will admit that many men who favor this bill did not clearly appreciate the fact that oleomargarine as known to the trade, as known to chemistry, might not always be such a pirate; and they were glad when they found that the bill pointed out the clear distinction between the two kinds and properly labeled and marked just what it intended to tax, to wit, this deception, this cheat, this fraud.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HISCOCK. I shall need additional time, and if the gentleman occupies my time with questions I suppose he will yield me time in return.

Mr. DANIEL. I will endeavor to do so, if I can get the floor. I understand the gentleman to say that this bill does not tax anything that sails under its own true colors.

Mr. HISCOCK. It does not. This bill is not intended to tax any product that can not be sold for and does not have the semblance of butter.

Mr. DANIEL. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. HISCOCK. I will if I can have the time to answer.

Mr. DANIEL. Suppose it has the semblance of butter, but is marked not butter, but "oleomargarine;" does the bill tax it then?

Mr. HISCOCK. Oh, you may ask very many questions which I have not the time to answer. It intends merely to tax these patented productions that chemistry has enabled to be manufactured under these patents and which are palmed off upon the unsuspecting public as butter. That is just what it intends to tax.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Does the gentleman assert that the large manufacturers of oleomargarine manufacture under any patent?

Mr. HISCOCK. I do not know whether they do or not. In the main I suppose these articles are manufactured by some secret process, or else under a patent. Now, sir, I have heard no one upon this floor allege that this law, in its form or in its phraseology, is unconstitutional, and I desire to call the attention of the House, and of gentlemen who have had longer experience than I, to the fact that we have always regarded this as a republican Government, we standing here to vote the will of our constituents. I undertake to say that no tax law has ever passed this House, no bill carrying any considerable sum of money (except to defray the ordinary expenses of the Government), has ever passed this House but what the majority who voted it into law represented by their votes the needs and the demands of their constituents. I may point to the river and harbor bill as a striking illustration of the correctness of the assertion which I have just made.

Day after day measures come in here and are urged because localities want them, because members realize that they are demanded for the benefit of their immediate constituents. We look to the Constitution, and if there is constitutional power to grant what they ask we grant it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas, obtained the floor and said: I yield my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK].

Mr. HISCOCK. What I have just described is the course pursued here with reference to all legislation. Gentlemen may soar in ethereal regions among the ghosts of departed statesmen for reasons in favor of a measure or in opposition to it; but when we come down to practical legislation we can trace back of every man's vote here this motive—that his people want him to cast his vote in that particular way, and his action is guided by a proper desire, as I affirm, to represent his constituency here on this floor.

Since I have been a member of this House it has been upon this policy that we have legislated, and it is upon this line that our constituents and the country expect us to legislate. They expect that we will represent their wishes and their will. If there is any subject of which we can take jurisdiction under the Constitution, and we can grant their petitions in reference to it, we hasten to do it.

I say to gentlemen on the other side, have no fear that the palladium of our liberties is in danger because we do this. We are a body three hundred and twenty-five in number, representing the whole country; and it is only when a majority of the three hundred and twenty-five members, or a majority of those who attend here (not less than a quorum), see their pathway clear in reference to any legislation of this kind that they will tread in it. From this body the measure of legislation goes to the Senate, there to be scrutinized; and then it goes to the Executive to receive his approval.

There is no danger of a war of one industry upon another. There is no danger that this taxing power will ever be invoked to crush out any legitimate industry or to array one legitimate industry against another. These obstacles which I have recited, the full consideration which every important measure is sure to receive, the large constituencies that we represent here with their diverse and varied interests, will always stand in the way of hasty and inconsiderate legislation upon any subject.

I say again, let gentlemen dismiss their fears in this regard. Have no fear that the Constitution of the United States will ever be invoked as authority for a measure of oppression. Those various interests represented here, sometimes coming in conflict perhaps with one another, will always operate as barriers against everything of that kind; and a law of this sort will only be called for and enacted when there is in its favor a clear public sentiment, overriding by it character and power, if you please, the sentiment that there may be in favor of other industries. I perhaps may say it will only be when a fraud like that now under consideration is to be legislated upon is to be stamped out, or the deceptive flag under which it sails is to be struck down, that Congress will ever seek to exercise this power in favor of one industry against another.

Mr. O'HARA. I move to amend by striking out section 14. Mr. Chairman, no member of this House will go further than I am ready to go to protect the people from the adulteration of food. But, sir, this bill, as I understand it, proposes not to prevent the adulteration of food as such. On the contrary, under the guise of protecting the poor man from oleomargarine and spurious butter, it seeks to destroy one industry of the country for the purpose of building up another. More than that, it proposes to create a number of new offices and to revivify and set in motion all the odious features of the internal-revenue system. The fourteenth section of this bill, which I propose to strike out, does not only create additional officers at large salaries, but it gives to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue the power, whenever in his judgment the necessity of the service may require it, to add to this already large army of officers other officers.

The number of these will be limited, say gentlemen on the other side, by the appropriation; but, sir, every member on this floor knows that the appropriation does not limit the number of the public offices of the Government when the administrative officials see fit to go beyond the authority of existing law. At every session, Mr. Chairman, we are met by demands from the Treasury Department, from the Internal Revenue Bureau, from the Department of Justice, and from almost every other Department asking Congress to pass "urgent deficiency appropriation bills." We murmur; but the executive officers come to us and tell us that the service has been performed, that when we passed our appropriation bills we were mistaken as to what the public exigencies required; and murmur though we may, we always pass such bills when their passage is demanded. Thus, Congress after Congress, we find that these administrative officers go beyond the appropriations. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, the so-called limitation involved in the appropriation of money is no limit at all.

Mr. Chairman, if places are needed for party favorites let gentlemen say so. Let the country so understand it. Let us all understand that such is the scope of the pending measure. Let us make it clear and sure there should be no attempt here to throttle any interest or to strangle any industry of the country. I am, Mr. Chairman, no advocate of oleomargarine; but, sir, it is said that this bill is made in the interest of the poor man, and I ask where are the petitions of poor men crying out against this abuse.

Sir, the poor man is not here clamoring for this proposed legislation, but it is the rich dairymen of the country who by this bill are saying you shall have only what we desire to give you at whatever price we may demand, whether it be butter made from pure milk of fancy and well-kept cows, or from milk of diseased and swill-fed cows. I hold, sir, that the poorer classes need as much, if not more, protection from butter made from the milk of diseased and swill-fed cows as they do from oleomargarine or any of the other manufactures mentioned in the bill.

The crowning piece of infamy of the bill will, however, be found in the nineteenth section. This section proposes to give a premium to every spy and informer in the land who shall become a self-appointed guardian of this law; it offers a reward, holds out an inducement, to the lazy and worthless to spy upon his neighbor's action, that he may satisfy his avarice and cupidity by securing one-half of the penalty imposed by the bill. It has a tendency to create an army of Jean Valjeans to follow with sleuth-hound tenacity every imaginable violator of this law. I do not think that I overdraw the picture when I warn this House that the passage of this bill will add at least one-fourth more officers to the already long list of special United States marshals, assistant prosecuting attorneys, and henchmen to be employed and paid from the hard-wrung taxes of an already overtaxed people.

I have heard from the Democratic party for the past ten years the cry of "Reduction of taxes!" "Relief of the masses from an army of office-holders!" "Help from the merciless red-legged grasshoppers and 'golden-winged butterflies!'" as the revenue officers were once called in my State. But, sir, I suppose all this has changed, and the cry of war taxes has changed to the cry of protection to the people from spurious and death-dealing food, and the slogan of reform. The revenue officer, the spy, the accuser of his neighbors, the United States prosecuting attorney are no longer tyrants but guardian angels to the health and liberty of the poor man.

The hard-wrung taxes to keep up and feed this vast additional army of cormorants becomes a free-will offering of spices and ointment of sweet-smelling savor. I do not believe that the people of my State or of any State in this Union are in favor of this bill; it savors of class legislation, of favoritism to one industry and oppression to another; it is not protection—it is destruction; and as such it must work to the detriment of the poorer classes. Sir, I will willingly go as far as any gentleman upon this floor to protect the people from adulterated food, and I say here and now that whenever the Committee on Agriculture, or any committee of this House, shall bring in a bill to remedy that evil, placing its enforcement with the ordinary courts of the country, without the creation of additional officers and spies and informers, separate and apart from the Internal Revenue Bureau, I am ready to give it my hearty approval.

As between natural butter and the manufactured article I am decidedly in favor of natural butter, and am of the opinion that if the dairymen of the country need protection they ought to have it; but I would ask the friends of the bill, a large number of whom are in favor of State rights, are not the respective State Legislatures competent to deal with this question? Has an effort been made by the dairymen of any particular State or number of States to secure protection against this so-called false representation of butter and refusal by the Legislature made? If not so, why, then, not let them first apply to the States for the necessary legislation?

It can not be urged that for any needs of the Government the revenue derived from this source is necessary, for we have heard, and the world was made to believe, that there was a large surplus of money lying idle in the Treasury of the United States, to the great detriment of the poor laboring man. Is it now proposed to augment this surplus? For what purpose? That a single industry shall be crushed out, or that a rival industry, both to the manner born, shall be protected, or that political favorites, henchmen, and bosses shall have places? If for either of these, Mr. Chairman, I think we have done enough, and it is full time that our faces and footsteps were turned in another direction. By all means protect the poor from adulterated and deleterious food, but in the name of common fairness let us do it in one general bill. Enact a law that will make no invidious distinction, but one that will bear alike upon all, that will be wise and beneficial, but let not this engine of favoritism and injustice mar the pages of our statutes. [Applause.]

During the delivery of the above remarks, Mr. O'HARA's time having expired, Mr. BRUMM took the floor and proposed to yield his five minutes.

Mr. FREDERICK. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, it is going too far in violation of the rules of the House to constantly yield the floor to members to speak in favor of an amendment and then let them speak in the time of those who are opposed to it.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I give notice no other gentleman's time will be continued from this to the end of the session.

Mr. FREDERICK. I have accomplished my purpose in calling attention to the violation of the rule, and will now withdraw my objection.

Mr. O'HARA resumed the floor and completed his speech.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I ask by unanimous consent that debate be closed on the pending section and all amendments thereto in one minute.

Mr. HALE. I object.

Mr. HATCH. I had supposed the gentlemen desiring to move substantial amendments to this section had already done so.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have one amendment pending, and I wish to introduce another before debate is closed.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I have a substantial amendment to present on which I desire to be heard, and so I understand has my colleague.

Mr. HATCH. I ask then by unanimous consent that all debate be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will say fifteen minutes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I wish to offer an amendment, and wish to be heard upon it.

Mr. HALE. I shall object unless I can have five minutes myself.

Mr. HATCH. Then I shall be compelled to move that the committee rise for the purpose of having the House close debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I hope the gentleman will not do that, as we can come to some understanding in the committee.

Mr. HATCH. It is stated that some gentlemen wish to offer substantial amendments, and I move therefore that all further debate on the section and pending amendments be closed in twenty minutes. Will that be agreeable?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. HOLMAN. I ask that the pending amendment moved by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] may be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out of section 14 the following words:

"There shall be in the office of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue an analytical chemist and a microscopist, who shall each be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall each receive a salary of three thousand dollars per annum; and."

Mr. HOLMAN. Now, Mr. Chairman, I wish to get this amendment before the committee, and I ask the Clerk to read the section as it will stand if the amendment is adopted.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may, whenever in his judgment the necessities of the service so require, employ chemists and microscopists, to be paid such compensation as he may deem proper, not exceeding in the aggregate any appropriation made for that purpose.

Mr. HOLMAN. It is manifest, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment of the gentleman from Georgia may be adopted without any impairment of the contemplated service. I trust my friend from Missouri having charge of the bill will consent to the amendment.

A word further. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] says that the internal-revenue tax on tobacco can not be abolished. But what right has he to assume that? I concede as matters stand now no member who is opposed to the abolition of our present rate of taxation, internal and customs, could support this bill on the plea of its being a revenue measure, for the revenues of the Government are now enormously beyond the wants of the Government. But the gentleman has no right to assume that members on this floor are not in favor of substituting the source of revenue proposed by this bill for other existing sources of revenue. I think the fraudulent product under consideration a very proper object of taxation. It can claim no right to exemption. The tax on tobacco is an oppressive tax on the producer; it is a discriminating tax; it is an oppressive tax on the great body of laborers to whom it is a necessity, and, if a luxury, it is the only one within their reach; it diminishes to the farmer the value of the products of his land; it hedges in his legitimate industry by oppressive restraints; he can only sell the product of his labor to a licensed dealer, and, in my judgment, it ought to be abolished. No direct and simple product of land should be specially taxed except in a great emergency. I think the sentiment of the House is favorable to the abolition of the internal-revenue tax on tobacco. I do not care how high you tax the imported article or the manufactured cigar, but I wish to see the American farmer released from a tax on the direct product of his land.

But the gentleman from Georgia has not shown his usual logic in debate. He talks about a connection between our Government Patent Office and the discoveries and inventions in the arts which have revolutionized the world—great discoveries, which have marked the progress of the civilization of the human race, and are the sources of the happiness and prosperity of all civilized people, and attributes all to the Patent Office. What does the gentleman mean? I looked over to the other side of the House at my distinguished friend who presided for a while over the Patent Office with so much ability, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BUTTERWORTH], and noticed that he was smiling at the idea that to our Patent Office the world was indebted for the printing press and the other great discoveries which have enlightened the world and elevated the human race, the development of the great forces wrung from nature from time to time for the benefit of mankind, and which for centuries have marked the progress of the civilization of our race. And yet the logic of the gentleman's argument is that to our system of patents, to our patent laws as they have stood upon our statute-books, the world is indebted for this marvelous development wrought by the discoveries of the centuries.

I deny it, sir. The patent laws have nothing to do with it. The progress of the race is not dependent on patent laws. The progress of the human race has not depended upon such agencies, on patent laws or patents. I have always doubted, and doubt still, the policy of the patent system as adopted many years ago by our fathers, and which we have adhered to without inquiry or question all of these years. That the inventor is in many instances a benefactor and entitled to a fair and just consideration, and in some instances to very great honor, I do not doubt. But that he is one of a multitude of men bearing on the accumulated experience of the ages, marching in the same general direction, and ready to reach the same result, no one can deny. The one of the great number who first announces a result is entitled to just consideration, but the interests of the great multitude are not to be forgotten when the patent laws of the country are employed as an artificial agency by which the interests and overgrown estates of a few men may be built up in the impoverishment of multitudes of their fellow-citizens and imperial fortunes realized, and that, too, at the expense of multitudes of people, and at the expense of all substantial public interests of the country, then I do not hesitate to say that the system of laws which permits this is injurious to the general prosperity of the poople and to the perpetuity of our form of government, and the laws, while being just to the inventors, should not render such a result possible.

It is only the artificial force of law that can injuriously change the material conditions of our people. Natural forces never create overgrown fortunes for some, hopeless poverty for the many. I still insist, sir, that the system of legislation which builds up great interests, that promotes the creation of great fortunes, that encourages the growth of great estates, is that kind of legislation which this side of the House at all events should not be eager to perpetuate, should not hasten to encourage; for it is that system of all others that breaks down the very foundation upon which, according to the democratic theory of government, the perpetuity of our institutions must depend.

It is for the reason that I would not see crushed out the great multitude of the smaller industries of the country, or see the comforts of the homes of multitudes of our people diminished, for the purpose of building up colossal fortunes by patented monopolies, that I am giving this bill my support. I speak for the small industries against the power of monopoly through which under our artificial legislation great estates are rendered possible.

Mr. MORRISON. Mr. Chairman, it is probably useless to say more of the merits or demerits of this bill. I am not much in the habit of wasting words upon a question which is already determined by the will of the majority. What I wish to say is by way of reply to the remarks of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who, it seems to me, having determined to vote for this bill, finds it necessary to make some apology for voting for it.

In doing this he tells us in the remarks first made to-day he would lay on this tax, not needed for revenue, in the interest of the poor, whom he would not oppress. He would not oppress or vex that too numerous class of our people with unnecessary taxes; yet he says this inferior or poor butter is a very proper subject of taxation. Sir, this article will never be taxed unless it is sold. It will never be sold unless it is used for food, and whoever uses it for food will pay the tax. Who does the gentleman from Indiana believe will buy, use, and pay the taxes on this cheaper and poorer butter or substitute for butter? Who will contribute the promised revenue on or from this article? Will it not fall on those who will buy this for want of means to buy the better and more expensive article? Does he expect the thrifty and well-to-do people to put aside the better and more expensive food and buy this cheaper oleomargarine? Oh, no; he can not expect this.

But I need not answer for the gentleman. He must know, we all know, that if oleomargarine continues to be made when this bill is law it will be used and paid for, including the tax, by those least able to pay taxes. One other thing the gentleman from Indiana would do to relieve the poor for whom he professedly speaks. He would remove all taxes from tobacco. We will get this year from the tax on tobacco in various forms, including snuff and cigars, $28,000,000. Remove that, and we can spare no more revenue now. Repeal the tobacco tax means continue the present tax on wood, lumber, sugar, salt, shoes, and shirts, shelter, food, and clothing. All these must continue to bear the heavy burden now resting upon them. And are these not necessary, more necessary to the wants, the health, and comfort of the great mass of men for whom the gentleman from Indiana assures us he speaks when he speaks for untaxed tobacco?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. MORRISON. I have but five minutes; however, I will hear the gentleman.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I wish to know who pays the tobacco tax, the rich or the poor?

Mr. MORRISON. All who use tobacco pay the taxes on it as part of the price.

Mr. HOLMAN. And the very poor, those to whom it is the only luxury which they are able to procure, pay the most of it.

Mr. MORRISON. Yes, and the same is true of all taxes. The poor pay nine-tenths of all taxes paid; in whatever form they are paid they pay nine-tenths, whether on tobacco, shirts, or shoes. Our taxes are all on consumption, and our friends on the opposite side of the Chamber have so retained taxes as to keep those which fall unequally and largely on the poor, and the removal of the tobacco tax is in continuation of that policy. To take that off results in the necessity of retaining others which in their existing form are much more oppressive. In the debate on the pending bill the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR] said the repeal of the wool tax would cost the people of his State $3,000,000. His State produces about 8 per cent., or one-twelfth, of all the wool consumed in the country. And if the gentleman from Ohio is not mistaken as to the amount Ohio lost and the people of Ohio and other States would gain, then the repeal of the wool tax would remove from thirty-five to forty millions of taxes on the goods made at home, and yet that wool tax put but $3,000,000 in the Treasury.

This article (cigars) yields us $11,000,000 revenue.

A MEMBER. What is it?

Mr. MORRISON. It is a small-sized cigar. It yields $11,000,000, and the cigar industry is not crushed out either; for the number used has more than doubled in the last ten years. The growth of the cigar industry has increased five times as fast as our people. Every dollar paid in taxes on cigars goes into the Treasury. Take off that $11,000,000, and to what idle man will you give employment? What new wheel will you turn? What industry will you encourage? Take off the three millions on wool, and you let loose the spindles; you give work to the idle. Take off three millions of revenue on wool, and by the estimate of the gentleman from Ohio you take off more than ten times as many millions dollars taxes. Remove those taxes and with them the increased cost of making woolen goods, and you will have something you can sell in the foreign markets, which but a few days ago you were buying, or attempting to buy, your way into at a cost of $800,000 a year. You will add to the productive wealth of the country and the comforts of its people, Mr. Chairman, when eleven millions of taxes, which yield eleven millions of revenue from tobacco are to be taken off; that three millions of revenue from wool must be obtained by a tax, which, based on the estimate of the gentleman from Ohio, costs those who wear hats of wool or woolen clothing more than ten times as many millions. Then, Mr. Chairman, some other reason must be assigned than the interests of the poor. [Applause.]

Mr. HALE. While I am friendly to the general purposes and objects of this bill and design to support it on its final passage, yet I desire to call the special attention of the friends of the measure and the House generally to what I consider the extraordinary provisions of the last clause of this section. I had an amendment pending to strike out all after the word "final," in the fourteenth line. As I understand the meaning of that part of the section, it vests in the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, subject to the supervision of certain officers therein named, the power to determine what articles used in the manufacture of oleomargarine are injurious and deleterious to the public health.

Now I do not understand that the friends of this bill have ever placed it on the ground that the General Government had the right to interfere with the sanitary regulations inside of State lines. Under the provisions of this section the Commissioner has the right to determine what is healthy food and what is not healthy food, and under the provisions of a subsequent section the power is vested in that department to seize and destroy, in other words to confiscate, these supposed unhealthy articles of food.

If we have the power to do this, if we have the power to enact laws of that character, where is this thing to stop? If the Commissioner of Internal Revenue can be authorized to say what kind of butter or oleomargarine is healthy and what is not and to confiscate what is not in his judgment, can not he say what sort of canned goods are healthy and what are unhealthy? Have we not in that case the right to go inside the State lines and supervise all the domestic relations of the people of the States in such matters? I understand the States have a municipal power of that sort. There is no doubt about the right of States to enact laws for the inspection of articles of food as sanitary measures. There is no doubt about the power of the General Government to enact sanitary regulations to prevent the introduction and spread of disease from foreign ports. It may go so far as to regulate these matters between the States. But I never heard it claimed that the Federal Government had any power under the Constitution to enact laws by which the revenue department could enter into our domestic life within State lines and determine what should be used as food and what not.

Where is the warrant and authority for this immense power? There is nothing in any law which amounts to the exercise of this power; there is no precedent for it in the history of the country. Whence is such a power derived? A State or a city may enact laws and ordinances by which food may be inspected, by which manufacturing establishments may be supervised, and the public health protected. But that the Federal Government should enact laws to authorize its officers to go inside of State lines and supervise our food and say what is healthy and what is not healthy, and to confiscate what they say is not healthy, is an extraordinary power never heretofore asserted by this Government, and it has not, as I understand, been claimed by the friends of this bill.

This portion of the fourteenth section is not necessary to carry out the general objects and purposes of this measure. As I understand, this bill can only be defended on the ground that this tax is levied for the purpose of raising revenue. It never has been claimed by its friends that we had the power to make sanitary regulations within State lines. Why not then strike out this provision and place the bill before the country as a revenue measure? Why not lift the burdens from other objects of taxation? Why not lower our tariff? But do not establish the doctrine and principle that the Federal Government has the right to go within our family, interfere with our domestic affairs, and determine what is healthy and what is unhealthy. It is a most dangerous power. As I have said, I favor the general object of this bill. I think there is no doubt about the right of this Government to levy taxes of this sort for revenue purposes; and when levying such taxes they can discriminate against articles and in favor of articles just as they do in levying a tariff. We have the right to discriminate. We may tax this article 5 per cent. and another 10 per cent. and another 20 per cent.; we are not bound to say that all shall be taxed alike. We can put one tax on tobacco, another on whisky, and another on oleomargarine.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment to section 14, which I will send up to be offered at the proper time. I had supposed, sir, as we have been assured here, that this bill had undergone the scrutiny of the Law Department of the Government and of the Internal Revenue Department, and that, as it came to us from the hands of the committee, it was a sacred thing which should not be touched. We were also informed that the provisions of this bill were not intended to apply to anything except oleomargarine when compounded of some of the ingredients named in the second section and sold as butter or for butter.

The chairman of the committee in making that assertion it seems to me must have overlooked the provisions of the fourteenth and fifteenth sections of the bill.

I assert without fear of successful contradiction that if any gentleman will read the fourteenth section he will find two classes of oleomargarine provided for therein. The first is that which is subject to a tax under the provisions of this bill, and when a question arises as to whether or not it is so subject to taxation the question is to be submitted to the decision of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and the decision of that officer is to be final, from which no appeal is granted. There is no appeal whatever from it, and to strike out that provision is one purpose of my amendment. The second class of oleomargarine provided for in the fourteenth section of the bill is covered by this language:

> The Commissioner may also decide whether any substance made in imitation or semblance of butter, and intended for human consumption, contains ingredients deleterious to the public health.

The fourteenth section contains that provision, while, in the discussion on the second section, we were informed by the chairman of the committee, with the advice and consent of the law officers as it was claimed, that it only applied to oleomargarine which was sold for butter or as butter. From the language which I have read it will be seen that this provision in the fourteenth section applies to any substance of this character "intended for human consumption." When a question arises under this provision a commission is to be appointed, consisting of the officers named in the bill, and their decision is to be final.

But, sir, the monstrosity—I use the word advisedly—the monstrosity of this law crops out in the fifteenth section, which provides that "all packages of oleomargarine subject to tax under this act that shall be found without stamps or marks as herein provided"—that is one class—"and all oleomargarine intended for human consumption which contains ingredients adjudged, as hereinbefore provided, to be deleterious to the public health, shall be forfeited to the United States," without regard to whether it is liable to a tax or not. That I say is monstrous. It is a reaching out, under the pressure of constituents, under the clamor of interested parties, to strike down an industry of this country, and by this bill you seize the police powers of the Government. You would have the same power to determine, if you can determine, the quality of every article of food whether it is canned, or packed, or not, and if it is pronounced deleterious to health, you could thus usurp the police powers of the State. It is dangerous ground and, in my opinion, unwarranted.

Your informers come in, they go running around seeking to get one-half of what they seize. Informers! a class of men that no lawyer would believe under oath; their occupation is one that no honorable man would engage in. Informer! a name detested and execrated by every lover of the rights of the citizen in every country where the rights of the citizen are respected. They flourish best where the rights of the individual citizen are least. I am surprised that there should be an attempt at this time by a committee of the American Congress to give occupation to that class called informers—occupation at the expense and to the annoyance of the public.

Mr. Chairman, under what provision of the Constitution do the committee claim the extraordinary jurisdiction of Congress over the health and morals of the States set out in these sections 14 and 15? Would it not be well to leave that duty to the States where the fathers placed it?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The CHAIRMAN. Debate upon this section and all amendments thereto is exhausted. The first amendment is that of the gentleman from Georgia, which the Clerk will read.

Mr. STONE. Mr. Chairman, I wish to send up an amendment to be acted upon.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will entertain amendments in their order.

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 14 strike out "that there shall be in the office of internal revenue an analytical chemist and a microscopist, who shall each be appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury, and shall each receive a salary of $2,500 per annum; and."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE] relate to these lines of the bill?

Mr. STONE. It does not.

The question was taken on the amendment just read; and there were—ayes 33, noes 61.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will now entertain the amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STONE].

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 14, lines 13 and 14, strike out the words "and his decision in matters of taxation under this act shall be final."

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will now read the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HALE].

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 14, strike out the following:

"The Commissioner may also decide whether any substance made in imitation or semblance of butter, and intended for human consumption, contains ingredients deleterious to the public health; but in case of doubt or contest his decisions in this class of cases may be appealed from to a board hereby constituted for the purpose, and composed of the Surgeon-General of the Army, the Surgeon-General of the Navy, and the Commissioner of Agriculture; and the decisions of this board shall be final in the premises."

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 24, noes 74.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. HOLMAN. No quorum has voted. I do not wish to interrupt the progress of the bill, but I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] that inasmuch as this is a very important bill, he allow us to have a vote upon it in the House.

Mr. HATCH. I desire to state to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] and to my colleague that they are under an entire misapprehension about this portion of this section.

Mr. HAMMOND. Regular order, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from Georgia does not seem to be willing that anybody shall say anything upon this bill but himself, or that anybody who has any information shall impart it except himself.

Mr. HAMMOND. It was on the motion of the gentleman himself that the limitation was put upon the debate.

Mr. HATCH. I was simply replying to a polite request of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN].

Mr. HAMMOND. I withdraw my objection.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I will say what I have to say at another time, and the gentleman from Georgia shall hear from me.

Mr. HAMMOND. I will.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, I shall make the point that no quorum has voted unless we can have an understanding with the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] about a vote upon this provision in the House.

Mr. HATCH. I will say to my colleague, with the greatest kindness and frankness, that I do not propose to accept any such proposition, and whenever that gauntlet is thrown down I shall accept it. Let the gentleman make his point that no quorum has voted, and we will see if we can not get a quorum here.

Mr. HALE. I make the point, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The point being made that no quorum has voted, the Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HALE, and the gentleman from Missouri, Mr. HATCH, to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 42, noes 121.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I move to amend by striking out, in lines 10 to 14, the following:

And such Commissioner is authorized to decide what substances, extracts, mixtures, or compounds which may be submitted for his inspection in contested cases are to be taxed under this act; and his decision in matters of taxation under this act shall be final.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will next be taken on an amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. WARNER], which the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 18 of section 14, strike out the words "in this class of cases."

The amendment was rejected.

The following amendment, offered by Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, was read:

After the word "board," in the last line of the section, strike out the words "shall be final in the premises" and insert "may be appealed from to the Secretary of the Treasury."

The amendment was rejected.

The following amendment, offered by Mr. DUNHAM, was read:

Amend section 14 by inserting after the word "revenue," in line 2, the words "and in each of the following places, to wit: New York, Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago, Kansas City, and Pittsburgh."

The amendment was rejected, there being—ayes 5, noes 92.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by inserting after the word "revenue," in the second line, the words "and the town of Newton, in the State of Kansas."

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. DUNHAM. I move to amend by striking out all after the word "purpose," in line 10, down to and including "final," in line 14.

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question will now be taken on the motion of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA] to strike out section 14.

The motion was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 15. That all packages of oleomargarine subject to tax under this act that shall be found without stamps or marks as herein provided, and all oleomargarine intended for human consumption which contains ingredients adjudged, as hereinbefore provided, to be deleterious to the public health, shall be forfeited to the United States. Any person who shall willfully remove or deface the stamps, marks, or brands on package containing oleomargarine taxed as provided herein shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $2,000, and by imprisonment for not less than thirty days nor more than six months.

Mr. MCKENNA. Mr. Chairman, I do not know that I can say anything to vindicate a claim to the attention of the House; but I can at least achieve the laudable and customary ambition of a place in the RECORD, and exhibit to my constituents what a lively interest their Representative takes in their affairs, though it may be an idle or unnecessary one.

Mr. Chairman, when this bill first came up for discussion I concurred in the general and assumed interpretation, and while I favored what I conceived to be its primary purpose, I was tossed upon a sea of doubt by the many strong objections that were urged to its methods. It appeared to have a very peculiar effect. It seemed to "uproar the universal peace" and confound all distinctions between men and measures in this House. Its tax has been variously described as a tax for protection and a tax for oppression; a tax constitutional and a tax unconstitutional; a tax on honesty and a tax on fraud; a tax promotive of the progress of the country and a tax to ruin its industry—one that would shake the very structure of the Capitol, and destroy the last example of freedom on earth and the last hope of the oppressed of mankind.

It appeared, Mr. Chairman, to have a similar effect upon the members of the House. Protectionists have quarreled over its provisions and threatened each other; free-traders have fallen out and scolded and railed at each other; those who favor the internal-revenue system have opposed the bill; those who oppose the internal-revenue system have favored the bill; States-rights Democrats have advocated it, national Republicans condemned it. It appeared, sir, to have the peculiar power of politics to "make strange bed-fellows;" and all sorts of men with all sorts of opinions might be seen, in the language of Burke, to be "pigging together heads and points in the same truckle-beds."

Now, Mr. Chairman, I see no disadvantage in this intermingling; and it may be that in the association and co-operation of old-time enemies each may see the possibilities and limitations of his doctrine, and find accommodation for antagonisms which are now thought imposible to compose.

Mr. Chairman, as philosophers in some situations we can have no prejudice against tallow; as philosophers at the breakfast table I think we would prefer butter. As legislators concerned with the interests a of a people and invested with power of taxation and the right to discriminate its objects, I think within its purview we can subserve other purposes than raising revenue. This seems to be right; and if it be within the competence of Government to expose imposture it is its duty to do so.

The law seeks to protect against illegal encroachment and impositions of all kinds. To obtain money under false pretenses is a well-known crime, and the kind or manner of the artifice, be it to sell oleomargarine as butter or other kind can not destroy the essential difference between right and wrong. It would seem, therefore, our right at least to make it difficult for covert and clever rascality to practice deceit and fraud by mimicking some other man's industry, and our duty to disappoint the cheat of pecuniary advantage by the imposition of the tax provided for in the bill. The amount of the tax is not important, and can not be a burden if it can be avoided by honesty.

I would not care particularly if we went no further than to distinguish the products, and if it were possible in the condition of the business of the House and the inveterate opposition made against this measure to stop and temporize I might be in favor of it. I would strip it of its disguises; I would stop its artful and iniquitous masquerade. I would color it, if you please, sky blue as suggested by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. PETTIBONE], or pink as urged by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH]——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HITT. I will take the floor, Mr. Chairman, and yield my time to the gentleman from California.

Mr. MCKENNA. Thanks. I see vast possibilities of profit in the suggestion for oleomargarine men. Tint it a delicate pink, perfume it with the scent of the rose or the violet, or of "the flowers that bloom in the spring," and bull's grease will be idealized into taurine ointment, and as such can be used to anoint the lip of beauty and soften the cheek of members of Congress. [Laughter.]

Mr. Chairman, there are millions in it. [Great laughter and applause.] Distinguished by color, it may be started out and will take its chances in the dispute of tastes, and if anybody then prefers this article of the slaughter-pen and an apothecary-shop, this product dug from a charnel-house and run through a chemical laboratory, carrion of death and the grave, to pure butter, so be it. Are we not Americans? De gustibus non est disputandum. [Great laughter.] That, Mr. Chairman, is Latin [renewed laughter], but it does not mean anything more than the old woman said when she kissed the cow. [Great laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HISCOCK. I move, Mr. Chariman, that further debate be limited to ten minutes.

Mr. BEACH. I have an amendment to offer and I hope debate will not be limited just now.

Mr. LAWLER. Mr. Chairman, yesterday a question was raised against the petitions of iron-workers and trades assemblies by the friends of this bill, who questioned the right of the signers to send these telegrams through the duly recognized representatives of these organizations. When these people sent these dispatches to the gentleman from Pittsburgh [Mr. NEGLEY], the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN], and myself, I hold they came from the authorized officers of these iron-workers and other toilers of Pennsylvania.

Now, I do not like to pose here before this body as the champion of the toilers of this country, as that would appear to assume too much for one member of this House, but on all questions of this kind I feel proud to stand here in behalf of the honest toilers of the country. I say this legislation attempted here by asking the passage of this bill is vicious legislation.

I want to say further, that gentlemen who make an attack on those interested in the city of Chicago, against Armour & Co., Fowler Brothers, Fairbanks & Co., Swift & Co., and other manufacturers too numerous to mention, representing to-day over $200,000,000 of capital invested in the cattle business, attack men who during the winter employed not less than ninety thousand of these very toilers in favor of whose interests we hear so much said upon this floor.

Mr. FREDERICK. And is this the poor laboring class whose business is to be destroyed by this bill!

Mr. FELTON. Who does the gentleman from Illinois say are worth $200,000,000?

Mr. LAWLER. I say that those men and others engaged in the cattle business represent more than $200,000,000.

Mr. FELTON. Does the gentleman mean to say those men pay taxes on that amount?

Mr. LAWLER. I say they represent that much money invested in this cattle business. We have no tax-dodgers in Chicago interested in this business.

Mr. FELTON. If they have that much money then they have enough.

Mr. LAWLER. I want to say that Armour & Co., Fowler & Bros., and others, are continually investing their capital and thereby giving employment to thousands of toilers.

Mr. MORGAN. You mean the makers of oleomargarine.

Mr. LAWLER. Yes. I mean the makers of oleomargarine, and the pork-packing and cattle interests of my city.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I hope we will have some order here.

Mr. LAWLER. I want to say, Mr. Chairman, to the gentlemen on my left and in my rear who have passed the word demagogy and blatherskite—I want to say to these gentlemen right here that if the capitalistic newspapers of the country were on the side of the toilers, so far as Congress is concerned, there are a great many members of this House who would be pleased to be called demagogues and blatherskites. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN. Let me ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. LAWLER. I shall not yield, as my time will not allow further interruption. [Laughter.]

Let me say to those who have been asking why there were thirty-five thousand toilers who could not get employment in Chicago that if it had not been for these people who have been so much denounced as the manufacturers of oleomargarine thousands upon thousands of toilers would have suffered all winter long for the want of employment. Thousands upon thousands have been employed by those who are interested in the manufacture of oleomargarine in the large cities.

What is this article of oleomargarine? I have eaten it. [Laughter.] And I make the statement here, whatever may be said by the friends of the dairy interests, that oleomargarine properly manufactured and put on the market will compare favorably with the present dairy butter which is manufactured and placed upon the market.

I wish to say further to the members here this afternoon that, looking to the condition of affairs in the country, instead of putting on additional taxation some of the burdens now imposed should be taken off of the people. I said, in the remarks made by me the other day, you could not compel men who work at 90 and 100 cents a day to endure increased taxation.

Mr. MORGAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Illinois a question. I wish to ask him whether the trades unions, the names of whose officers are signed here, represent anybody but themselves, and whether they pretend to interfere here in law and politics and religion? [Laughter and applause.]

Mr. LAWLER. I would answer that by saying this, they are the officers of these different lodges and assemblages——

Mr. MORGAN. Do they represent anybody but themselves when they speak?

Mr. LAWLER. Yes; they represent all these assemblages, numbering seventy-eight thousand men, and all other questions affecting their interests, as shown by these dispatches.

Mr. MORGAN. Can they speak as to the law, politics, and religion of the subject, or as to the objects of their organization in connection with it?

Mr. LAWLER. They speak with the authority of the whole body against the passage of this bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Then, unless it is a part of the organization to consider these things, how can they represent anybody but themselves?

Mr. LAWLER. They are the regularly authorized deputies of these different assemblages, and they have met and framed this protest against the passage of the bill.

Mr. MORGAN. Have the seventy-eight thousand of whom you speak held any meeting to consider this matter?

Mr. LAWLER. Certainly, and their resolutions voice the sentiments of the seventy-eight thousand members through their delegates. I think this statement will answer the gentleman's question.

Mr. FARQUHAR. These are the delegates, representing the whole body, who speak in this paper.

Mr. MORGAN. Whom do they represent?

Mr. FARQUHAR. The whole body of men organized in the different assemblages.

Mr. MORGAN. Can they speak with authority, or do they speak simply for themselves?

Mr. FARQUHAR. They speak for all. They are the properly accredited representatives of the whole body to speak for them and in their name.

Mr. MORGAN. As to the law, politics, and religion of the whole subject?

Mr. LAWLER. Yes, sir.

I want to say that what I think Congress should have done in this matter was, if this product is unwholesome for food, there should have been no stricture put upon it in the shape of taxation, but Congress should have passed an act prohibiting its being sold in the country at all——

Mr. FREDERICK. And let it be sold in the cities altogether. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAWLER. To prohibit its sale all over the country; but in place of that you say we want to protect the dairy interests. Now, we have already stated here the protection the people of this country get from this very interest which gentlemen clamor so loudly for, the dairy interest. In this very city a year ago dairy butter sold at 60 cents a pound; an outrageous price, as everybody knows. The result of the introduction of this new product has been that they are now selling their dairy butter for one-half or less, and it is just as good as that for which this enormous price was paid.

I believe that the country's increasing population, running away beyond 60,000,000 to-day, and having this large surplus of unemployed men, over 1,000,000 in this country at the present time, must have cheap food products. They are entitled to better protection, and they certainly should not be forced to pay the exorbitant price of the dairymen when they can get a good, wholesome butter in the shape of oleomargarine or butterine for less than half price. They can not pay 60 cents a pound nor 50 cents a pound for butter. I believe in encouraging every honest agricultural product at all times, but I do not believe in casting a vote here to advance the interest of the agriculturist as against any other class of our people, and particularly so when that vote would raise the price of necessary products of home consumption to the toiling masses of this country.

For that reason I say, gentlemen, that it has been considered very unpopular for men to get up here and talk against public opinion and stand for the toiling classes of the country. For twenty-one years, and long, hard years at that, which I am proud to speak of, I did nothing but hard labor, and I was not ashamed of it; and when I spoke to those people in my district I told them that if they would elect me to Congress I would, as far as I could by my voice and vote, see that justice was done to them, and I do not propose right here to cast a vote to interfere with them or impose an additional tax on them to protect the interests of the butter-men. These men are consumers largely of oleomargarine and butterine. I say to you gentlemen here of this Congress consider well before you cast your vote. The unfortunate condition of affairs in this country to-day is on account of so much class legislation of this kind. I say to men, go on and pass this bill to-day; and I made a remark in my speech the other day which may have been considered as braggadocio, but I now repeat it, that many who so cast their votes will not return and have that opportunity again. [Applause.]

The following telegrams received by me I append as part of my remarks:

PITTSBURGH, PA., May 31, 1886.

Congressman LAWLER, M. C.:

Below find resolutions passed by trades assemblies and lodges comprising the same. (Official copies by mail sent to NEGLEY and CURTIN.)

Whereas certain measures are now pending in Congress for the regulation of the manufacture and sale of butterine and oleomargarine, and the imposition of taxes thereon and amounting to a prohibition; and

Whereas the manufacture and sale of this article is a legitimate and legal business, furnishing a clean, palatable, healthy, and nutritious article of food at a reasonable price, and that the effect of this legislation will be to increase the price of a cheap and a wholesome food product and destroy the labor its manufacture employs; and

Whereas the only reason given for the legislation is that it comes into competition with butter: and

It is resolved, That we protest against the passage of such measures as unjust and injurious to the laboring classes and as opposed to the principles of sound public policy,

It is further resolved, That copies of these resolutions be transmitted to our Senators and Representatives in Congress by the secretary of this assembly.

The foregoing preamble and resolutions were adopted at a session of the Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania for the purpose of taking prompt action in regard to a bill now pending before Congress, entitled "A bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of butterine or oleomargarine."

RICHARD ENNISS,
President of Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.
THOS. J. DICUS,
Secretary Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania.

The Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania consists of the following labor associations:

Superior Lodge, No. 3, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Sheet and Metal Workers' Assembly, Knights of Labor; American Lodge, No. 29, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Labor Assembly, No. 21, Knights of Labor; Good Intent Lodge, No. 4, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Labor Assembly, No. 242, Builders, Carpenters, and Joiners' Union; International Cigar Makers' Union, Knights of Labor; German Journeymen Taylors' Union, Knights of Labor; International Furniture Makers' Union, No. 20, Knights of Labor; Bridge Workers' Assembly, No. 632, Knights of Labor; Labor Assembly, No. 5269, Knights of Labor; Caulkers' Assembly, No. 862, Knights of Labor; Locomotive Workers' Association; Salesmen's Assembly, No. 4907, Knights of Labor; Street Car Drivers' Assembly, No. 603, Knights of Labor; Iron Workers' Assembly, No. 1747, Knights of Labor; Banksville Miners' Association; Typographical Association, No. 1632, Knights of Labor; Lodge No. 35, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Tubal Cain Lodge, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Royal Lodge, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, No. 34; Mechanics' Lodge, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, No. 28; Allegheny Lodge, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, No. 14; District Assembly, No. 80, Knights of Labor; Pressmen's Union, No. 13; Labor Assembly, No. 791, Knights of Labor: Labor Assembly, No. 631, Knights of Labor; Labor Assembly, No. 1862, Knights of Labor; Lodge No. 70, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Lodge No. 28, Amercan Flint-glass Workers' Union; Saw Mill Run Coal Miners' Association; Window-glass Workers' Association, No. 300, Knights of Labor; Iron-molders' Union No. 14; Iron-molders' Assembly, No. 1038, Knights of Labor; Bottle-blowers' Union of North America; Horse-shoers' Union; Typographical Union No. 7; Printers' Association, No. 1392, Knights of Labor; Independent Lodge of Millvale, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Friendship Lodge, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Stone-cutters' Asembly, Knights of Labor; Soho Lodge, No. 70, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Sligo Iron Works, No. 8, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; American Glass-workers' Association, No. 6; Labor Assembly No. 1719, Knights of Labor; Labor Assembly No. 300, Knights of Labor; International Union, No. 171; Iron-molders' Union of North America, No. 243; Knights of Labor Assembly No. 5478, Knights of Labor; Lodge No. 86, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Bricklayers' Union No. 2; District Assembly No. 3, Knights of Labor, forty thousand members; Lodge No. 29, Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers; Labor Assembly 2126, Knights of Labor—representing about seventy-eight thousand members.

Mr. BAYNE. Mr. Chairman, certain statements have been made here respecting the telegraphic dispatches from the workingmen of Pittsburgh which have been introduced and read during the course of this debate. I do not know who prepared those dispatches, nor do I know by what trades unions they may have been indorsed, nor do I know how many members of the trades assemblies attended the meeting at which such protests were adopted, not having seen them; but I feel that I can say for the workingmen of Pittsburgh, and for the workingmen of Pennsylvania generally, that they will not object to putting a tax upon a commodity which is placed on the market in imitation of a genuine article, when that commodity can be put upon the market in its true colors without paying any tax. Coloring oleomargarine so as to make it resemble butter will not make it any better.

If anybody wants to buy oleomargarine, and if anybody like the gentleman from Chicago who has just spoken wants to eat oleomargarine, there is nothing in this bill to prevent him from buying and eating as much oleomargarine as he pleases.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Provided he pays a tax.

Mr. BAYNE. But he need not pay one cent of tax on all the oleomargarine he chooses to buy and chooses to eat if he will go to the manufacturer of oleomargarine who puts it on the market in its true colors. That is all there is in this bill. It is simply to put a tax on the article which is colored to imitate butter and which is palmed off on the public as butter when it is not butter.

I want to say another thing. We have here a Representative from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND], a Representative from North Carolina [Mr. O'HARA], a Representative from the State of Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and a Representative from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN], all opposing this bill with intense earnestness and zeal, and they are all able men. I find upon an examination of the census of 1880 that Georgia produced in that year 7,424,485 pounds of butter; North Carolina 7,212,507; Arkansas 7,790,013; and South Carolina 3,196,851 pounds, making an aggregate of 25,623,856 pounds of butter produced by those four States. That same census discloses the fact that the little State of Vermont manufactured over 25,000,000 pounds of butter; about as much as the four States I have named. The industry of manufacturing butter in those States, like all manufacturing industries within their borders, is away behind the time—behind the age. It is therefore to be expected that the sympathy of the Representatives from those States is not with the manufacture of butter by the dairymen or with any other class of manufacturers. But while I find the total quantity of butter manufactured in those four States in a year amounts to but about 25,000,000 pounds, I find the cotton seed produced by them amounts to 2,627,000,000 pounds; and this cotton seed is not only utilized now for the purpose of making oleomargarine, but it used also for table purposes.

As I have spoken of oleomargarine, so I speak of cotton-seed oil. It may be and doubtless is a very wholesome product; but it will be seen that when you resolve these constitutional scruples we have heard so much about in this debate down into their original element, it is a contest of selfishness, it is a contest of the industry of these States which is the production of cotton and cotton seed as against the industries of the other States of the Union, which produce in large quantities milk and butter and other varieties of necessary and useful things.

I had reduced the cotton-seed product of South Carolina, Arkansas, Georgia, and North Carolina from tons to pounds on the ratio of 2,000 pounds to the ton, thus getting the aggregate of 2,627,178,000 pounds. It may be that I should have calculated on 2,240 pounds to the ton.

The production of cotton seed as shown by the last census for the four States in tons is as follows:

	Tons.
South Carolina	248,210
Arkansas	288,922
Georgia	386,859
North Carolina	389,598

Mr. SCOTT. I move to strike out the last word. I want to enter my protest in behalf of the dairy farmers of Pennsylvania against the telegram which has been alluded to by the gentleman from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER], purporting to be from the organized labor associations of Pennsylvania, representing seventy-eight thousand workers in the mills and factories, and claiming to express the sentiments of this particular class of wage-workers in that State. If there be any class of men who have earned their living by hard work, but who have at the same time received the fostering care and protection of the National Government, the wage-workers of Pennsylvania most assuredly belong to that class. The farmers of Pennsylvania for the past twenty-five years have quietly stood by and seen these men protected at their expense without one word of complaint or protest.

The wage-workers of Pennsylvania have been taken care of and protected as no class has been taken care of and protected by any nation under the sun. And now, when the one million dairy producers of Pennsylvania and the seven million of farmers of the United States appeal to this House to afford them some relief, if it be in its power to do so, from the difficulties with which they are struggling, it would be in very poor taste indeed for the wage-workers of the State to enter their protest against such action, and I can not believe that they would do so. It is my judgment, sir, that this telegram misrepresents them, that it does not speak their true sentiments. But if it does, sir, then I assert it is full time that the farmers of Pennsylvania organized, as well as those of the United States, for the protection of their own interests and for the purpose of ascertaining whether the fostering care of this Government is to be simply extended in favor of one class of the community and not to another who have at least equal, and in this case it seems to me superior, claims upon it.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Chairman, there is no desire nearer to my heart than to secure the enactment of laws designed to promote the interests of the farming people of the country. But this anxiety to promote the welfare of a large and important interest will not justify us in accepting blindly and unquestionably every measure introduced here apparently for that purpose. It is incumbent upon us to examine all such measures with scrupulous care, to satisfy ourselves that they will really accomplish the purpose intended—to convince ourselves that their practical effect will not be antagonistic to the interests which we seek to benefit.

I can not, therefore, allow the consideration of this bill to proceed to a final vote without calling the attention of the House to some of its features which I regard as undemocratic and as involving dangerous and pernicious legislation.

The party with which I am proud to be identified has always opposed taxation of this character, and for a Democratic House of Representatives to enact this law would present the astounding picture of the Democratic party coming forward in 1886 to indorse and ratify revenue methods which for twenty years they have denounced.

THE NATIONAL DEMOCRATIC PLATFORM.

The platform of principles upon which Mr. Cleveland carried our banner to victory declared:

> The system of direct taxation known as the "internal revenue," is a war tax.

It also declared:

> We denounce the Republican party for having failed to relieve the people from crushing war taxes.

In the same declaration of principles, the Democratic theory of taxation was explained in these words:

> From the foundation of this Government, taxes collected at the custom-house have been the chief source of Federal revenue. Such they must continue to be.
> Sufficient revenue to pay all the expenses of the Federal Government, economically administered, including pensions, interest, and principal of the public debt, can be got from our present system of taxation from custom-house taxes on fewer imported articles, bearing heaviest on articles of luxury, and bearing lightest on articles of necessity.

With these distinct, definite, and positive declarations of principles staring them in the face, with the consciousness that they were elected to the seats they now occupy upon the faith that these principles were to be the groundwork, the guide of their official action, I am unable to see how Democrats can bring themselves to support a measure so directly at war with all the professions of their party.

The declaration of principles from which I have read is the latest authoritative announcement of the fundamental articles of faith in the Democratic political creed, and every Democratic vote for this bill is a clear, emphatic, and unequivocal denial of the party faith as promulgated by the only body empowered to speak for the party.

Not only does this bill antagonize the last platform of principles promulgated by the national Democratic party, not only does it make war upon the positive pledges to which that party is committed in failing to do away with or to diminish the "internal-revenue war taxes" which the Republican party was denounced for perpetuating, but it sanctions and indorses the practice of levying such taxes, it widens the field of their imposition, and extends them to "fresh fields and pastures new."

THE HARDSHIPS OF THE BILL.

The second section of the bill declares that, for the purposes of this act, any mixture of butter with tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, &c., shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine." It also includes in this definition any mixture or compound of these and many other ingredients.

The sixth section provides that any person who offers for sale or who packs such a substance in any manner contrary to the provisions of this act may be fined $1,000 and imprisoned not more than two years.

Section 11 provides that any person who purchases such a substance which has not been branded or stamped shall be fined $50 for each offense.

Section 12 provides that any person who purchases such a substance from a manufacturer who has not paid the special tax of $600 shall be liable to a penalty of $100 for each offense.

Section 13 provides that any person who willfully neglects or refuses to destroy the stamps on a package which contained such substance, after it is emptied, shall be fined not exceeding $50 and imprisoned not less than ten days nor more than six months for each offense.

Several of the advocates of this bill have endeavored to convince the House that its only effect will be to levy a tax upon articles which are sold as butter when, in fact, they are not butter. The gentleman from Pennsylania [Mr. BAYNE] who has just taken his seat conveyed this idea in these words:

> It is simply to put a tax on the article which is colored to imitate butter, and which is palmed off on the public as butter, when it is not butter.

These gentlemen certainly could not have given the bill a careful reading, for, as I have endeavored to show, the bill defines "oleomargarine" to be any mixture of butter with any one of a great number of ingredients. It does not matter how small the quantity of these ingredients may be—if only an ounce, or even the tenth of an ounce in a pound of butter—it would still be, for the purpose of this act, "oleomargarine," and subject to the tax and all the penalties imposed by this bill.

Again, are the advocates of this bill the ones who are to decide what is and what is not a violation of this law? Most certainly they will admit that they can not be.

TEN MILLION BRIBE.

The advocates of the measure estimate that $20,000,000 are to be collected by its operation, and one-half of that amount, $10,000,000, is offered as a bribe to spies and informers who would thus be induced to invade any household in this land to find some one who had been guilty of some technical violation of the intricate and vaguely defined provisions of this bill, or without the slightest intention of wrongdoing had failed to comply with some one of its many unreasonable requirements. I wish it to be distinctly understood that I do not in any way pretend to invoke the idea that ignorance of law can be pleaded in justification of its violation, but I do insist that in a government like ours we should be extremely cautious about enacting laws filled with intricate rules and regulations the violation of which would subject our best citizens to the same punishment which is inflicted upon the worst of criminals.

Is it not a crime for the American Congress to place laws on the statute-book the violation of which is not malum in se, but will enable irresponsible officials to arrest our best citizens and throw them in prison by the side of thieves and murderers?

This morning I offered the amendment which I will again read:

> Provided, That no person who was reported by the Tenth Census as being unable to read shall be fined or imprisoned for violating the provisions of sections 6, 11, 12, or 13 of this act until one year after the passage of the bill now pending in Congress to aid in the support of common schools.

The census shows us that in 1880 there were 4,923,451 persons in the United States over the age of ten years who could not read. Although the friends of that vast body of the American people whose unremitting labor and scanty earnings do not permit them to supply their children with proper educational advantages have used every effort in their power to mitigate this evil, they have encountered the unyielding opposition of certain members of Congress, including many of the most determined advocates of the bill now under consideration.

A CONSTITUTIONAL QUESTION.

The opponents of the educational bill on this side of the House justify their action upon two grounds: First, they say there is no authority in the Constitution to appropriate the money of the people for the purpose of aiding in the support of common schools; second, that it enlarges to a dangerous extent the powers of the General Government for it to contribute a meager sum to the support of common schools, even though the proposed educational bill distinctly and positively provides that in all respects these schools shall be under the exclusive control of the State officials.

And yet these gentlemen support a measure the effect of which will be to empower the Government to appoint a horde of officers, to send them into every corner of the land armed with authority to arrest and imprison every purchaser of a pound of butter containing an ounce or even a trace of lard or of any other of the numerous ingredients mentioned in the second section of the bill, the manufacturer of which has not paid the special tax of $600.

Is there any constitutional warrant for such an outrage upon the liberties of the American people? Is there any Democratic creed which tolerates such an undemocratic measure? Have I not shown that the platform of the party which carried its banners to victory in the last Presidential election denounced laws of this character, and did not the same platform of principles advocate the aid to education which is opposed by some of the Democratic advocates of the bill now being considered?

Fearing some of my party friends may have forgotten the position of the national Democracy upon this question, I will read a paragraph from the Democratic platform adopted at Chicago in 1884:

> We favor * * * the diffusion of free education by common schools, so that every child in the land may be taught the rights and duties of citizenship.

ARREST FOR TRIVIAL OFFENSES.

Let us for a moment, Mr. Chairman, consider the trivial character of the offenses for which citizens may be arrested under the operation of this bill. If any honest farmer, or any one else, is suspected of having mixed a mere trace of any one of some fifty substances with a pound of butter, not only is he liable to arrest, but any one that purchases the product is also liable to arrest, and every arrest of this character will give a handsome fee to a United States commissioner, a deputy marshal, and the numerous other officials around the Federal courts, all of whom, and others besides them, will be stimulated into unwonted and malevolent activity by the $10,000,000 which the bill offers as a bribe to spies and informers.

I have seen enough of the iniquitous operation of these inquisitorial laws which seek to collect the "war tax" called and known as "internal revenue." I have known of instances in which honorable and upright men have been dragged from their homes and families and thrown into jail for alleged violation of some trivial regulation of which they had never heard. I have seen scores of honest farmers and workingmen sleeping on the ground while awaiting trial before a Federal court or United States commissioner upon a charge which was not infrequently shown to have been trumped up by the envy or malice of a personal enemy who had found in this iniquitous system an easy means of wreaking his spite.

These are some of the evils wrought in my own district, and within my own knowledge, by the internal-revenue tax system which this bill is designed to extend and indefinitely prolong. And, sir, even if it accomplish all that its champions claim that it will accomplish, it will not benefit either my district or my State one particle. According to the last census my district produced only 1,488,676 pounds of butter, and the entire State of Alabama produced only 7,997,719 pounds.

WILL NOT BENEFIT ALABAMA.

The population of my district according to the same census was 168,502, and of the State was 1,262,505. The butter produced in my district is, therefore, only sufficient to supply an annual consumption per capita of 8 pounds and 13 ounces, and in the entire State of Alabama the product is equal to an annual consumption per capita of only 6 pounds 5 ounces. It is evident, therefore, that neither my district nor my State can be benefited by this bill if it should crush out the manufacture of oleomargarine; and the effect of the crushing-out process should be to enhance the value of each pound of butter where the manufactured product comes into competition with the dairy product.

This competition can effect only those States which produce more butter than they can consume—those States which find a market for their surplus beyond their own borders. I have prepared a table showing the population and quantity of butter produced in several of the States, which will indicate at a glance which States are most likely to be benefited by this bill if it should succeed in increasing the market value of one product by destroying another:

States.	Population.	Butter produced.
		Pounds.
Illinois	3,077,871	53,657,943
Indiana	1,978,301	37,377,797
Iowa	1,624,615	55,481,958
Kansas	996,096	21,671,762
Michigan	1,636,937	38,821,890
Minnesota	780,773	19,161,385
Missouri	2,168,380	28,572,124
New York	5,082,871	111,922,423
Ohio	3,198,062	67,634,263
Pennsylvania	4,282,891	79,336,012
Vermont	332,286	25,240,826
Wisconsin	1,315,497	33,353,045

At the first blush, Mr. Chairman, it would appear that the dairy interest must unavoidably be greatly benefited by the passage of this measure. Nominally to raise additional revenue—which, by the way, no one has pretended we need—it is in reality a scheme to tax out of existence a manufacture alleged to be a fraudulent competitor of the genuine butter produced in our dairies. It would appear, therefore, that the producer of genuine butter must be benefited by the destruction of the cheaper product and the consequent augmentation in the value of the Simon Pure dairy product.

EFFECT OF DIRECT TAX ON PRICES.

Have the friends of this bill given the House any reasons for believing that this will actually be accomplished? What assurance have we as to the ultimate result of the bill upon the price of butter? Will there be an increase in the price of all kinds of butter, genuine and imitation, or will it only increase the profit on genuine butter? What reason have we to expect that our experiences with other products which have been submitted to an internal-revenue tax will not be repeated?

Did the tax on whisky, tobacco, matches, or proprietary medicines diminish the production?

Do we not know that the only practical effect of such taxation was, in large measure, to crush out of existence the small producers, and to confer upon the large and wealthy establishments a practical monopoly of the article so taxed?

And it is not impossible that this will be the effect of this measure. The small and unimportant manufacturer of oleomargarine, with but little capital invested and producing but a trifling quantity, will be forced out of the business, which will be concentrated in the hands of a few wealthy firms who will make as much of the stuff as ever, and exact the taxes levied by this bill from the consumer. I say that it is not impossible that this may be the final effect of this bill should it become a law. I will go even further and say that in my opinion it is highly probable, and I think our past experience warrants the opinion.

What then, sir, will we have achieved? If the market price of dairy butter be increased, and the price of oleomargarine shall be simultaneously advanced, will not the competition between these two products be as sharp as ever? Will not their relative value in market be the same as before this tax was imposed? Will not the only result of this bill be that we have added so much to the cost of living of every consumer of butter, without having conferred any benefit whatever upon any one, except the dairymen in those places where the production is greater than the local consumption? In my country the amount of butter produced is and always has been less than the local demand, and yet oleomargarine is entirely unknown among us.

It will therefore be seen that this bill can not in any way benefit the dairymen of Alabama. I would like very much to advocate any proper bill which would benefit the dairymen of Vermont and other butter-making States; but as it is not certain that this bill will materially benefit even those States, and as it has much in it that is evil, should we not hesitate before we consent to its passage? The argument on this bill has developed the fact that it seeks to benefit this one industry at the expense of many others.

SOUTHERN INDUSTRIES INJURED.

It has been developed that lard and cotton-seed oil are very important ingredients of oleomargarine. I read from the Chicago Times of November 15, 1885:

It is likely that oleomargarine, refined lard and cotton-seed oil are articles of food "that have come to stay." Cotton-seed oil is new, but there is every reason for believing that it is as wholesome as olive oil or any animal fat. The real objection of dairymen to the manufacture and sale of any of these articles is that they believe they have a tendency to diminish the price of butter.

If this measure should increase the profits of the dairymen of the North and the Northwest, just in the same proportion will it decrease the profits of the producers of cotton and the stock-raisers of the South? The court of appeals of New York, in discussing the constitutionality of a somewhat similar law, said:

THE LAW UNCONSTITUTIONAL.

Among these (namely, constitutional safeguards) no proposition is more fully settled than that it is one of the fundamental rights and principles of every American citizen to adopt and follow such lawful and industrial pursuit not injurious to the community, as he may see fit.

Who will have the temerity to say that these constitutional privileges are not violated by an enactment which absolutely prohibits an important branch of industry, for the sole reason that it competes with another, and may reduce the price of an article of food for the human race.

Measures of this kind are dangerous even to their promoters. If the argument of the respondents in support of the absolute power of the Legislature to prohibit one branch of industry for the purpose of protecting another with which it competes can be sustained, why could not the oleomargarine manufacturers, should they obtain sufficient power to influence or control the legislative council, prohibit the manufacture or sale of dairy products? Would arguments then be found wanting to demonstrate the invalidity, under the Constitution, of such an act? The principle is the same in both cases. The numbers engaged upon each side of the controversy can not influence the question here. Equal rights to all are what are intended to be secured by the establishment of constitutional limits to legislative power, and impartial tribunals to enforce these.

Illustrations might be indefinitely multiplied of the evils which would result from legislation which would exclude one class of citizens from industries, lawful in other respects, in order to protect another class against competition. We can not doubt that such legislation is violative of the letter as well as the spirit of the constitutional provisions before referred to, nor that such is the character of the enactment under which the appellant was convicted.—Opinion filed June 16, 1885.

It can not be contended that the sole purpose of this bill is to collect taxes. The Democrats who advocate this bill have insisted that we do not need any more revenue, as our Treasury is even now overflowing. This bill proposes to tax a manufactured article 150 per cent. They then insist that it is necessary as a police measure. If they are correct in this, then I reply that the Supreme Court of the United States has distinctly declared such laws to be clearly in violation of the Constitution. The act of March 2, 1867, declares—

That no person shall mix for sale naphtha and illuminating oils, or shall knowingly sell or keep for sale, or offer for sale such mixture, or shall sell or offer for sale oil made from petroleum for illuminating purposes, inflammable at less temperature or fire-test than 110° Fahrenheit; and any person so doing shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor and on conviction thereof by indictment or presentment in any court of the United States having competent jurisdiction shall be punished by fine, &c., and imprisonment, &c.

The Chief-Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States delivered an opinioh declaring this law to be unconstitutional. It was the case of The United States vs. Dewitt (9 Wallace Reports, page 42). In this connection the court said:

Standing by itself, it is plainly a regulation of police; and that it was so considered, if not by the Congress which enacted it, certainly by the succeeding Congress, may be inferred from the circumstance that while all special taxes on illuminating oils were repealed by the act of July 20, 1868, which subjected distillers and refiners to the tax on sales as manufacturers, this prohibition was left unrepealed.

As a police regulation, relating exclusively to the internal trade of the States, it can only have effect where the legislative authority of Congress excludes, territorially, all State legislation, as for example in the District of Columbia. Within State limits, it can have no constitutional operation. This has been so frequently declared by this court, results so obviously from the terms of the Constitution, and has been so fully explained and supported on former occasions that we think it unnecessary to enter again upon the discussion.

But even if this law is constitutional will the proof show it to be necessary?

EXPERT TESTIMONY.

In a recent trial in the State of New York the testimony of experts was given regarding the wholesomeness of this substance. Professor Henry Morton testified:

I am professor of the science of technology at the Stevens Institute, Hoboken, and have been for fourteen years. I have seen oleomargarine made repeatedly and analyzed it frequently, and have obtained knowledge about it from reading in reference to its history from the time it was first devised and introduced up to the present time.

I am familiar with the article known as dairy butter, and have analyzed and examined it.

* * * * * * *

Oleomargarine was first devised or invented, I think, in 1872 or 1873. It was during the Franco-German war. It was invented by Mégé, who was a man of scientific attainments. He had already made a reputation in reference to bread which he made for the French Government. It is reported that he was employed by the French Government to devise a substitute for butter. Oleomargarine is a more durable article than butter. It keeps better.

* * * * * * *

In my opinion it is precisely as wholesome as dairy butter. I can not imagine a reason why there should be a difference, and, moreover, the fact that the manufacture of oleomargarine is carried on by machinery on a large scale makes it easier to be kept clean. My personal belief is that it is a cleaner product than the average butter.

For the reasons I have given, to which many others might be added, Mr. Chairman, I shall oppose the passage of this bill.

It is in direct opposition to the declarations and pledges of the Democratic party.

It adds to instead of decreasing the burden of taxation under which the people now groan.

It widens the field for and extends and prolongs the system of taxation which only extreme necessity has ever been held to justify.

It creates a horde of additional officers of the General Government, and thereby increases our expenditures.

It appeals to all that is base and detestable in the minds of those who are naturally base, by offering them heavy bribes to become spies upon and informers against their neighbors.

It exposes the honest and unsuspecting but uninformed to the machinations and oppressions of the crafty, the cruel, and the avaricious.

It will be of practical benefit to those who need it least, and punishes those who deserve to be most carefully protected.

In operation it will be inquisitorial, iniquitous, unjust, and oppressive, and utterly repugnant to every principle to which the Democratic party stands pledged.

Mr. HENLEY. Mr. Chairman, I have been highly amused at the dolorous apprehensions expressed by the political Cassandras on this floor, of whom the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] seems to be the chiefest, that this bogus-butter bill was going to be the means of the overthrow of the Constitution of this country and general demolition of civil institutions.

Those whom I must characterize as the intellectual aristocracy of this Hall, among whom is my distinguished friend, have almost affrighted us out of our senses by intimating that some gentleman's pantry was likely to be invaded by a United States marshal under the operation of this bill should it become a law. To lull the disquietude of my friend I could assure him that an amendment to protect his pantry would be cheerfully accepted by the friends of the bill.

Now, sir, seriously, apropos of this constitutional question, I confess to some slight impatience at the "damnable iteration" with which the supporters of this measure have been charged by its antagonists with the willful intent of violating the fundamental law of our land. The measure is characterized as being the offspring of passion, &c.

I hereby declare in my opinion that it is within the constitutional power of Congress to seize upon any industry, that in its discretion it sees fit, for the purpose of making such industry tributary to the support of this Government.

It may shock the weak nerves of some of my friends if I declare that it is within the power of Congress to tax the raising of beans in Georgia or peanuts in the State of North Carolina and place them under the internal-revenue system if we want to do so for this purpose. I ask the gentleman in all candor upon what ground is the tax upon whisky and tobacco justified? It is for two reasons, as every one knows: First, for the purpose of raising revenue; second, because those articles are deemed luxuries, are deemed meretricious industries, and therefore proper subjects for revenue.

The theory upon which they are taxed is that being articles which can not be classified as necessaries of life, and it being possible for the people to get along without them, the law steps in and says to the consumers of those articles, "If you desire to minister to your vicious appetite you must pay for it;" and hence those businesses are made the subject of very oppressive tax. So the philosophy upon which this measure is predicated is a mixture of those two considerations.

We say to the manufacturers of bogus butter, it is an impure and obnoxious compound, unwholesome, detrimental, and unfit for human consumption. Some of it may be pure and healthful, but it is a business which affords so many opportunities and temptations to intermix unwholesome and poisonous substances that we deem it expedient to place it under the authority of the internal revenue in order that it may contribute to the support of the Government and be kept subjected to such regulations as may be necessary.

My very distinguished and eloquent friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL], made a speech here on last Saturday in which he rang the changes upon the alleged unconstitutionality of the pending measure. The speech abundantly illustrates that gentleman's rare gifts, and showed how much persuasive force could be expressed in an address of only about ten minutes' duration. Eliminating from that effort its rhetoric and its denunciation the residue is not worthy of serious concern. There was grace of delivery; there was mellifluous vocalism; there was foaming declamation, and that was about all; and this I say with great deference to the high powers of my distinguished friend, because it was the kind of speech he intended to make, and indeed the most effective one that could have been made on his side of the question.

Sir, the opposition to this bill thus far has been based upon denunciation, invective, ridicule, and the like. Should they invade the domain of logic, should they invoke a little common sense, they apparently fear that it would be destructive to their cause.

The gentleman said, among other things, that one resolution of our national platform, upon which we won our late victory, pledged our party to the repeal of war taxes; and giving his own interpretation to that platform, he said it meant that the internal-revenue system should be abolished, and proceeded to arraign the Democracy of this House, as I thought, for infidelity to that pledge.

Why, sir, the gentleman need not resort to a telescopic range of vision to find violators of that pledge, and I admonish him in the future to be a little more discriminative in his charges. I tell him that those with whom he so fondly and lovingly co-operates in contesting this bill are the chiefest transgressors in that respect. The gentleman's address was in certain particulars a strange affair. Only a moment before he took the floor the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] had boldly announced his purpose in substance to violate the very pledge the sanctity of whose obligation my friend in such piercing eloquence sought to uphold; and when my friend took the floor I supposed it was for the purpose of visiting condign consequences upon the head of the intrepid Representative of the blue-grass region of Kentucky.

I say I expected it; everybody expected it, not even excepting my Kentucky friend himself, who I could see (or at least I so fancied) had braced himself to receive the blow. But, oh, most lame and impotent conclusion! Not at the real foe; not at the confessed violators of this pledge, who stood before him expectant and, I thought, defiant, did the gentleman hurl his denunciation. And why not? There were these inquisitors confronting him, eye to eye and foot to foot, confessing by their official action their contemptuous disregard of this same pledge. There were the gentlemen twain from Kentucky and Arkansas, Messrs. BRECKINRIDGE, of historic name; also the chiefest of all of them, him from Illinois [Mr. MORRISON]; there were all of the Democratic members of the Ways and Means Committee, whose duty it was, according to the view of the gentleman from Virginia, to bring in a bill redeeming this pledge and abolishing this hateful system; and there was their record—a record of bold and avowed denial of even the existence of any such a pledge, a record which ignores the very existence of war taxes, of which Virginia complains so loudly and so unceasingly.

And yet, sir, with this state of facts staring him in the face, my able and distinguished friend passes these arch-offenders by without a hint or word of reprobation, and, with this grand theme inviting his unmatched abilities, turns aside and lashes himself into an oratorical fury over a harmless attempt to prevent the imposition of impure grease upon the public under the "counterfeit presentment" of butter.

Sir, if my friend lives a century he will never have a grander opportunity to serve the cause which he loves, and I am quite certain he will never again so deplorably neglect it. Why did he stay his hand? Did he want a cause? Never was a loftier. It was a cause, arguing from his standpoint, of a party betrayed in the house of its friends; a party being lured by a mistaken or treacherous leadership to a course of infidelity which would destroy us in the confidence of the people.

It was a cause of a people—especially those of Virginia and the South—harried to madness by swarms of spies, bedeviled by domiciliary intrusion, and vexed almost to death by inquisitorial surveillance; a people who for years have felt the damned barb and thorn of a tribulation which can know no abatement until this mediæval, un-American, and infernal scheme of internal-revenue taxation is pruned of its offensive features; and these people had selected the gentleman from Virginia from all their hosts as their staunchest defender, as the one invincible champion to sound the war-cry and lead the onset against the harnessed cohorts of those who upheld this system and against maladministration; and with this great emergency upon him he takes the floor and talks about the sanctity of the Constitution and bogus butter!

Mr. Chairman, it was an anti-climax which I do not care to dwell upon. It was as if one finding himself amid the awe-inspiring grandeur and the transcendent glories of St. Peter, should chant, not the Te Deum laudamus but opera bouffe.

Now, sir, the gentleman has offered an amendment in vindication of the pledge spoken of abolishing the internal-revenue tax. Why did he not go before the Ways and Means Committee and prevail by his marvelous persuasive powers on the Democrats composing it to bring in a bill effectuating this purpose.

He may have made the effort for all I know; but if not I will state the reason myself. It was because he must have known that those gentlemen composing the Democrats on that committee are so bent and determined to "reform," as they call it, our revenue after their own peculiar fashion that he had as well "forbid the mountain pines to wag their high tops and make no noise when fretted by the gusts of heaven" as address any such invocation to them. They do not intend to reduce or abolish the internal-revenue tax, because, that being done, it leaves them without adequate excuse to precipitate that malign element of dissention, the tariff, into discussion on the floor of this House.

Mr. Chairman, with no affectation of humility I most sincerely declare that I bow in admiration to the superior powers of my friend, not only upon questions of expediency and leadership, but in all other respects. In the future I shall love to follow his nodding plume to victory. But, sir, to my humble capacity it does seem that, should the present volume of revenue be increased by the amount that will probably be raised by this bill, the necessity for the existence of the internal revenue in its most oppressive features becomes to that extent diminished, and one great obstruction to its abolition is thereby removed.

So when this bill, which I know to be in the interest of honesty and which seeks only to compel fair dealing in trade, which is asked for in thunderous tones by millions of farmers everywhere on this broad continent, and of which we simply invoke decency and fair play to conserve a wholesome industry—when such a bill is presented I propose, first, last, and all the time, to give it my support. [Applause.]

Mr. MCMILLIN. Is the object of this bill to stop the sale? If that is the object where is the warrant in the Constitution?

Mr. HENLEY. I am glad the gentleman has made that suggestion. One of the objects is to seize upon an industry which we consider is undeserving of encouragement, and another is to make that industry assist in contributing to the revenues of this Government.

Mr. MCMILLIN. Does the Government need additional revenue?

Many MEMBERS. Yes, yes.

Mr. HENLEY. Yes; it does, and I am glad the gentleman has made this second suggestion. Many times on this floor gentlemen have said we do not need it. Do we not indeed? Well, sir, if we do not need it we might throw it in the Potomac. But it is not for the gentleman from Tennessee to say that we do not need it. We have debts to pay, navies to build; and it strikes me as being folly to say that any government does not need revenue from a source where it can be gained without detriment or without oppression. It has been asserted here almost ad nauseam that this bill taxes one industry for the benefit of another. Sir, I invite people to seriously consider the second section of this bill.

SEC. 2. That for the purposes of this act certain manufactured substances, certain extracts, and certain mixtures and compounds, including such mixtures and compounds with butter, shall be known and designated as "oleomargarine," namely: All substances heretofore known as oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all mixtures and compounds of oleomargarine, oleo, oleomargarine oil, butterine, lardine, suine, and neutral; all lard extracts and tallow extracts; and all mixtures and compounds of tallow, beef fat, suet, lard, lard oil, vegetable oil, annotto, and other coloring matter, intestinal fat, and offal fat made in imitation or semblance of butter, or calculated or intended to be used as butter or for butter.

From that it is quite clear that this assumption is unsupported by anything contained within the measure. Under its provisions it leaves the trafficker in bogus butter as free to pursue his loathsome calling untaxed as he now is; but if the scoundrel undertakes to impose it upon a people for what it is not, then we nail him under this bill; and this the farmer of this country, in this great emergency and by every means by which public opinion can be formulated and expressed, asks of this Congress; from every State of this Union that lies between the two oceans there comes a prayer for the enactment of this measure with an intensity and a universality seldom, if ever, equaled.

Evidences multiply on every side as "thick as leaves in Vallombrosa" showing this. And I hereby dedicate my best energies to respond to that appeal; and replying to whatever of threat or menace that may be thrown out by the other side in respect to the measure, I hereby declare that to the end that we shall have a fair vote upon the bill I intend, if necessary, to remain in this Hall until my right to be here is terminated by constitutional limitation. [Loud applause.]

Mr. Chairman, one other word. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] struck the key-note of this business this morning. He declared that the dairying industry is one which is diffused throughout the country, disseminated among the masses, the pursuit of numberless people, and therefore was entitled to greater consideration than any occupation in which a large bulk of capital concentrated in the hands of a few persons is employed.

The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. LAWLER] said a while ago in opposition to this bill that there were three or four persons, whom he named, in Chicago engaged in the bogus-butter business who were worth $200,000,000. Sir, the statement does not commend this bill to my favorable regard, but I have no doubt it is true. The opposition is in the interest of a few persons worth $200,000,000. Where are your three or four dairymen worth that sum of money or anything like it?

This measure is in the interest of the farmers of the country. It is in the interest of honesty, and by it we simply say that people shall brand their commodity which they sell honestly, in order that it may show exactly what it purports to be.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] has expired.

Mr. HATCH. I now ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the section under consideration and all amendments thereto may be limited—does the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] desire to speak?

Mr. HAMMOND. I do.

Mr. HATCH. That all debate be limited to five minutes.

Mr. BEACH. I have a substantial amendment to offer, and I desire to be heard upon it.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I will say ten minutes.

Mr. BEACH. If I can be recognized I do not object.

Mr. HAMMOND. I suggest to the gentleman from Missouri that we shall be through the discussion very soon. There is no disposition to occupy time unduly.

Mr. HATCH. Well, I will say fifteen minutes, ten of which can be occupied by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] and five by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH].

Mr. HAMMOND. That will suit me.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that debate on this section and all amendments thereto be limited to fifteen minutes. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. The Chair first recognizes the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND]. Will he give way for a moment to allow the amendment of the gentleman from New York [Mr. BEACH] to be read?

Mr. HAMMOND. Certainly.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out the words beginning with "oleomargarine," in the third line of the fifteenth section, and ending with the word "States," in the sixth line, and insert "shall be forfeited to the United States; and no oleomargarine shall be colored with annotto or any other coloring matter which will give it the appearance of natural butter."

Mr. HAMMOND. Mr. Chairman, it is impossible this House shall vote intelligently if controlled by telegrams from anybody. We are obliged to think for ourselves, because we do not know whether those who advise us are themselves well advised.

It is impossible for gentlemen to vote as Representatives ought to vote under any such threat as the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] makes. We should vote as we believe to be right; and if it should happen our constituency differ with us and choose to relegate us to private position, we can at least go back home with our honor preserved.

So much for that. Now, one remark in reply to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE]. He out of the abundance of his heart spoke the truth as he understood it when he said this was a contest between the Pennsylvania dairy interest and the New York dairy interest and the interest of the farmer in the South who made cotton seed which was pressed into oil.

I say "as he understood it." He votes from a purely selfish standpoint, to crush out one industry for another. But I thank God there are men in this world whose souls are bigger than to be governed simply by selfishness, either for themselves or for their constituents!

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] got away from the issue made between him and myself as to that clause in the Constitution which declares that "to promote the progress of science and useful arts" patents may be granted "for limited times." He undertook to raise a prejudice by speaking against "patent monopolies" and the laws as passed. The law is one thing, the Constitution another. If the law is wrong it ought to be changed. The Constitution was the thing which he attacked, and is the thing which we swear to support.

Mr. Chairman, in the price of every acre of land in this country on the Eastern or Western shore you see the value of the patent rights. What would our Western lands be worth but for improved corn-droppers and corn-shellers, and improved plows, thrashers, and binders? What would they be worth but for the improved machinery which has tunneled our mountains, which has bridged our rivers, which carries our produce to the ocean, and from the Eastern shore to the great world beyond?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. DUNHAM. I yield my time to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HAMMOND. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, let us look at the philosophy of this thing. It is a fact that every dollar of gold which was ever dug cost three; not to the man who dug it out. It is but one who finds it, and he gets rich. But the others who are hunting, the others who are wearing out their hands and eyes in fruitless search are spending their dollars. It was not the man who undertook to find oil in Pittsburgh, but the man who struck it that made a fortune. The world profited by the industry of the searchers for gold, and the world reaps a benefit of the oil from the find of the finder. That they got rich affects not the question.

That grand impulse of selfishness which God has placed in every man for his protection and as a stimulus for his ambition and energy is the mainspring which has led to all the inventions of this world which are worth talking about.

Why is it we outdistance any nation of the earth? It is because we have the best patent laws and patent organization on the face of the earth. Why is it that these very systems denounced as monopolies are utilized by every one of us except that they bring but good? Take this telephone. How many use it simply to save the expense of servants?

The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] said when printing was invented there was no patent office. When the Patent Office was established the printing-press then in existence compared as poorly with the Hoe power-press of to-day as a chip on the ocean compares with the most magnificent steam-vessel which floats a flag. [Applause.]

When the gentleman from Pennsylvania was a boy his neighbors, perhaps himself, lived in a cabin with nothing to hang their coats upon but a peg, and nothing to sit upon but a stool. Under the impulse to inventive talent given by the hope of securing for inventors during a limited time the exclusive benefit of the cogitation of their brains, the homes of the poor and the rich have been made comfortable. And the cottage of the workingman to-day outvies in comforts and luxury the dwellings of the kings of a hundred years ago.

Mr. Chairman, look at the item of wages for a moment. Go back fifty years and compare the wages then paid with the present rates. Take the history of New England recently published and compare the wages of a shoemaker of to-day with what they were then. These mechanical improvements have been developed in every department. Yet shoemakers' wages are doubled and in some departments trebled in fifty years. One man to-day can make three hundred pairs of boots each day by a Yankee machine; but more boots are wanted and bought for little money. I do not care where you go or what you see, it is better and cheaper because of inventions. Inventions are made because they are protected by the Constitution. The thousands and thousands of dollars that are wasted in vain endeavor, the sleepless nights, the toilsome days, all at last crystallized in some man's success, bring a glad fruit to the Patent Office and asks it to make the contract according to constitutional promise. The inventor says, "Give me this for a limited time, and at the end it shall belong to the world." And the world makes by the bargain every time. [Applause.]

MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CRISP having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the President of the United States in writing was communicated to the House by Mr. PRUDEN, one of his secretaries.

The message further announced the approval of House bills of the following titles:

An act (H. R. 5655) granting a pension to Elizabeth B. Bell;

An act (H. R. 607) granting a pension to James E. B. Smith;

An act (H. R. 3287) for the relief of Silas Corzatt;

An act (H. R. 5085) for the relief of Mary Hill; and

An act (H. R. 6661) to provide for closing up the business and paying the expenses of the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims, and for other purposes.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, I think that much of the confusion which has pervaded this debate has been caused by the very defective definition of the word "oleomargarine," as given in the second section of the bill. As we now understand it from the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture this bill is intended not to tax oleomargarine when made and sold as such. It is said to be intended only to tax this substance when made and sold in imitation of butter. Now let us look for a moment at the two articles and compare them, the genuine butter and the counterfeit, with which we are now dealing.

The color of natural butter, when made from the milk of grass-fed cows, is yellow. In the winter season, when cows are fed upon hay and grain, the butter produced from such food is ordinarily of a pale straw-color. In order to give to winter-churned butter its natural color, butter-makers sometimes use a little annotto or the juice of the carrot, by either of which the natural color can be imparted to the butter, and both are very harmless substances. [Applause.]

Now the color of oleomargarine—— [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. MILLIKEN. Mr. Chairman, I rise to a question of order.

There are some of us upon the floor who would be glad to hear the gentleman from New York if we could be permitted to do so. But we can not hear him because of the continued noise. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair must request gentlemen to preserve order upon the floor of the House.

Mr. BEACH. Mr. Chairman, I do not want this interruption to come out of my time; and if I am not permitted to proceed in order I shall have to make a motion to clear the galleries [laughter and applause], for I presume that this continued interruption comes from the galleries, as I do not suppose that gentlemen upon the floor are so lost to the instincts of gentlemen as to refuse me a hearing upon this floor.

The color of oleomargarine is white like that of lard or tallow. In order to sell it it is colored yellow in imitation of butter. When it is thus colored the low-priced article of oleomargarine is sold in the market for the higher-priced article of butter. The whole fraud is made possible simply by the addition of the coloring matter. Now, if you stop the coloring of oleomargarine, if you prohibit the manufacturer from putting yellow into it, or compel him to give it a color of its own, you necessarily stop the fraud, because an inspection of the product by the eye will at once disclose what it is.

Mr. Chairman, if I vote for this bill, and I have said that I would, it will not be because I want to raise a revenue from the tax on oleomargarine. It will not be because I want to build up one industry by tearing down another. It will not be because I want to prevent the sale of an unwholesome product or article of food. But, sir, it will be simply and solely to stop the circulation of a counterfeit, whereby the people are defrauded. By stopping the deception in the sale we indirectly protect the farmer and the dairyman, but the direct object of our legislation is to protect the interests of the whole people, all who buy or use butter; and where is there a person who does not use it? In the whole course of my life I have never met but two persons who did not eat butter.

I therefore, Mr. Chairman, regard this bill the same as I do our laws against false weights and measures; the same as our laws against adulterating foods and drugs; the same as our laws prohibiting the simulation of trade-marks. It is true this bill carries a tax along with it, but the tax is not imposed for revenue, but for regulation. Revenue is not the object but the incident of this legislation.

Now, sir, the States having tried to regulate this matter but having tried in vain, the people appeal to Congress to put the whole matter under the supervision of the Internal Revenue Bureau, which has the machinery already in existence and in good working order to control it.

But, Mr. Chairman, I do not believe this bill if it is enacted into law will accomplish its purpose. What I want, and what I think the farmers of this country want, is to prevent the deception which is practiced in the sale of this stuff. As soon as that is done no more of it will be manufactured, for the people do not want it and will not buy it.

This bill in its present shape will not stop the deception. Aside from that the bill contains what to me is a very odious feature. It legalizes a fraud. The unwritten law condemns all traffic in spurious goods. This bill throws the panoply of the law around oleomargarine, which is a spurious article, and declares that it may be lawfully sold in the market so long as the tax has been paid.

You may put on a tax of 20 cents a pound if you please, and I do not believe it will stop the fraud. I am free to say I will vote for a tax of 20 cents a pound more cheerfully than I will for 10, because from my standpoint a tax of 20 cents will be more apt to regulate the sale than a tax of 10 will.

But if this bill can be amended so as to prohibit the manufacturer from coloring it yellow in imitation of butter, or, what is still better, compel him to give it a distinctive color of its own, then I am willing to let it go free of all tax whatsoever.

There is no use in talking about branding it. It has been tried and found wanting. No amount of branding will prevent the retailer from swindling his customers, nor stop the keepers of hotels, restaurants, and boarding-houses from palming the vile stuff off on their customers. We have got to make the manufacturers keep the yellow out or put some other color in; and that is the object of my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Debate on this section and the amendments thereto is exhausted. The Clerk will report the pending amendment.

The Clerk read the pending amendment, proposed by Mr. BEACH, as follows:

Strike out the words beginning with "oleomargarine," in the third line of the fifteenth section, and ending with the word "States," in the sixth line, and insert as follows:

"Shall be forfeited to the United States, and no oleomargarine shall be colored with annotto or any other coloring matter which will give it the appearance of natural butter."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 1, after the word "oleomargarine," insert the following:
"Which contains ingredients deleterious to the public health."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The Clerk read section 16, as follows:

SEC. 16. That oleomargarine may be removed from the place of manufacture for export to a foreign country without payment of tax or affixing stamps thereto, under such regulations and the filing of such bonds and other security as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may prescribe. Every person who shall export oleomargarine shall brand upon every tub, firkin, or other package containing such article the word "oleomargarine," in plain Roman letters not less than one-half inch square.

Mr. STRUBLE addressed the Chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has been recognized.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent of the committee that all debate upon this and the remaining sections of the bill may be closed at 5 o'clock. I couple this request with the statement that an amendment which will be offered to the nineteenth section, striking out the words "one-half of such fine or penalty, when paid, to go to the informer," shall be voted on in the House by a yea-and-nay vote.

Mr. HISCOCK. I suggest that the gentleman should say at ten minutes before 5 o'clock, so as to allow time for the report to be made to the House.

Mr. HATCH. The effect would be that the committee shall rise and report the bill and amendment at 5, or ten minutes before 5 o'clock. Whatever the action of the committee may be on the amendment I have indicated, I will offer the amendment myself in the House, and a yea-and-nay vote on it will be had.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. May I ask the gentleman from Missouri whether he is in favor of striking out that portion of the nineteenth section?

Mr. HATCH. I am making no statement as to my own position, but I say I will give to the House the fairest opportunity of expressing its opinion upon this by a yea-and-nay vote, whether the amendment is lost or not in the committee.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is it proposed to take a yea-and-nay vote this evening?

Mr. HATCH. Not at all. It is proposed to go through with the bill and report it this evening and commence voting in the House to-morrow morning.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I have perhaps more objection to the nineteenth section than to any other feature of the bill. If the gentleman from Missouri desires and is willing in good faith to have that stricken out in the House, why not allow it to be stricken out now?

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman from West Virginia must see that I have no right to speak for the three hundred and twenty-five members of this House. I can not say what the vote of a majority will be. It is a question that has only been submitted to one committee, and what I propose is to give to the members of the House the fairest and fullest opportunity of expressing themselves in regard to that section.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I did not ask the gentleman to speak for the House; I only asked him to speak for himself. If he will say that when this measure comes up before the House he will in good faith ask the House to strike out that section then there can be no objection to the proposition. But I want to call the attention of the House to this fact, that after a number of years of experience upon this question of informers——

Mr. HATCH. I hope the gentleman will not argue the question until we get to the section. The effect of it would be to get up a discussion. My desire is to have the request I made submitted to the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that this bill may be reported to the House this day at ten minutes before 5 o'clock——

Mr. MORRISON. Does the gentleman propose to report it to the House without a vote in the committee?

Mr. HATCH. We will take a vote in the committee, of course.

Mr. BEACH. I ask the gentleman whether this may not preclude the opportunity of offering substantial amendments or a substitute?

Mr. HATCH. You can offer those at the proper time, of course.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will state the request. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the bill and amendments be reported to the House this afternoon at ten minutes before 5 o'clock with the understanding that in the House he will move to strike out the portion of the nineteenth section which he has indicated——

Mr. HATCH. Provided, of course, that the amendment is defeated in the committee. The amendment may be carried by a vote of the committee, and in that event it, of course, comes up in the House for action without any agreement. But I say that if the committee should vote down the amendment to strike out that portion of the nineteenth section, notwithstanding that vote in the committee I shall move the amendment myself in the House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I wish to ask the gentleman whether his motion will allow the discussion of the nineteenth section.

Mr. HATCH. The discussion will continue here in Committee of the Whole between now and ten minutes before 5 o'clock.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Unless the gentleman will agree to strike out the nineteenth section I shall object.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]?

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I object.

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out section 16. I do not expect to ask a vote upon this motion, but have made the motion simply for the purpose of obtaining the floor in order to give expression to my views upon the section.

So far I have voted with the Committee on Agriculture, I believe, upon every proposition that has been submitted to vote, and shall continue to vote with that committee upon the remaining sections of the bill and to support the bill when put upon its final passage.

There are some features about it, however, I would prefer to see changed if such changes could have been made without the effect so common in contests as prolonged and earnest as this, of endangering final success of the measure.

The opponents of the bill have fought it long and ably, and they and we who are friendly to it know very well that in such a contest it is dangerous to permit the line of battle to be broken at any point, and that it is better, as a question of parliamentary struggle, to preserve the integrity of the bill as nearly as possible. Therefore I have, with other friends of the measure, stood by the committee, and shall continue loyal to the end; but, in my judgment, section 16 is not a wise one, and if it can be dispensed with and not leave the bill vulnerable to constitutional objection, it should be stricken out.

It is conceded now by the friends of the bill that in this act there is a distinction to be made between the kind of oleomargarine that may be manufactured to imitate butter and to take the place of butter and the other quality of oleomargarine which may be manufactured under its own name and sold without being taxed.

I confess that, to my mind, section 2 is not as clear upon this point as I think it ought to be, and I do not wonder that many gentlemen have been led to entertain a different opinion with respect to the construction of this section from that entertained by the friends of the bill. But it is now conceded that there are two kinds of oleomargarine—one to be taxed, the other not to be taxed.

Now section 16 proposes that all oleomargarine, whether made in imitation of butter and to be sold as or for butter, or made and sold under its own name, shall, when the purpose is to ship it from the country, be allowed to go out scot-free. I maintain, as I maintained the other day, that that is wrong. This is a radical bill. So much we all will concede, whether we are favorable to it or not. It is a radical bill which I believe to be fully justified by the exigencies at present existing in this country, and I am heartily in favor of it.

But, sir, if we are to tax oleomargarine when it is made and sold to be used as butter, I contend that we ought to tax every pound of it, whether it is to be consumed here or shipped abroad, if there is nothing in the Constitution prohibiting such taxation. For my part, I not only desire the markets of this country for the products of the farm, but I think that upon this question, as upon every other, we should so legislate that we may obtain as fully as possible the privileges of foreign markets. Therefore it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that in section 16 of this bill there is an advantage given to the manufacturers of oleomargarine which will result in displacing in the foreign markets the American butter that might otherwise go there. I showed the other day in my remarks, by reference to statistics, that whereas in 1875 we shipped less than $2,000,000 worth of butter, the quantity continued to augment until in 1880 we sold over $6,000,000 worth, but that in 1885 the value of the butter exportation had decreased to something over $3,000,000, while the exportation of oleomargarine increased from $70,000 in 1878 to nearly $4,500,000 in 1885.

What does this mean? It means that the entire exportation of butter from this country will soon be prevented if oleomargarine, whether as butter or oleomargarine, is allowed to go out of this country free; because, no matter under what name shipped, there can be no doubt that it will eventually be sold as and for butter. I say, therefore, let us tax every pound of it, whether it is made and sold in imitation of butter or not, and whether it remains in this country or goes abroad. Now, Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw my motion.

There was no objection.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I now renew the request which I made a while ago. I have had an explanation from the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON], and if the House will hear him for a moment I have no doubt an agreement can be reached.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. Mr. Chairman, waiving the objections I entertain to previous provisions of this bill, and addressing myself to the nineteenth section, I simply desire to say that perhaps the most objectionable feature in the bill is included in the third line of that section, in these words: "One-half of such fine or penalty when paid to go to the informer." I want to say to the House now that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has agreed that when we come to a vote in the House we may have a yea-and-nay vote on the question of striking out those words.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That being the case, I withdraw my objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]?

Mr. HAMMOND (to Mr. HATCH). That will not prevent a motion ad interim on any amendment?

Mr. HATCH. Not at all.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there further objection to the request?

Mr. LOWRY. In order that the matter may be fully understood——

Mr. HATCH. I have stated it very fully, and I hope the gentleman will not interpose any objection or delay.

Mr. LOWRY. In order that it may be fully understood, I desire to ask the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] if it is his purpose to strike out the words in the second section, "calculated or intended to be used as butter?"

Mr. HATCH. If the gentleman will consult the RECORD he will find that, in connection with a proposition offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG], I stated that it was my purpose to move to amend that section.

There was no objection, and the request of Mr. HATCH was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the proposition of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH]? The Chair hears none; and it is so ordered.

Mr. PLUMB. I move pro forma to amend the section by striking out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in so far as this bill protects the dairy interests of the country against the unjust and unfair competition of a counterfeit article I am heartily in favor of it. A branch of our great agricultural industry which gives employment to so much of capital and labor, owned and managed by a class as worthy and intelligent as is the dairy interests, is entitled to and shall receive my earnest support.

The district I have the honor to represent here is pre-eminently agricultural, and in many of its towns the dairy has come to be of such importance to profitable farming that any injury unjustly inflicted upon it, or any outrage attempted, naturally arouses a feeling of resentment that all will justify.

On this question the dairymen of my district have spoken, and have stated with great clearness what they ask for. This is their language:

Desiring to be relieved from the dishonest competition of oleomargarine and butterine as now sold, we ask you to use your influence and to vote for the bill now in the hands of the Committee on Agriculture, placing the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under control of the Internal Revenue Department and compelling the manufacturers and dealers to sell them for what they are.

The dairy interest asks to be relieved from dishonest competition of oleomargarine and butterine as now sold. That, sir, is a reasonable request, and if legislation can grant the relief sought—and I believe it can—it should not be withheld. These petitioners are intelligent, and they not only know what they want, but they know what kind of legislation will be effective, and that is, to place the manufacture and sale of all imitations of butter under the control of the Internal Revenue Department. Is that an improper request? That it is entirely constitutional to place it there is, in my opinion, beyond question.

But for what purpose does the dairyman seek to use the machinery of our internal-revenue system? Let their own language answer. It is "to compel the manufacturers and dealers" of oleomargarine and butterine "to sell them for what they are." This is a just demand, and if there be any good reason for refusing it I fail to see it.

Mr. Chairman, the makers of butter do not seek to destroy the manufacture or sale of oleomargarine or butterine, nor any other imitation of the genuine article. These dairymen are too intelligent to think for one moment that their own interests could possibly be safe if a policy of legislating any legitimate industry out of existence should, under any pretext whatsoever, be inaugurated; and, sir, I do not for one moment suppose that they desire anything more than the language of their request implies. Now, sir, what does this bill propose? Its provisions are such as to fairly meet the demands of the butter-makers of my district. But the bill goes further than they ask; it not only places the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine and all imitations of butter under the control of the Internal Revenue Department, and compels them to be made and sold for what they actually are, to the end that the dairy interests may be relieved from fraudulent and dishonest competition, but the excessive tax proposed by the bill means an absolute crushing out of the manufacture of oleomargarine. Deny it as you will, disguise it as you may, this is the intent and purpose of the tax of 10 cents per pound imposed by this bill on oleomargarine. This the dairymen do not ask, but this the bill seeks to do.

Sir, I have had a long acquaintance with dairymen, and I know them well enough to say that they would scorn to ask Congress to give them any advantage over any legitimate industry. All they ask is that their product, good, sweet butter, may not be subjected to the disadvantage of a pretended butter which they claim is being palmed off upon the consumer in the name of butter, and which, being produced at a less cost than real butter can be, is working a serious injury to them.

They are willing the public shall use for food anything they may prefer, but they protest against fraud.

If it were true, as is charged, that oleomargarine and butterine are poisonous or unwholesome as an article of diet, if their use were destructive to the public health, a good and sufficient reason would thereby be furnished for prohibitive legislation, and there should be no hesitation or delay in adopting this excessive tax or any other required provision to accomplish the end. But if this be a fact, where is the proof of it? Where has one man, woman, or child died or been made ill by using these articles?

For my own part, Mr. Chairman, I am decidedly in favor of having my bread buttered on both sides with the genuine old-fashioned article; no oleomargarine on mine, so far as I now know; but, sir, others may have such taste, or be so situated that they would purchase and eat the imitation article, knowing just what it is; and if there be such, why should we so legislate as to deprive them of the benefit of such an article of food at a price as low as it can be afforded, instead of increasing, as the heavy tax must, the cost thereof 10 cents per pound? This excessive tax is the objectionable, and I must say the destructive, feature of this bill. Let it be reduced to 3 cents per pound, which will be sufficient to pay more than the cost of causing oleomargarine to be sold for what it is, which is all that is openly asked for, and I for one will gladly vote for the bill.

Mr. Chairman, if my limited time would permit I would endeavor to point out the grave objections that present themselves to such legislation as the excessive tax feature of this bill proposes; but, sir, the field is too broad to admit of more than an allusion to some of them in a very general way.

The policy of the Government on all economic questions should be to secure to all people of every section and of every occupation freedom to pursue any and every legitimate industry relieved from legislative restriction as well as from the burden of a tax. The necessities of the war furnished justification for taxing almost everything, but now whisky and tobacco alone remain as bearers of these burdens, and were it not for the conviction, in which public sentiment with great unanimity joins, that the personal use of both these articles might be entirely dispensed with without injury to any one, no internal-revenue tax would be in existence to-day.

As one of the grand results of crushing the rebellion, no greater benefit of a commercial sort has been secured to the people of the United States than this absolute freedom of trade between all sections and the absolute freedom of pursuit by all persons. Protection to all against foreign competition and free trade with untaxed industries among ourselves should be the motto. When we invoke the aid of our existing internal-revenue system to protect one industry against a practical fraud attempted by another we have gone far enough, and we should hesitate before going further. Reduce the tax to 3 cents per pound and pass the bill. That done and the dairyman will get all that he asks for, no legitimate industry will be destroyed, and if a wholesome article of food can be furnished to those who desire to use it, no burdensome tax will be laid on the consumer. [Applause.]

[During the delivery of the foregoing remarks, when five minutes had expired, Mr. HOPKINS obtained the floor, and yielded his time to Mr. PLUMB, who then concluded.]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 16 by striking out the last sentence, which reads as follows: "Every person who shall export oleomargarine shall brand upon every tub, firkin, or other package containing such article the word 'oleomargarine,' in plain Roman letters not less than one-half inch square."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, my object in offering this amendment is to remove as far as possible all restrictions upon exports. Perhaps no proposition brought before the House has been more extreme than the one presented by my esteemed friend from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] a moment ago, to maintain the tax upon this article regardless of its consumption whether at home or abroad, in order to prevent its competing with genuine butter in the markets of Europe. I would ask my friend to read carefully the fifth clause of section 9 of Article I of the Constitution:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That means exported from any State into another State.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It does not say only "exported from any State into another State." It says "exported from any State." We all know it refers to exports from any State in this country to another country. I do not mean to say that that is all it means; but that is the point at issue. But I do not wish to enter into an argument now as to the balance of the scope of the clause. I ask the gentleman to consider and construe that provision. The whole Union has construed it one way up to this time. This seems to be the day of strange things, and no man seems to have any fixed guides or convictions.

I wish now to call attention to one or two points that were made by my distinguished friend from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN], who, I regret to see, is not in his seat. The gentleman, as usual, presented about the best appearance for the case he was defending of which it was susceptible. One thing against which he inveighs is "patented" monopolies. Sir, there are many monopolies, such as subsidized industries and subsidized railroads, and fraudulent aggrandizement of the public lands, and fraudulent and other aggrandizement of the functions of public carriers, &c., all contrary to the spirit of justice and of the Constitution, and much of it, by perversions of trust powers here reposed, contrary to the very letter of the Constitution. Here is another effort, and in an unprecedented and in the most dangerous and abominable manner, to subsidize an industry. To this and to all such things I am firmly opposed.

Pardon me, sir, if I say it; but it seems as if demagogism is in the air. I can not believe that so low an estimate as gentlemen seem to be placing upon the people is a just estimate. Constitutions and systems must be at last an insufficient guarantee of liberty and justice. The people must evidently be of themselves essentially capable of wise self-government. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] takes a novel position when he inveighs against "patented" monopolies. The Constitution says that Congress shall have power—

To promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries.

No man denies the constitutionality of the patent laws. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HOLMAN] is the first one I have ever heard of who says that this incentive to genius and guarantee for "limited times" of the enjoyment of a man's own writings and discoveries has not proved of incalculable benefit to our country or that it is not just within itself. But, sir, that is not the worst of it. The gentleman favors this bill because it taxes a patented product.

I have before me copies from the Patent Office of not less than 100 of these patents. The number prevents the possibility of a monopoly. The process is so simple that it can be conducted in every kitchen in the country. But suppose there is some special benefit in a lawful patent. Was not the patent issued in good faith? Here is the enormity. This is the first time I ever heard a proposition to grant a patent to a citizen and then turn around and tax his patent out of existence. That mode of treatment is one which can never become popular with a fair-dealing legislative body. If the law is unwise, repeal it. If the idea or invention is indispensable to the people at cheaper prices than those current, appraise it, buy it, and throw it open to the world. But do not let us approve the idea of an insidious and treacherous breach of contract.

Now, the other point made by my distinguished friend is that you should take hold of this matter and treat it as a fraud; in other words, undertake to deal with it by an exercise of the police power. And the gentleman inveighed with considerable force and effect upon the fraudulent character of the commodity now under consideration. Allow me to read from the decision of the Supreme Court, which I cited this morning in full, one short paragraph bearing especially upon this particular point.

This is the unanimous deliverance of the Supreme Court in 1869 in the case of the United States vs. Dewitt (9 Wallace), commonly called the Coal-oil Case. The court says:

> As a police regulation, relating exclusively to the internal trade of the States, it can only have effect where the legislative authority of Congress excludes territorially all State legislation, as, for example, in the District of Columbia. Within State limits it can have no constitutional operation. This has been so frequently declared by this court, results so obviously from the terms of the Constitution, and has been so fully explained and supported on former occasions, that we think it unnecessary to enter again upon the discussion.

Sir, as a young member of the grand army of Democracy I must confess to having been somewhat amazed at seeing such apparent heresy preached by one of the old leaders of the party; and I would have my friend, when he makes a special plea for the price of the butter of the small farmers of his community, remember that the very measure by which he proposes to put up the price of butter will also put down the price of the fat of every stalled ox that is sold by his constituents. In reducing the price of the surplus fat of cattle it reduces the price of every head of cattle. We know that in order to make the more edible portions of beef palatable, so as to bring a high price, the beef must be fattened to a high degree. If the gentleman should seek to strike down an industry that utilizes the surplus fat upon the beef he will find he "can not eat his cake and keep it too."

Sir, what has been the effect of this industry upon beef? Let me cite again the average prices for a series of years past of cows alone: In 1879, $21.73; in 1880, $23.27; in 1881, $23.95; in 1882, $25.89; in 1883, $30.21; in 1884, $31.37.

These figures, which are as late as can be obtained, show that as the result of being able to utilize all parts of beef-cattle in this country the price has been brought some $10 per head higher. Now cut off the chance to use the surplus fat of your beeves, and what you gain on your butter you lose in the price of your beef-cattle. Yet this will not make the remaining salable part of the beef any lower to the consumer.

Mr. Chairman, I have fought this bill the best I could. The House is determined to pass it, and the end is near at hand. I can only trust that it will meet at the hands of the Senate or of the Executive the fate it well deserves. I yield the balance of my time back to the Chair.

Mr. DUNHAM. Occasionally during this debate, Mr. Chairman, I have heard members discuss the constitutional question, but after listening to the speech of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] on this side of the House in which he proposed to draw us all into the support of the bill and announced his determination to follow the Committee on Agriculture line by line and section by section, from the blind adherence which he offered to give to the Democratic committee of this House, and in connection with the speeches of other members, I feel convinced that the Constitution has had nothing whatever to do with this bill—or the case, as the gentleman near me suggests. [Laughter.]

Constitutional or not constitutional, it is on the programme for this bill to pass the House. It makes no difference to the men who are here. They care nothing about that instrument just at present. Perhaps before the courts of the country that question may be discussed; and they are willing, to accomplish their present purposes, to leave it to be settled by the judiciary. For myself, I am here to say I do not differ with them very much on that subject, but lawyers should be consistent, and not give their support to measures that their legal education teaches them to be outside of lawful authority.

As for the bill itself, I claim it is dishonest in its intentions, dishonest in its wording, and dishonest in its conception. The principle of the bill, as announced here, with a few exceptions, is to raise revenue. I have heard some members admit squarely and honestly that their object was to tax oleomargarine out of existence. Now, I say the members of the House who have taken that position have honestly stated their real motives; and the man who says here the object of this bill is revenue, I doubt very much if he means really what he says. The tendency of Congress is to reduce the revenue. No one will deny this. I understand there are members who would rather not vote on this bill either way, some on constitutional grounds, some because they look upon such measures as dangerous in their tendency, and others because forcing commercial values by law is contrary to the spirit of the nineteenth century; but, representing farming constituencies, and believing or fearing future elections depend on the votes they give, they propose to vote for this bill, constitutional or not, right or wrong, honest or not. [Laughter.]

Soon after this bill came up for discussion I stated that its real and true object was to enable the farmers to get a higher price for their butter. Now, I am willing they should get a good price. I do not object to it; and if they came in here and presented a bill which said what it meant perhaps I might have supported it then. But when you come here with a fraud on its face, with a deceit from beginning to end, when you come here with an intention to strike down one interest for the purpose of building up another, I say to you, my Republican friends, that is not the true protective doctrine. We believe on this side of the House in protecting the industries of this country against foreign competitors. We believe in protecting American labor against the labor of Europe. That is the true doctrine; that is the theory of the Republican party. A few gentlemen on the other side of the House do not agree with us; still it is the correct theory and the only safe one for Republican members to follow.

It is not wise or just to attempt to strike down one interest in America in order to build up another. You propose to advance the price of butter as a result of legislation. It reminds me that a bunch of Congressmen at one time during the war by a solemn act of Congress prohibited trading in gold, and the next day everybody was buying and selling currency. The people quietly smiled, and the "men of wisdom" concluded their "tinkering" with commercial articles was a failure.

In this butter engineering you may be partially successful for six months. You may go on the political stump and tell the farmers "we have taxed your rival to death, and now you are sure of good prices. You that own one cow buy another and own two; you that now delight in ten cows buy ten more and become the owner of twenty. The oleomargarine factories are closed and good prices are yours."

It might be well for you gentlemen in your remarks to add, "Do not make haste to be rich;" but you will not do that, because it would carry with it a doubt in your own minds as to the success of your legislative action.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. I will take the floor and yield my time to my colleague.

Mr. DUNHAM. As a natural result of this bill the tendency throughout the country at first will be higher prices for butter, but in a year the price will fall simply from overproduction. The farmers when they get time to consider this matter and see what the result of this thing will be will demand of you an explanation for depression, and you lawyers will fly to commercial men and ask reasons. They will tell you to let the commerce of the nation alone.

Markets can not be regulated by law, and any attempt to do so is sure to bring disaster somewhere. It is often the case that prices of grain, for instance, advance in anticipation of some damage to growing crops; then when the damage really comes the price tumbles. Why? Because everybody is loaded and prepared for it, and who will the holders sell to? Let the farmers think you have acted wisely in their interest, but I greatly fear one year hence will see them suffering under lower prices for their butter than they obtain to-day.

You forget the fact, my friends, that while there are seven millions of farmers, including their wives and children, in this country, there are also many more millions of working people who do not make butter but who buy and consume it. Grant all rights to farmers, and yet others' feelings and pockets are to be consulted. Be honest and square, gentlemen, with all classes.

Now I concede that perhaps not a workingman in this country cares to eat this oleomargarine, or at any rate if he buys it he wants to buy it for what it really is, and as I claim he ought to do; but I do say, and I defy any man to contradict its truth, that the laboring men, the consumers of products in this country, are willing that oleomargarine shall be continued to be manufactured; and why? Simply because it will keep down the price of butter.

Now I propose to be honest about that, Mr. Chairman, and will say that the laboring man naturally desires to keep down the price of his food products, and butter is one of them. It is a proper and natural desire on his part, and I admit that this product, oleomargarine, aids him in his desire; but it should be branded and sold for what it is. I claim that the men who live in my district and manufacture this product are willing to manufacture and brand and mark it in every way to show what it is; that is what they are now doing; and your bill does not affect them in that respect in the least. What then is the objection?

We do object to this tax that you propose to put upon the product. I object to it in the name of the men who manufacture it; I object to it in the name of the 250,000 people who reside in my district, not butter-makers but butter-consumers, who desire to buy butter at 25 cents a pound, as now, rather than to be forced to pay 40 or 50 cents a pound, as was the case one, two, three, or five years ago. Remember that 25 cents to-day is equal to 40 cents to the farmer ten years ago. I ask the House then to consider carefully the provisions of the bill. You have commenced, by this, the inauguration of a species of legislation for which the day will come when you will be sorry. There is no telling what industry will come here next and demand the wiping out of another industry which is perhaps injuring its prosperity.

Mr. BAYNE. But you stated that it would make butter cheaper, did you not?

Mr. DUNHAM. I did say so, that such will be the ultimate effect of it, but not the immediate effect. I do say that it is wrong to strike down one industry for the sake of trying to build up another. You can not honestly deny this proposition. You can not possibly have more sympathy and respect for farmers than I have. You believe your course now is for their good. I believe its final end will be a losing one in the finances of farmers.

I say it is wrong for you gentlemen here, representing as you claim the farming community, to do what you can to temporarily benefit them, but really to do that which in the end will result in their injury, and perhaps in the financial ruin of many of them.

Time determines all things. No farmer shall ever suffer by my vote. No laboring man shall lay the charge at my door that the cost of the necessaries of life for himself, wife, and children were advanced by legislation by any vote of mine.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. HENDERSON, of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I did not intend to participate in the discussion of this bill, and do not now propose to occupy the attention of the committee but for the few minutes allowed me under the rules.

While I have uniformly voted with the friends of this bill and with the Committee on Agriculture, which reported the same to the House, yet I confess that I have had some doubts as to the propriety of some of the provisions contained in it. I go as far as my colleague [Mr. DUNHAM], who has just taken his seat, in denouncing any system of legislation which discriminates in favor of any one industry of this country as against another. I would not vote for any bill which had for its purpose the building up of one industry at the expense of another, no matter what that industry might be. Nor would I vote for any bill which in my judgment would have that effect. But I say to my colleague from Chicago [Mr. DUNHAM] that while I am, like himself, utterly opposed to fraud, I do not see the fraud in this bill of which he speaks, but think I can see the fraud which the bill proposes to protect the people of this country against.

Mr. Chairman, if there is any one thing more than another in which I would like to see effective legislation in this country by the State and by the General Government, where it can be constitutionally done, it would be legislation against the adulteration of human food. And I would extend it to fraud and deception in the selling of any article of food for domestic consumption for any thing else than what it really is, so that people may know what they are purchasing and what they are eating. If people want to eat oleomargarine they should be permitted to do so, but they should know what they are eating.

Now, my colleague from Chicago [Mr. LAWLER] has acknowledged here that he has eaten oleomargarine. I wish to say that I have never eaten any to my personal knowledge; and yet I am not certain but that I have eaten much of it under the impression that it was very bad butter. [Laughter.] I know that there is good butter and bad butter; but the object of this bill, as I understand it is to prevent the manufacture of an article in imitation or in resemblance of butter and the selling of it to the consumer as butter. I believe honestly that of the 200,000,000 of pounds of oleomargarine which it has been said here are manufactured and sold in this country, a very small percentage of it has been sold as oleomargarine. The great bulk of it has been sold for butter to the consumer. And that is the wrong which one industry inflicts upon another, and which this bill seeks to prevent.

Now, sir, I was going to say that I was not in favor of all the provisions of this bill. I have thought the tax provided for in the bill too high. I, myself, would only favor a sufficient tax to pay the expenses of regulating and inspecting these oleomargarine manufactories; and it seems to me that would be a sufficient tax. But if the construction now put upon the bill be the true one, and I am inclined to think it is, and the object is not to tax all oleomargarine, but only that which is manufactured as an imitation of butter, then I do not care, Mr. Chairman, how high the tax may be, even if it be 20 or 25 cents a pound.

If gentlemen of the committee will examine the second section of this bill, and I have examined it to-day with some care in connection with what I understand to be proposed amendments to the section, they will see that oleomargarine is defined here in this bill to be that which is made in imitation or semblance of butter, and which as such imitation or semblance of butter is to be sold for butter. It is this imitation or semblance of butter, this fraud and deception, which is to be taxed, as it now occurs to me, and this I am heartily in favor of.

While much has been said here about the men who are interested in oleomargarine factories, I know there is a great deal of interest on both sides of this question, and I do not see much difference in the influences that seem to be brought to bear here, whether they are on the one side or on the other. But, Mr. Chairman, I believe oleomargarine has been immensely profitable to the manufacturers of it in this country; that they have made immense sums of money out of its manufacture, and this has been done by palming it off on the public as an article which it is not. It has been sold for butter when it is inferior to any good quality of butter, and to the injury of an industry in which thousands of people all over the country are interested, and I believe such deception and fraud should, if possible, be prevented.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and the Speaker having taken the chair, a message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, informed the House that the Senate insisted on its amendments nonconcurred in by the House of Representatives to the bill (H. R. 6397) making appropriations to provide for the expenses of the government of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, agreed to the conference requested by the House, and had appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. COCKRELL as managers of the conference on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that the committee had examined and found duly enrolled a bill of the following title; when the Speaker signed the same:

A bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, and ordered to lie on the table, and be printed:

To the House of Representatives:

In compliance with the request of the House of Representatives of this date, I return herewith House bill No. 6391, entitled "An act to authorize the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company to construct and operate a railway through the Indian Territory, and for other purposes."

GROVER CLEVELAND.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 2, 1886.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The Committee of the Whole resumed its session.

Mr. HATCH. I ask unanimous consent that all debate upon the pending section and amendments thereto may be closed, that there may be an opportunity of having the other sections read.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend section 16 by striking out the last sentence, namely, these words: "Every person who shall export oleomargarine shall brand upon every tub, firkin, or other package containing such article the word 'oleomargarine,' in plain Roman letters not less than one-half inch square."

The amendment was disagreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the remaining sections of the bill will be read.

The Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and read section 19, as follows:

SEC. 19. That all fines, penalties, and forfeitures imposed by this act may be recovered in any court of competent jurisdiction, one-half of such fine or penalty, when paid, to go to the informer.

Mr. MCMILLIN. I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Section 19, as the Chair is informed, is one on which a number of gentlemen desire to be heard. The Chair, therefore, requested the Clerk to read the sections in their order until that section was reached. Before doing so the Chair had recognized the gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER], who is now entitled to the floor.

Mr. BAYNE. I ask unanimous consent that the bill be read through and that we may then recur to the nineteenth section.

Mr. BRUMM. I object.

Mr. HATCH. Several members have asked me a question which I desire to answer in the presence of the committee that there may be no misunderstanding about this, as there are some members who have calls to go somewhere else and want to leave the Hall. The proposition was made that all debate under the five-minute rule should be considered closed at ten minutes before 5 o'clock, and that the bill should then be reported, and the agreement was that the bill and all these amendments would come up as the first business in order to morrow morning after the morning hour——

Mr. SCOTT. In committee?

Mr. HATCH. In the House. I can not ask the committee to have the previous question considered as ordered, because that would cut off the opportunity to carry out the agreement we made to offer the amendments in the House. Therefore I want it understood the bill and all amendments will be reported and taken up in the House after the morning hour. Will the Chair please submit the question, that there may be no misunderstanding?

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection the arrangement will be made as indicated by the gentleman from Missouri.

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. BAKER] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. BAKER. I move to strike out the last clause of the nineteenth section; and I desire, Mr. Chairman, to submit two or three observations on the bill explanatory of my own position, because so many arguments have been brought forward here by gentlemen upon this subject that it seems to me we overlook two or three very important questions in the consideration of this bill.

In the first place this legislation comes here somewhat in consequence of the action of the manufacturers in the several States upon this very important matter. Recurring for a moment to the history of the legislation in the different States, let me say that in my own State year after year legislation has been attempted to regulate the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine. It has been uniformly resisted by the same influences and the same arguments that have been offered here upon this floor. Efforts to investigate the manufacture and sale of this article have been met with the argument that this stuff is pure, that it is healthful, that it is a proper substitute for butter, and may with safety be placed upon the tables of and consumed by the people. After investigation in my own State on two or three occasions acts have been passed to regulate its manufacture and to compel its being marked so that it may be sold as what it is.

Mr. Chairman, the legislation brought forward and passed in my own State, passed, as I have said, against strenuous opposition, has on two occasions been overthrown by the action of the court of appeals, and it has utterly failed—all efforts have failed—to regulate the manufacture of this article, in consequence of the inability of the State Legislature to throw around it the safe-guards proposed by this bill. This opposition to the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine has grown up simply because the manufacturers have refused to sell the article for what it is. They have continually practiced deception and fraud upon the consumer, and it is for that reason that my State and every other agricultural State will hail with delight the passage of this bill. I believe such legislation would have been unnecessary if the dealers had been honest with consumers, and my purpose in making these remarks is simply to explain that I vote for this bill in order to enable consumers to know, when they buy butter, that they are getting butter, and to prevent the continuance of the deceit and fraud that have characterized the manufacture and sale of this article during several years past. Incidentally, this law will produce revenue; incidentally it will benefit the dairy interests of the country, and these are objects devoutly to be desired. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, while believing that the tax proposed to be assessed is, perhaps, too high, I trust that, when it shall be fixed at such a figure as will guarantee the sale of oleomargarine not as butter but as oleomargarine, and in that way secure the protection of the consumer, the bill will pass without further opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

The Clerk read as follows:

In section 19 strike out the following: "One-half of such fine or penalty, when paid, to go to the informer."

Mr. MCMILLIN. Mr. Chairman, it is hardly necessary for me to explain at length the reason why this amendment is offered. The legislation which gave to informers a share of the penalties imposed for violation of the tariff laws has long since been repealed; the penalties of the internal revenue laws that were imposed and distributed in the same way have also been repealed. Yet here, in "these piping times of peace," the Committee on Agriculture in their wisdom have seen fit to inaugurate anew the most obnoxious of all that legislation. I am happy to think that the majority of the people of the United States would scorn to accept such money. But in almost every community there are those so depraved as to be capable of its acceptance. From such I would take the temptation to accept by withholding from the Government officials the power to give.

If we are to have a new swarm of deputy marshals sent around in new paths hunting for new substances, let us not add to their zeal the zeal of the mercenary who is to receive a part of the penalty as an informer. I do not know of any kind of legislation which is more reprehensible than that which sets neighbor spying upon neighbor for these petty offenses. The penalties affixed by this bill are very large. The forfeitures if obtained will be great, and hence the temptation to inform upon his neighbors to every man mean enough to do it will be great. I do not think that this House will do itself justice if, even for the protection of the cow, it turns loose a set of men upon the community urged on by such motives. I do not deny the power of the Government to raise taxes. They are essential to the existence of the state. When the object is taxation for the support of the Government no citizen can interpose his voice and no constitutional question arises. But, sir, I am of those who believe that the strong arm of Government can not be legitimately invoked to crush out any legitimate industry, and when this Government enters upon that experiment it will be upon a wide, a boundless sea of troubles. I hope that at the proper time the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Chairman, I have already, at an early period of this discussion, stated some objections to this measure. These objections were fundamental, and subsequent reflection and the argument which has taken place in the last few days have not lessened but rather have confirmed and intensified them.

No debate I have listened to since I have been a member of this House has been marked by more frequent recurrence to those first principles which are supposed to be sound and safe guides in all legislation. This very fact itself, Mr. Chairman, is a presumption against this bill, because it implies that it opens a new field of legislation, and one which Congress has not heretofore occupied.

But, sir, I have not been able to square this bill or to reconcile its principles with any of those just and safe maxims of legislation to which gentlemen have so frequently alluded in this debate.

Now, I know, Mr. Chairman, that a constitutional argument is too often met and supposed to be overthrown in this House by a sneer. Nevertheless, sir, the Constitution is the supreme law of the land, and it seems to me in a legislative assembly engaged in framing laws no inquiry could be more pertinent, none deserving of more respectful consideration, than that which seeks to bring those laws to the test of the Constitution, the organic law of the land.

A MEMBER. Especially when we are sworn to support it.

Mr. WILSON. Yes, sir, especially when we are sworn to support it.

Gentlemen seem to suppose that they have made their case when, as the gentleman from California [Mr. HENLEY] who spoke a few minutes ago, they ask us what provision of the Constitution does this bill violate. Mr. Chairman, I have always supposed, and I have been taught to believe, that in the legislation of Congress the pertinent inquiry is, under what provision of the Constitution is it allowable? From the beginning of this discussion I have not heard any gentleman on this floor attempt to maintain this bill on constitutional grounds except as a measure to raise revenue.

It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, before Congress can attempt to raise revenue there must be a double authority derived from the Constitution. It must not only be a constitutional mode of raising revenue, but there must be a necessity for revenue before you are authorized to put into operation the power of levying taxes. To pretend that this is a bill to raise revenue is to palter with the very highest trust that we as Representatives are clothed with. The trust and authority to impose taxes on the people, to use that power for any oblique or indirect purpose, or otherwise than for the plain and honest purpose of raising necessary revenues, is, I say, to abuse it and to palter with the most sacred trust with which we are invested.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. STRUBLE. Mr. Chairman, a few moments ago the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] called my attention to section 5, Article IX of the Constitution, and suggested that it might be well for me to consider whether my remarks upon the subject of taxing oleomargarine, whether consumed at home or abroad, were not in conflict with the section and article I have just named.

It may be his view is the correct one, but I submit it is not entirely clear upon the reading of the section, which is as follows:

No tax or duty shall be laid on articles exported from any State.

There is no time to enter upon any considerable discussion of the section now. It may be conceded that no tax or duty in the shape of export taxes or duties can be laid; but may not the United States primarily tax all oleomargarine, saying nothing about the tax or duty in view of exportation. Then, again, is it clear that this section may not refer to exportations from States, as if made somewhat under their authority—which of course can not be done—instead of, in a sense, from and under the authority of the United States to foreign countries?

I merely suggest these queries to the gentleman from Arkansas for reflection, without in terms contending that he is in error in what I assume might be his opinion of the section upon argument.

Mr. PARKER. Mr. Chairman, during this debate my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BAYNE] has said:

Pennsylvania is the second largest butter-producing State in the Union. New York comes first with 111,000,000 pounds annual production; Pennsylvania comes next, with over 79,000,000 pounds; the State of Ohio comes next, with, I believe, about 67,000,000 pounds, and Iowa next, with about 55,000,000 pounds. It will be seen, therefore, that the great State of Pennsylvania has a larger interest in protecting her dairy products than any other State in the Union except alone the State of New York.

It is true that by the last census New York was shown to have an annual product of over 111,000,000 pounds of butter, and it is also true that over 11,000,000 pounds of it was produced in the counties of Saint Lawrence and Jefferson, which constitute the district which I have the honor to represent on this floor. New York had then nearly one and one-half million cows, of which more than one hundred and fifty-five thousand were in the same two counties.

It appears that there are from fifteen to sixteen million cows in the United States. The annual product of butter has been a little over 1,000,000,000 pounds, worth about $250,000,000.

The annual product of bogus butter has been over 200,000,000 pounds, over 99 per cent. of which has been sold "as and for butter." It has cost less than 8 cents, and has been sold to the consumer for an average of about 25 cents; hence the profit of 17 cents, or $34,000,000, has been secured by those who have made and those who have sold it. Not only has the butter interest suffered from this fraudulent competition, but the whole $565,000,000 of butter, cheese, and milk interest of the United States has been greatly disturbed and harmed by it.

Unless some check is given to the bogus product and its deceptive sale, no power under heaven can prevent the practical destruction of the butter-making industry as it now exists in the United States.

Not one pound in one hundred of the bogus product is ever bought by a consumer who knows its character.

It is shown beyond question that much of this bogus product is not only unhealthy, but to a greater or less degree poisonous.

Never since the world began has any nation submitted so long to such an extensive and shameless fraud, and yet men stand about us and raise their hands as though in holy horror, and invoke the Constitution to prevent any interference with the continuance of the crime.

Seldom have men gathered in so much wealth in so short a period as has been seized and appropriated by these bogus-butter kings whose work is under investigation. Disease and poverty follow in their train, but they carry away their millions upon millions.

Consider it, 200,000,000 pounds of (largely a filthy) product sold to the consumer for $50,000,000—it cost the producer $16,000,000—leaving an annual profit of $34,000,000.

Or make the estimate very low, call the product 20 cents per pound—and if the counterfeit is prudently managed it will average above that for the year—then we have:

Paid by the consumer	$40,000,000
Cost to the producer	16,000,000
Leaving	24,000,000
Take off for possible incidentals	4,000,000
Leaving a net profit of	20,000,000

And these humanitarians, these lovers of poor men, carry away to their own safety-deposit vaults $20,000,000 per year, got from consumers who paid for butter and got nothing but its flavor in a bulk of grease. Is it strange that butter now sells for 16 cents in market? Is it strange that the great American dairy interest languishes and is demoralized? Is it surprising that these bogus-butter fellows, making their $20,000,000 a year, are going about here weeping for the "poor man's butter," because the poor man wants it so much and these fellows are afraid that the poor man can not get enough of it? Is it strange that men gather in to oppose this bill from Northern Illinois to Southern Georgia? Is it strange that this Congress is held here for days in mere delay over this bill while legislation of the greatest importance presses upon us? Is it strange that men representing tallow butter and lard butter and cotton-seed-oil butter, and men with whole windrows of dead animals of all kinds and conditions behind them, rise up and scream crazily about the Constitution?

All of these men represent the interest that robs the public of from twenty to forty millions a year.

[Mr. VAN EATON addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HATCH. I move by unanimous consent that all debate on the pending section be closed, so that we may vote upon the pending amendment of the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCMILLIN].

There was no objection, and it was ordered accordingly.

The question recurred on Mr. MCMILLIN'S amendment.

The committee divided; and there were—ayes 76, noes 23.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Now let the remaining sections be read.

Mr. WHEELER. I have an amendment to offer.

Mr. HATCH. The gentleman can offer it afterward.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 20. That the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, may make all needful regulations for the carrying into effect of this act.

SEC. 21. That this act shall go into effect on the ninetieth day after its passage; and all wooden packages containing ten or more pounds of oleomargarine found on the premises of any dealer on or after the ninetieth day succeeding the date of the passage of this act shall be deemed to be taxable under section 8 of this act, and shall be taxed, and shall have affixed thereto the stamps, marks, and brands required by this act or by regulations made pursuant to this act; and for the purposes of securing the affixing of the stamps, marks, and brands required by this act, the oleomargarine shall be regarded as having been manufactured and sold, or removed from the manufactory for consumption or use, on or after the day this act takes effect; and such stock on hand at the time of the taking effect of this act may be stamped, marked, and branded under special regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, approved by the Secretary of the Treasury; and the Commissioner of Internal Revenue may authorize the holder of such package to mark and brand the same and to affix thereto the proper tax-paid stamps.

Mr. WHEELER. I now ask for a vote on my amendment.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Strike out in lines 3 and 4 of section 19 the words "one-half of such fine or penalty, when paid, to go to the informer," and insert these words:

"One-half of all money collected under the provisions of this act shall be used in the support of common schools, and such money shall annually be divided among and paid out in the several States and Territories and in the District of Columbia in that proportion which the whole number of persons in each who, being of the age of ten years and over, can not read bears to the whole number of such persons in the United States; such computation shall be made according to the census of 1880 until the illiteracy returns of the census of 1890 shall be received, and then upon the basis of that census."

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Chairman, I now move that the committee rise and report this bill and amendments to the House under the agreement which has already been made.

Mr. COMPTON. I ask to offer the amendment which I have sent up to the desk.

Mr. HATCH. I have no objection to its being read for information.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read the amendment for information; but nothing is in order now under the agreement heretofore made except the motion which the gentleman from Missouri has submitted.

The Clerk read as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"SECTION 1. That every person who purchases or receives for sale within the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States any oleomargarine which has not been branded or stamped 'oleomargarine' shall be liable to a penalty of $50 for each offense; and that said penalty shall be recoverable as all other fines or penalties imposed by law in said districts."

The CHAIRMAN. Under the agreement which the committee made this afternoon the Chair is now required to cause the committee to rise and report this bill and amendments to the House.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a point of order. My understanding was that it was agreed that debate should close at ten minutes to 5 o'clock; but nothing was said about amendments. Amendments may be offered and voted upon, and I submit it is against the rules of the House to force a bill to be reported back to the House as long as members desire to offer amendments. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. HATCH. The agreement was so plain that there can be no mistake upon that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The agreement was that at ten minutes before 5 o'clock this bill should be reported to the House; that agreement was made by unanimous consent; and without unanimous consent now given it can not be changed.

Mr. MORRISON. Reported back without a vote?

The CHAIRMAN. Not without a vote; but the motion of the gentleman from Missouri is in order. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. DUNHAM. I wish to offer additional amendments.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Regular order!

The motion that the committee rise and report the bill to the House was agreed to; there being on a division—ayes 109, noes 33.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. SPRINGER reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8328), had instructed him to report the same to the House with sundry amendments, and recommend that it be passed as amended.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its Clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles; in which the concurrence of the House was requested:

A bill (S. 188) to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens, and for other purposes; and

A bill (S. 1991) supplementary to and amendatory of "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act, approved July 5, 1884.

The message also announced that the Senate insisted on its amendments disagreed to by the House to the Post-Office appropriation bill (H. R. 5887) and on its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment, agreed to the conference asked by the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses, and had appointed as conferees on the part of the Senate Mr. PLUMB, Mr. MAHONE, and Mr. BECK.

The message also announced that the Senate had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House do now adjourn.

Mr. DUNHAM. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. RANDALL. The motion is not debatable.

Mr. DUNHAM. Has this committee a right to report a bill back to the House as long as amendments are offered to the bill by members of the House?

The SPEAKER. That is not a question for the Chair to determine. It is a question which could only have been properly determined by the chairman of the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The motion of Mr. HATCH was then agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BARBOUR: Petition and claim of Catharine A. Fossett, executrix of James Fossett, deceased—to the Committee on War Claims.

Also, petition of Maria Trunnell, for compensation for damages done to her property in the District of Columbia by street improvements—to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

By Mr. BARKSDALE: Papers relating to the claim of Walter W. Peck and of Martha J. Stewart, of Jefferson County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BARNES: Papers relating to the claim of John McKinne, of Emanuel County; of Martha Price, of Burke County, and of Larkin Wilcher, of Glasscock County, Georgia—to the same committee.

By Mr. BUCHANAN: Memorial of the Board of Trade of Atlantic City, N. J., for a post-office building at that place—to the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

JOHN S. WILLIAMS—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

Senate bill No. 789, entitled "An act granting a pension to John S. Williams," is herewith returned without approval.

This claimant enlisted in 1861. He alleges that his shoulder was dislocated in 1862 while ferrying troops across a river. The records of the War Department fail to furnish any information as to the alleged injury. He served afterward until 1865 and was discharged. His claim for pension was rejected by the Pension Bureau in 1882, twenty years after the time he fixes as the date of his injury; and after such long delay he states as an excuse for the unsatisfactory nature of his proof that the doctors, surgeons, and officers who knew him are dead.

Considering that the injury complained of is merely a dislocation of the shoulder, and in view of the other facts developed in the case, I think the Pension Bureau arrived at a correct conclusion when this claim was rejected.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 2, 1886.

JAMES E. O'SHEA—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return without approval Senate bill No. 327, entitled "An act granting a pension to James E. O'Shea."

From the report of the committee to whom this bill was referred I learn that the claimant enlisted in April, 1861, and was discharged in October, 1864.

He filed a claim in the Pension Bureau alleging that he received a saber wound in the head March 7, 1862, and a gunshot wound in the left leg in the autumn of the same year.

It appears, upon examination of his military record, that there is no mention of either disability, and that he served two years after the time he claims to have received these injuries. So far from being disabled, it is reported as an incident of his army life that in the year 1864 this soldier was found guilty of desertion and sentenced to forfeit all pay and allowances for the time he was absent.

The report of the committee, in apparent explanation of the lack of any official mention of the injuries alleged, declares that "the fact that the records of the War Department are often imperfect works great hardship to men who apply for pensions;" and his conviction of desertion and the lack of proof to sustain his allegations as to his injuries are disposed of as follows in the committee's report:

"The Adjutant-General's report shows that the man was under discipline for some irregularities, but, notwithstanding this and the lack of the required proof that he was wounded in the line of duty, the committee are of the opinion that, situated as he was, he was very liable to, and very probably did, receive the wound from which he has suffered and is still suffering."

I am convinced that there exists serious difficulty on the part of the claimant instead of in the record of the War Department, that the kind of irregularity for which he was under discipline is calculated to produce a lack of confidence in his merits as a pensioner, and that the fact of his situation being such as to render him liable to receive a wound is hardly sufficient to establish his right to a soldier's pension, which is only justified by injuries actually received and affirmatively proven.

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 2, 1886.

AUGUSTUS FIELD STEVENS—VETO MESSAGE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States; which was read, referred to the Committee on Pensions, and ordered to be printed:

To the Senate:

I return herewith without approval Senate bill No. 1726, entitled "An act granting a pension to Augustus Field Stevens."

It appears that this claimant enlisted August 21, 1861, and was discharged on the 3d day of October, 1861, after a service of less than two months, upon a medical certificate of disability which represented him as "incapable of performing the duties of a soldier because of general debility, advanced age—unfit for service before entering."

His claim is not based upon any wound or injury, but he alleges that he contracted chronic diarrhea or dysentery while in the service. The committee to whom the bill was referred by the Senate admit that "there is a quantity of contradictory testimony biased in about equal proportion for and against the claimant."

His claim was rejected by the Pension Bureau in 1882 and again in 1885, after a special examination concerning the facts, on the ground that the claimant had failed to show any pensionable disability contracted while he was in the service.

The medical certificate upon which he was discharged makes no mention of the disorders of which the applicant for pension now complains, but contains other statements which demonstrate that no allowance should be made to him by way of pension, unless such pension is to be openly and confessedly regarded as a mere charity, or unless the medical certificate, made at the time of discharge, with the patient under observation, is to be, without any allegation to that effect, impeached.

I am not prepared either to gratuitously set at naught two determinations of the Pension Bureau, one very lately made, after a special examination—and especially when the evidence produced before the committee to reverse the bureau's action is admitted to be "contradictory" and "biased in about equal proportion for and against the claimant."

EXECUTIVE MANSION, June 2, 1886.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair presents resolutions adopted by the Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania, consisting of various labor organizations, representing about seventy-eight thousand members, remonstrating against the passage of any measure to regulate the manufacture and sale of butterine and oleomargarine and to impose a tax thereon amounting to a prohibition. The resolutions will be referred to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

Mr. VOORHEES presented the petition of Nancy Jane Orman, of Bowling Green, Ind., praying to be allowed a pension, and a petition of citizens of Clay County, Indiana, praying that Nancy Jane Orman be allowed a widow's pension; which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. CAMERON. Day before yesterday I presented a telegram from Richard Ennis, president of the Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania, Pittsburgh, Pa., covering resolutions adopted by that assembly, which represents seventy-eight thousand members, protesting against the passage of the bill to regulate the manufacture and sale of butterine or oleomargarine. I have received and present now an official copy of those resolutions, and move their reference to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM presented the petition of Henry R. Hall, mayor, and 68 citizens of Salem, Ill., praying for the passage of the bill (S. 2052) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis; which was ordered to lie on the table.

SEIZURE OF FISHING VESSELS.

Mr. DAWES. I present resolutions of the city council of the city of Gloucester, Mass., praying for retaliation on the Canadian Government for the seizure of American fishing vessels, and I move that they be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DAWES. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the Committee on Foreign Relations to a resolution adopted by the Senate on the 10th of last month, in which they were instructed among other things—

To inquire what measures, if any, are necessary to protect the persons and property of American citizens while engaged in lawful commerce in the ports of the Dominion of Canada; and to report by bill or otherwise.

I desire to make the inquiry of the Committee on Foreign Relations whether they have made any such advance in the investigation of this grave question as to enable them to make public any assurance that measures are being taken, or will be likely to be taken, which will afford protection to those engaged in lawful commerce with the Dominion from the aggressive measures that are now being taken.

Since the passage of the resolution, now nearly a month ago, transactions have occurred which have served very much to intensify the feeling and to put in jeopardy the interests of a large portion of my own constituents and those of New England generally engaged in the fishing industry.

There seems to be an apparent disposition upon the part of the Dominion Government to harass and embarrass very much those engaged in what can not but be considered the lawful commerce of the United States, to the extent that honest and innocent commercial transactions, such as the purchase of provisions merely, have been the cause of the seizing of vessels of the United States; and it seems to these persons that the delay is unnecessary, and that there is dilatoriness on the part of those clothed with the duty of protecting our commerce.

I do not make this inquiry because I myself have any such impression, or would intimate that the Committee on Foreign Relations have not devoted themselves to this duty as becomes so grave a subject, but in order that I may obtain from them, if it be within the province of their duty to make such a disclosure, some assurance which shall go forth to the public that measures are being taken which will protect them in their rights; and I should be glad to get some such information from the committee if it is compatible with their idea of duty.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator from Massachusetts of course can not have overlooked the fact that the Committee on Foreign Relations has no power to protect American commerce or American citizens. That belongs to the executive department of the Government, and is a part of its duty under laws of the United States and under the public law of nations.

I think at this present moment, in the absence of definite information, which I confess I do not possess, we must presume that the executive department of the Government is endeavoring to do everything that it rightly may to accomplish the just protection of citizens of the United States whose property and vessels have been illegally or unkindly dealt with in the Dominion of Canada, if there be such a case. Of course it may have happened that some of these vessels, it may have happened possibly that all of them have been guilty of a violation of the existing laws of the dominion. As they have been seized by the public authorities, of course there must be a public pretension on the part of the dominion officers that such is the case.

I hope, and I do not doubt the committee hope, although I have no formal authority to speak for them, that it will turn out in every one of these cases that the seizures have been made of innocent vessels which have not violated the laws of the dominion, and which have not violated any principle of public law and were engaged at the time of their seizure in doing what the intercourse of nations and the laws of their own country and those of the country to which they went allowed; and that the seizures therefore will be dismissed without even a certificate of probable cause.

But that depends of course upon a judicial inquiry in the first instance. I do not mean to say that a judicial inquiry in the Dominion of Canada would bind us if we thought it were unjust or improper. In case it should turn out to be the fact that any of these vessels should be condemned and the United States were of opinion that the condemnation was unjust, we should not be bound by any principle of public law or of public justice to assent to such an unjust condemnation, and it would be our duty to maintain the rights of our citizens if we have any spirit left, as I think we have, and any strength left, as I hope we have, although we have not been very successful in trying to get a navy or to arm our seacoasts lately for some reason or other. But in some way and in some good time the rights of citizens of the United States must be vindicated if such rights have been violated.

It would be premature in me to say now that I know they have been violated. I hope it will turn out that they are innocent and that they have been violated, if I may put it that way; but we do not know it. The Executive is now empowered, if he has signed a bill that passed the two Houses the other day, as I presume he will do if he has not done, to defend in the way of retaliation any injustice that is done to vessels of the United States sailing to ports of the dominion or elsewhere. When that bill becomes a law, if our British brothers are straining a point in order to force us into a convention of reciprocity, or free fish, or whatever, then it is within the competence of the President of the United States, authorized by law, to take such measures in his discretion that are peaceable as will tend to correct any such abuse, if such an abuse shall turn out to exist.

So I repeat that while the committee is investigating the subject and is endeavoring to find out exactly how the thing stands with a view to guide us in reporting to the Senate any legislation, if any shall be necessary, or any resolution, if any shall be necessary, the case so far as we are concerned is yet too premature, or rather too immature, to enable me to make any public declaration as to how the committee think the matter is and what ought to be done about it. But the matter is in the hands of gentlemen of the committee who have the highest interest and zeal to prosecute the inquiry with the utmost expedition.

Mr. DAWES. My chief object was to elicit from the committee, in connection with the latter part of the resolution to which I alluded, whether in their opinion any further legislation than that which has recently passed Congress was necessary to clothe the Executive with power to protect our fishermen.

It can not have escaped the attention of the committee that armed cruisers of the British Government are all about the waters on the border of the 3-mile limit in search of American vessels that they can, under some pretense or other, seize. The entire absence of any armed vessel of the United States in those waters to protect those fishermen in the pursuit of lawful commerce led me to inquire whether that absence was from a lack of legislative power on the part of the administration of this Government, or whether it was due to any other justifiable cause of delay.

I am aware, as well as the Senator, of the necessity of proceeding with caution, and the consequent delay upon that necessity; but there are those engaged in this interest who do not as well as the Senator certainly appreciate the necessity of that delay. If they can have the assurance from so high an authority as the Committee on Foreign Relations that no delay arises from indifference, then I am satisfied that they will have greater confidence in their cause and in the ultimate protection of the Government of the United States.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think I can state for the whole Committee on Foreign Relations and for the whole Senate to my friend that no legislation is necessary unless it may be an appropriation of money—hardly that—to enable the President of the United States, who is Commander-in-chief of its armies and navies, to send to the northern waters any vessel of the United States, if we happen to have one that will swim, as we have some I believe. There is one I believe that has been trying to swim under sundry tests for several months, and has swum every time, but can not yet be taken into the service of the United States for some reason or other, that would be a very good, swift cruiser to sail in the open seas with the flag of the United States at the fore, and to protect so far as she might citizens of the United States on the high seas engaged in lawful occupations.

I confess that I sympathize pretty largely with my friend from Massachusetts in the hope, if it will not be considered as discourteous to anybody, that the flag of the United States at the mast of the best vessel we have got shall appear in the northern seas at a due and respectful distance from the dominions of her majesty to endeavor to give a little kind of encouragement to men who are engaged in clearly lawful occupations in clearly lawful places. But there is no law needed for that. It only needs executive action, which, as I say, the committee is bound to presume will be duly taken.

Mr. HALE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate. The whole debate is out of order.

Mr. HALE. I only wish to say one word.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Maine have leave to proceed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the Senator from Maine is recognized.

Mr. HALE. Yesterday a dispatch was received by Mr. BOUTELLE, of the House of Representatives, from Eastport, in my State, stating that it was reported there upon apparent good authority that orders had been issued by the Ottawa Government to prevent the purchase of small sardines that are taken in New Brunswick waters and prepared and put up at Eastport on this side of the line. This industry employs a large number of men upon this side of the line in the town of Eastport in putting up these sardines. It also employs on the other side of the line a large number of Canadian or New Brunswick fishermen and boatmen, who catch the fish and sell them to our Eastport sardine-packers.

Under the ruling of the Treasury Department, that these fresh fish brought into our market for immediate use or consumption are not subject to duty, they come in free and the New Brunswick fisherman gets the benefit of our market duty free. He sells his fish to our citizen who puts up the herring or sardines. It makes a profitable industry on both sides. It is an industry in which Canadian labor has as much interest as ours, and in which no duties are exacted; and yet it is gravely proposed, if the rumor be correct, by the Ottawa Government to put rude hands on that industry, and to send armed ships there to prevent the purchase from Canadians by our citizens of these fish.

It is to me, sir, the largest cloud that has yet appeared on the horizon in this unhappy affair. If the rumor is correct and the Canadian authorities give that direction to their ships to break up this industry of their own people in order to prevent our citizens from purchasing these fish, it indicates a more profound spirit of mischief than has heretofore been shown. Whatever can be done by the State Department that will at once give information not only to the fishermen of Maine and Massachusetts but to the country of just what the fundamental purpose of the Ottawa Government is will be a benefit to us.

I am bound to say that the communication was laid before the Secretary of State and he disclosed a disposition to at once under every method in his power and at his command learn the ulterior purposes of the Canadian authorities, and I hope and trust that there will be no delay in that direction. If anything can be done by our Government, by any branch of the Government, that shall indicate the earnest purpose of the Government and of the administration to protect our fishing interests and to see to it that citizens engaged in lawful enterprise are not broken up and driven away, the sooner it is done the better.

It is a grave question now whether our main fishing enterprise of the season has not been so rudely broken in upon and assailed and hindered that it will be of little account for the rest of the year.

There has been nothing so important and so demanding prompt and vigorous action confronting the State Department and the administration as this. Congress has already acted, and has put into the hands of the President the power of fitting and proper retaliation, the occasion and measure of which retaliation must be exercised as an administrative and not as a legislative power. I am bound to say that the people whom I represent, and I believe the public generally, are looking now with anxiety to see to it that the administration comes up to what has been the evident spirit and wish of Congress.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not yet understand the purport of this discussion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The debate is out of order.

Mr. VAN WYCK. When did the Chair discover the fact?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair asked the unanimous consent of the Senate that the Senator from Maine might proceed, and no objection was made.

Mr. HOAR. Is debate out of order if unanimous consent is given?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question before the Senate. Reports of committees are in order.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. MORRILL. I am directed by the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2289) to change the name of the Exchange National Bank of El Dorado, to report it adversely and ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

I will say that a general bill having passed the Senate and also having passed the House and become a law, there is no longer any need of a special bill to change the name of any bank.

The bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. MORRILL, from the Committee on Finance, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2290) to change the name of the Wichita National Bank, moved its indefinite postponement; which was agreed to.

Mr. MAXEY, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1513) for the relief of George T. Newman, reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill (S. 2589) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo.; which was read twice by its title.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I wish to say that the bill is reported favorably with the assent of a majority of the committee only, a minority of the committee dissenting from the report. I desire to express my dissent from the report as a member of the committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. VEST, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the following bills, moved their indefinite postponement; which was agreed to:

A bill (S. 2052) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo., and for other purposes;

A bill (S. 106) authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the Chain of Rocks, in the northern part of the city of Saint Louis, State of Missouri;

A bill (S. 107) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo.; and

A bill (S. 1945) authorizing the construction of a bridge over the Mississippi River at Saint Louis, Mo.

Mr. DAWES, from the Committee on Indian Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7087) authorizing and directing the Secretary of the Interior to extend the time for the payment of the purchase money on the sale of the reservation of the Otoe and Missouria tribes of Indians, in the States of Nebraska and Kansas, reported it with amendments.

Mr. PLUMB. I am instructed by the Committee on Public Lands, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7021) to provide for the adjustment of land grants made by Congress to aid in the construction of railroads within the State of Kansas, and for the forfeiture of unearned lands, and for other purposes, to report it with an amendment. I will state in regard to this bill that I shall ask the Senate to proceed to its consideration at an early day. Some matters in connection with it are now under consideration by the Department at the request of the Committee on Public Lands, and it may be that before it is called up certain other amendments may be proposed on the part of the committee. I report the bill now in order that it may get a favorable place upon the Calendar.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be placed on the Calendar.

Mr. CONGER. I report from the Committee on Commerce three bills, which I move be indefinitely postponed, the subject-matter having been embraced in a bill already acted upon.

The bills were postponed indefinitely, as follows:

A bill (S. 153) establishing additional life-saving stations on the sea-coast of the United States;

A bill (S. 1569) establishing additional life-saving stations on the sea and lake coasts of the United States; and

A bill (S. 1496) making an appropriation for the establishment of a life-saving station, and providing for a life-saving crew at Fort Stevens, at the entrance to the Columbia River, in the State of Oregon.

Mr. GORMAN, from the Committee on Printing, to whom was referred the joint resolution (S. R. 62) authorizing the publication of an edition of A Digest of International Law, edited by Francis Wharton, reported it with an amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

Mr. DAWES. I am instructed by the Committee on Indian Affairs, to which were referred resolutions instructing the committee to investigate certain proceedings of Indian traders, to report them back with an amendment and to ask for their present consideration. The amendment is to strike out "the Committee on Indian Affairs," and to insert "a select committee of five, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts asks the unanimous consent of the Senate to proceed to the consideration of the resolutions at this time. They will be read for information.

The resolutions were read, and, by unanimous consent, were considered, as follows:

Whereas it is stated that in the matter of the administration of the powers and duties of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs in respect of the appointment of Indian traders acts have been done, or permitted to be done, in disregard of law and the rights and proper interests of citizens: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Indian Affairs be, and hereby is, directed to investigate the subject of the appointment of such traders, the granting of licenses to them, and the refusal to extend such licenses to persons engaged as such traders, and the methods which have been practiced in that regard since the month of April, 1885; and the reasons and influences affecting the several instances of such granting or refusing of such licenses; to whom licenses have been granted since said date, and to whom refused, why granted, and why refused, and whether or not any person to whom a license has been granted has been guilty of conduct or practices prejudicial to the good repute of the public service, and, if so, in what respect, and whether or not the same have come to the knowledge of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs.

Resolved, That in pursuing the said investigation the said committee shall have power to send for persons and papers, administer the necessary oaths, and employ a stenographer, should it be deemed necessary so to do, and such expense as may result from said investigation shall be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

Resolved, That the committee is further instructed to report a bill or bills for such legislation as the investigation may disclose to be necessary and proper in the premises.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the first line of the first resolution it is proposed to strike out the words "the Committee on Indian Affairs" and insert "a select committee of five, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate;" so as to read:

That a select committee of five, to be appointed by the presiding officer of the Senate, be, and hereby is, directed to investigate the subject of the appointment of such traders, &c.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolutions as amended were agreed to.

ADDITIONAL CLERK TO THE COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada. I report from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate a resolution which was referred to that committee with a favorable recommendation from the Committee on Commerce.

The resolution was considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be an additional clerk for the Committee on Commerce for the remainder of the session at a salary of $8 per day; and that the Secretary of the Senate be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay the said salary out of the appropriation for miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate.

ESTATE OF JAMES G. WINTERSMITH.

Mr. BECK. I am instructed by the Committee on Appropriations, to whom was referred the joint resolution (H. Res. 112) for the relief of the estate of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, to report it without amendment, and I ask unanimous consent that it be now considered. It is entirely a House matter, which was sent to the committee, and I was instructed to report it back with the recommendation that it be passed.

By unanimous consent the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the joint resolution. It authorizes the Clerk of the House to pay, and the accounting officers of the Treasury to pass the account, to the legal representatives of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, one year's salary as Doorkeeper of the House, and also the expenses of the last sickness and expenses of burial, not exceeding $500 for the burial.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. HARRIS. At the request of the Cotton Exchange and the Merchants' Exchange, two commercial organizations of the city of Memphis, Tenn., I introduce a bill and ask its reference to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 2590) to amend section 5258 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to railways, was read twice by its titles, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon, introduced a bill (S. 2591) granting an increase of pension to Jacob W. Hasler, of Oregon; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas, introduced a bill (S. 2592) to provide for holding terms of United States courts at Texarkana, Ark., and for other purposes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2593) to amend section 685 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the District of Columbia; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. PLUMB introduced a bill (S. 2594) granting to Rapid City, Dak., fractional section 16, township 2 north, range 7 east, Black Hills, Dakota, meridian; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

He also introduced a bill (S. 2495) for the relief of Mrs. Adelaide H. Graton; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. GORMAN (by request) introduced a bill (S. 2596) referring certain claims to the Court of Claims; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I ask the Senate to excuse me from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia. I make this request in the interest of the committee itself. It is very difficult to get a quorum, and I find that I can not attend the sessions of the committee. I think that some other Senator should be appointed in my place, so that there shall be no trouble in having a quorum of the committee present whenever they desire to transact business. Therefore I ask to be excused from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Virginia asks to be excused from further service upon the Committee on the District of Columbia. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and he is excused.

CHANGE OF INAUGURATION DAY.

Mr. HOAR. I desire to give notice that at an early day next week I shall ask the Senate to take up Senate joint resolution No. 55, for the amendment of the Constitution to change the time of the expiration of the Presidential term. I am informed that a large number of Senators have privately examined the resolution, and I do not expect any considerable opposition to it. If it should turn out that it is a matter of serious controversy, I shall not press it at that time.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no "concurrent or other resolutions" the Calendar is now in order.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The motion was agreed to.

NORTHERN PACIFIC RAILROAD LANDS.

Mr. DOLPH. I ask leave to make a statement at this time. I had intended to get the floor and was watching the expiration of the morning business to move to take up for consideration the bill to forfeit certain unearned lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company. I shall be obliged to leave the city to-morrow morning to be absent the rest of the week. Inasmuch as this motion has prevailed, I ask unanimous consent that that bill may be taken up for consideration immediately after the regular morning business on Monday next.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon asks unanimous consent of the Senate that the bill (S. 2172) restoring to the United States certain of the lands granted to the Northern Pacific Railroad Company to aid in the construction of a railroad from Lake Superior to Puget Sound, and to restore the same to settlement, and for other purposes, be postponed until Monday next and be taken up immediately after the morning business on that day. Is there objection?

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not object, but I should like to make an inquiry, if that is in order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It is not debatable.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not propose to debate it, but I should like to understand what the rights of a Senator may be when a question of this kind is asked for consideration, whether it is competent and proper and in order for a Senator to ask for some information from a Senator making a proposition.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All inquiries are in the nature of debate strictly, according to the rules. If the Senator asks unanimous consent he may proceed if there is no objection.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I merely rise to ask for information. The Senator from Oregon requests that the Northern Pacific bill be taken up after the routine business on Monday morning. Is it understood that it will be continued after 2 o'clock that day?

Mr. DOLPH. I should be pleased to have it continued.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I do not object, but I do not wish it to interfere with the railroad land-grant taxation bill.

Mr. DOLPH. That is understood. I do not intend to antagonize that or the bill for the repeal of the pre-emption laws after 2 o'clock.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Very well.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill taken up on motion of the Senator from Vermont [Mr. EDMUNDS] is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole. Its title will be stated.

The CHIEF CLERK. A bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] spoke to me some twenty minutes ago in reference to this bill and said he desired to discuss it but was obliged to go over to the House of Representatives for a short time. He did not suppose the bill would come up until after 1 o'clock.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York expressed a desire to have the bill taken up, and no doubt by the time the Senator from Oregon is through he will be back.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President——

Mr. VOORHEES. There was some misunderstanding here in regard to the disposition of the bill for the forfeiture of the land grant of the Northern Pacific Railroad. I did not hear very distinctly, and in fact the Senate was in a good deal of confusion. I should have no objection whatever to the bill going over until Monday; yet I as well as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. DOLPH] will have to be absent and I am to leave the city on Saturday to be gone some days, and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] and I desire to submit some remarks upon the measure; I rose to suggest that the matter might be taken up and discussed to-day, subject to the 2-o'clock rule, and then let it go over until Monday, if that be agreeable to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. DOLPH. I have no objection. I intended to move to take up the bill to-day and discuss it, as has been done on previous days, until 2 o'clock; but the Senator from Vermont made a motion that another bill be taken up for consideration to-day. I am compelled to go with my family, who are about to sail for Europe, to-morrow, to be absent the rest of the week, and I asked unanimous consent that the bill might be taken up after the routine business on Monday morning for consideration. I have no objection to its being taken up if the Senator desires to make remarks, and having charge of the bill I should like to be present when it is acted on.

Mr. VOORHEES. If it be permitted to occupy the time of the Senate for the next hour it will accomplish the object I have in view.

Mr. DOLPH. I shall have no objection to its being taken up in my absence for the purpose of submitting remarks.

Mr. VOORHEES. If the Senator from Oregon would not object, inasmuch as the Calendar has the right of way now, I would ask that unanimous consent be given to take it up to-morrow after the expiration of the morning business until 2 o'clock for discussion.

Mr. DOLPH. I should have no objection to that except, of course, having charge of the bill, I prefer to be present when it is considered.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I can not give unanimous consent in this stage of the Senate's business to anything being taken up merely for discussion. Undoubtedly it will happen to-morrow or next day that the Senator from Indiana, if he desires to go away, can get then unanimous consent to occupy a short time; but for the Senate in advance to make what is a special order for general discussion, I must object to.

Mr. VOORHEES. Then I give notice that after the conclusion of the morning business to-morrow I shall ask the Senate to allow the Northern Pacific bill to be taken up that I may submit some remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Oregon has the floor on the pending bill.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I ask for the reading of the bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be read at length.

The Secretary read as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the President of the United States shall ascertain the actual loss and damage inflicted upon the person and property of Chinese subjects by the violence of a mob of lawless and riotous persons at and near Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, on or about the 2d day of September, 1885; and for this purpose he may detail such officers of the United States as he may designate, not exceeding three in number, to investigate and take the testimony of witnesses as to the nature and extent of the damage done to the person and property of Chinese subjects, and, in connection therewith, may consider the testimony already taken and reports made, subject to the cross-examination of the witnesses, if deemed necessary, and such other proof as may be submitted to them by the Government of China. They shall report the estimate of the damages sustained by each person, and the testimony, to the Secretary of State, within six months from the approval of this act, which time may be extended not exceeding six months by the order of the President, and the same shall be examined by the Secretary of State; and thereupon the President shall award to each person so injured the sum that he shall consider to be just in view of the evidence and report so presented to him.

SEC. 2. That the aggregate amount so awarded by the President, not exceeding $150,000, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary for China at Washington, in full satisfaction and discharge of the injuries to person and property inflicted upon subjects of the Chinese Empire; and the sum of $5,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to be disbursed under the direction of the Secretary of State, to pay the expenses necessarily incurred for traveling or other expenses under the provisions of this act.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Mr. President, inasmuch as this measure has been reported from a committee composed of the most distinguished Senators of this body, and which committee is presided over by the honorable President of this body, and inasmuch as that report is unanimous, and as I am unable to concur in the bill or give it my support, I have thought it due to myself as well as others that I should state my reasons as briefly as possible for not supporting the bill.

Mr. President, under no circumstances, from no conceivable standpoint, nor for any reason can the Wyoming massacre be either palliated or excused, much less justified. However much we may deplore the fact of the existence in this country or any part of it of objectionable, antagonistic, and non-assimilating race elements, whose presence tends to riot, anarchy, and bloodshed, when the blow comes, from whatever source it may come, and human rights are stricken down, the civil law overridden, the public peace disturbed, private property destroyed, and human life sacrificed, humanity, law, civilization have but one voice to utter against the perpetrators, and that is of unqualified and absolute condemnation.

Whatever may be said of the undesirability of the presence of Chinese in this country, or of that of any other obnoxious element, the massacre of twenty-eight of the Chinese race at Wyoming on September 2 last by mob violence is as inexcusable, reprehensible, defenseless, and cowardly as was the recent act of anarchist alien fiends, who a few days since, with civilization proscribed weapons, scattered death and destruction among the preservers of the peace in the streets of Chicago. Mob violence in this country, however great the provocation, or whether, as is too often the case, without any provocation whatever, should receive the unqualified and emphatic condemnation of every citizen of the Republic, both native and foreign-born, whether the representative of labor or capital.

On the preservation and vindication of the majesty of the law at all times and under all circumstances must the people of America ever rely as upon a rock of enduring safety for the preservation and perpetuity, not only of the rights of property and life, but also the principles of human liberty and free institutions. This great barrier against ruthless and dangerous invasion once broken down, or impaired in vitalizing force and effect, and the security of the public peace, the protection of public and private property, and the preservation of human life become proportionately weakened, subjected to imminent peril, and more readily exposed to the rage and fury of those disturbing and abnormal elements of society, whose mission on earth seems to be the dethronement of law and order, the establishment of lawlessness and confusion, and who, in the language of Cowper, "spread anarchy and terror all around."

And let it not be supposed for one moment that the people of the Pacific coast who have felt the infectious and paralyzing touch of Asiatic invasion, and who by reason of actual experience have been enabled to rise to the importance of the situation in reference to that grave subject, and who to-day with one voice demand absolute exclusion in the future—one petition alone to this Congress demanding absolute prohibition containing over 50,000 names—are for this or any other reason any less earnest in their patriotic determination to maintain to the extent of their power, at all times and under all circumstances, in every legitimate and proper way, the preservation of the public peace, and the protection of the individual rights of life, limb, and property of every human being rightfully within our borders, whether native or foreign-born, citizen or alien, white, black, red, or yellow.

Unfortunately a somewhat contrary impression of the motives, inclinations, intentions, and actions of the people of the Pacific States and Territories has been created here and elsewhere in the East through the unwarranted and unjustifiable misrepresentations of a portion of the public press, and by those prompted by sinister motives and for selfish ends, but all such misrepresentations are gross and indefensible libels upon as brave, peaceable, law-abiding, and as courageous and intelligent communities as any to be found east of the Rocky Mountains. They, irrespective of party, with one emphatic voice condemn the Wyoming outrage. No portion of the American people more deeply deplore this stain on the otherwise fair name of Wyoming than they. That this gross overturning of the law and violation of human rights did not occur within the territory of the Pacific States or Territories is to them a source of supreme self-congratulation. None more regretfully than they learned of this wanton destruction of human life.

No portion of the people of this Republic would more readily than they undo, if they had the power, this sad occurrence in our history, or wipe by any lawful means at their command this blot from the records of the past. None more heartily than they sympathized with the victims of that injustifiable outrage. But the deed is done. The outrage is unfortunately already a part of our recorded history, or perhaps, more properly speaking, of the history of the Territory of Wyoming. The past is irrevocable.

The lives of those that perished are beyond human recall. Whatever of property was destroyed by the torch or otherwise can not be resurrected from its ashes. Hence we are met with a demand for national indemnity. It is proposed by the bill under consideration to take from the Treasury of the United States the sum of $150,000 and turn it over to whom? Not to the men who suffered in the loss of property, not to the legal representatives of the twenty-eight unfortunate victims who lost their lives at the hands of the mob, but to the Chinese minister and the Chinese Government.

Hence it becomes pertinent to inquire by virtue of what obligation or under what pretense of authority is this to be done. By reason of what conventional stipulation, or principle of international law, or national requirement, or international comity is the American Congress to do this thing?

It is not pretended by the distinguished premier who suggested it, by the Chief Executive who recommended it, or by the honorable Committee on Foreign Affairs of this Senate in so far as we are advised by any report from that committee accompanying the measure, and which committee now demand its passage in pari materia with more restrictive Chinese legislation, that the United States is in any manner, either by treaty stipulation with the Chinese Government, by any principle of national or international law, under any legal obligation whatever to make such indemnity. If such an obligation existed even by the remotest implication I should be the last to hesitate a moment to vote the indemnity.

I would maintain inviolate every treaty stipulation so long as the treaty is not abrogated by act of Congress or the concurrent agreement of the two governments. I would violate no rule of international law, no requirement exacted by the comity of nations, no established practice or precedents intended to be precedents in the line of our own nation, or any existing provision or requirement of Federal law. I would break no plighted faith, resist no rightful demand. If by any of the claims suggested the tax-payers of this Republic are properly charged with payment of this indemnity, then good faith requires that it should be promptly paid. But this, with all due deference to the distinguished committee reporting this measure, I must insist is not so. There is no pretense here, as I have intimated, either by the honorable Secretary of State, the President of the United States, or the distinguished committee which reported this bill, that it is so.

Entering as is our nation on what would seem to be an era of unrest, the legitimate consequence of the constant influx to our midst of the most objectionable alien element of Europe and Asia, becoming as we are every day more liable to sporadic inflictions of mob violence at the hands of an idle, irresponsible, and dangerous alien element, who in many instances in the sacred name of labor and the rights of man would strike down law, inaugurate anarchy, destroy property, and sacrifice human life, it might be well before the Congress of the United States in the name of statesmanship, and of that exalted and somewhat etherial notion of international courtesy and grace, which is sometimes misleading, to pause and inquire what the precedent is that is about to be established by the American Congress in the passage of the pending measure.

Is it one upon which this nation can afford to stand in justice to its own citizens, and its well-established theories of international law in its dealings with the governments of earth, in the coming years that shall mark our national existence? Shall we now in the dawn of this new era of internal discord, when for the first time in our national existence we are called upon to contend with the socialistic and anarchical elements, heretofore unknown in this country, and so dangerous to the peace of our communities, and when more than ever before our large cities are subjected to the devastating influences and destructive consequences of mob violence, particularly in the States east of the Rocky Mountains, and when the private property of the millions of aliens within our borders, as also that of our own citizens, is in greater danger perhaps than ever before of the torch of the communist and anarchist, establish the doctrine enunciated in the pending measure?

What is the precise question involved? What do the honorable Committee on Foreign Affairs of this Senate propose? The proposition stripped of every element of disguise, and stated in its real nakedness and virgin attitude, is simply and purely this: That the Government of the United States will indemnify a foreign government for and on account of losses sustained by reason of mob violence by subjects of such foreign government, aliens to our Government, who have voluntarily come to our shores, committed against their lives and property by other alien residents, subjects of other foreign powers, in open violation of our domestic laws, and when connected with neither the assailants nor the assailed was there any official representative of either government, nor was there any public property or national emblem of either government in any manner whatever involved.

That is the proposition. In other words, we are called upon to vote a national indemnity to the Chinese Government for and on account of losses sustained and injuries suffered by certain of their subjects in this country at the hands of a mob, in which neither American official nor American citizens participated, and of which they had no knowledge, but which was composed exclusively of Swedish and Welsh resident aliens. That this can be done upon any other theory, or can be sustained by any other principle than that of national charity, public generosity, or pure grace, without the slightest support whatever from any principle of national or international law or treaty obligation, I most absolutely and emphatically deny; and the precedent you are about to establish to-day, however strong may be your protestation, that it shall not be regarded as a precedent, will, I doubt not, in the next one hundred years of our history, come knocking at the doors of the national Congress in times without number, and at the vaults of the national Treasury, demand of our posterity, that the precedents of the fathers be observed, though the people of the Republic, native and foreign born, be taxed to the tune of millions in order to meet the demand and maintain the precedent of to-day in indemnifying alien governments for losses their alien resident subjects in this country may sustain at the hands of mobs composed of other irresponsible bands of unnaturalized foreigners who may set our laws at defiance, unfurl the red flag in our midst, and engage in the destruction of life and property, as did the Swedish and Welsh aliens at Rock Springs.

But in considering this question it is well to bear in mind that the demand for this indemnity does not come from the Chinese Government in the form of an appeal to the gracious and humane sensibilities of mankind and the charitable disposition and gracious action of our Government. If this were so there might in the light of the abhorrent attributes of the outrage complained of be some justification on the score of morals and humanity and national sympathy for the proposed appropriation. But this is not so. The claim upon the part of the Chinese minister is based upon an asserted right resulting from an alleged reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered loss at Rock Springs. He bases this claim of reciprocal obligations mainly on the action of the Chinese Government in sundry instances in the past wherein indemnity has been made for the losses of American citizens in China.

This, it is confidently submitted, is a claim that can not be maintained, as has been most ably demonstrated by every Secretary of State who has ever discussed the subject, including Webster, Marcy, Fish, Evarts, Blaine, and Bayard, and, without any reflection upon any of the others, it may be truthfully said by none more ably than Secretary Bayard in his exhaustive and unanswerable reply of February 18 last to the demand of Cheng Tsa Ju, the Chinese minister at Washington. It is to be regretted, however, that so able, dignified, and masterly a defense of the American doctrine on this subject should be, in a sense, weakened and destroyed, as it seems to me it has been, by the suggestion in its conclusion that the President recommend Congress that, to use his own language—

> Not as under obligation of treaty or principle of international law, but solely from a sentiment of generosity and equity to an innocent and unfortunate body of men, subjects of a friendly power, * * * it may be reasonably a subject for the benevolent consideration of Congress, whether, with the distinct understanding that no precedent is thereby created, or liability for want of enforcement of police jurisdiction in the Territories, they will not, ex gratia, grant pecuniary relief to the sufferers in the case now before us to the extent of the value of the property of which they were so outrageously deprived to the grave discredit of republican institutions.

So, too, the President, in his recent message of March 2, and in pursuance of the recommendations of which this legislation is proposed, denies in the most emphatic terms the existence of any reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States Government to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered at Rock Springs; but following the suggestion of his Secretary he brings that suggestion approvingly to the attention of Congress, and as a result we now are about to do, on the unanimous recommendation of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this body, that which the late Secretary Evarts, now a distinguished member of the Committee on Foreign Affairs of this Senate; the late Secretary Blaine, the late distinguished candidate of the Republican party for President of the United States; Secretary Bayard, the present Secretary of State, and President Cleveland have each and all in their turn officially, following in the footsteps of their no less illustrious predecessors, demonstrated by the most conclusive, able, and unanswerable arguments we have no right to do. And this is called statesmanship!

If this appropriation is made it must have for its justification one or more of the following three reasons, or for its excuse a fourth reason as hereinafter suggested. The only three grounds on which it can possibly be justified in the sense of discharging a legal obligation are the following:

First. The existence of conventional stipulations between the two governments creating a reciprocal obligation upon the part of the United States to make indemnity in such a case; or an absolute treaty covenant to make indemnity in cases of the character under consideration.

Second. International obligation resulting from the principle of the good neighborhood of nations and arising out of the good faith of governments to each other to provide indemnity in cases of the character of that under consideration.

Third. An obligation resulting from some provision or requirement of some Federal statute.

The only ground upon which the proposed action may be excused, if at all, is:

Fourth. A moral obligation created and supported, not by any legal requirement, but resting alone on the gracious sentiment of generosity and national sympathy, and the discharge of which can be nothing more nor less than an act of national charity, pure and simple.

At first glance it may seem to some that if we exact indemnity from China for injuries inflicted on our citizens in that country and for property destroyed by mobs, the reciprocal obligation exists upon our Government to indemnify the Chinese Government or its subjects from our national Treasury for injuries received by Chinese subjects here. On reflection, however, the reasons why this is not so and can not possibly in the very nature of the case be so will be seen at a glance. It results in the first place and mainly from the absolutely diverse structure of the two governments, which are so essentially and widely different in their respective political organisms and functional powers, and in their machinery and modes respectively of protecting private rights and redressing private wrongs, and all of which essential and radical differences have been fully recognized by both governments in every treaty entered into between the two states, commencing with that of 1844 and extending through those of 1858, and known as our commercial treaty, and 1868, known as the Burlingame treaty, and ending with that of 1880, known as the "emigration-restriction treaty." And these radical differences between the two governments in and of themselves interpose an absolute barrier against any attempt that might have been made to make the conventional stipulations between the two governments in any respect reciprocal.

No such attempt was ever made. They are not and could not in the very nature of the case be reciprocal. There never was a time in the history of the two nations when the rights, and privileges, and immunities of American citizens in China bore any comparison in respect of extent, or scope, or value to those enjoyed by Chinese subjects in the United States. In the one case they were surrounded by every manner of restriction both as to locality of residence and otherwise; while in the latter the rights, and privileges, and immunities extended to and enjoyed by Chinese subjects in this country were, until the treaty of 1880, unrestrained in any shape, manner, or form, either as to place of residence or otherwise; and they were accorded, as all now here are accorded, every right of protection of life, and limb, and property that is accorded by our system of laws to any other alien resident, or in fact to any of our own citizens, and every political and personal right enjoyed by any other alien of the most favored nation. Even prior to our first treaty with China, that of 1844, at a time when no American citizen could rightfully, or with any degree of safety to life, or limb, or property, enter Chinese territory, the subjects of that empire had the right in unlimited numbers to come to and reside in any part of our vast domain, and while here receive the same protection of our laws in life and limb and property that were accorded to subjects of the most favored nation or to any of our own citizens.

Prior to the Burlingame treaty it is true no formal right by treaty stipulation or otherwise was in express terms accorded to Chinese subjects to come to this country, but it must be remembered that none such was necessary, as around this land of freedom, this asylum for the oppressed, this home of the adventurer and hiding-place of the criminals, mendicants, and contagion-stricken of earth as well, no Chinese wall had been erected. Our doors, until the treaty of 1880, which in a measure provided for the restriction of Chinese immigration, were open to all the millions of all the nations of the earth—king and peasant, freeman and slave, millionaire and pauper, honest yeoman and wandering sloth, vigorous, energetic, industrious men, and the palsied, leprous, loathsome wrecks of living deaths.

While prior to the treaty of 1880, as has been intimated, Chinese of all classes and without limit as to number or character could come to and reside in any part or portion of the territory of the United States, engage in any business, occupation, or profession, "go and come of their own free will and accord," and were entitled to and received the protection of all domestic laws in reference to the rights of life, limb, and property enjoyed by American citizens; during all these years American citizens, and certain classes only of these, enjoyed and enjoy no more to-day, the meager privilege of entering the sacred precincts of Chinese territory, alone for the purposes of trade only prior to the existence of the Burlingame treaty, and since then only for the purposes of trade, curiosity, or as teachers, and then only in a few certain specified localities, which are chosen, in the language of the treaty, by "having due regard to the feelings of the people in the location thereof."

This was the precise state of the case prior to the treaty of 1880. There was in the situation and in the various international stipulations prior to that date no essential ingredient of reciprocity. There was on the contrary an entire absence of every element necessary to the creation of reciprocal obligations. Nor was the situation in this respect in the least changed by the stipulations of the treaty of 1880, inasmuch as this last treaty, while guaranteeing in express terms to all Chinese students, teachers, merchants, and those moved by curiosity, who might desire to come to the United States from China, and also to all Chinese laborers then in this country, and which was but an affirmation of rights, the existence of which could not under our system be denied before, the right to "go and come of their own free will and accord," and in addition every right possessed by citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, that treaty is as silent as the grave in so far as any stipulation is concerned looking to equal, or similar, or approximate reciprocal rights of American citizens in China, or which would give enlargement of scope to the restricted rights, privileges, and immunities theretofore possessed by or extended to such citizens in the Chinese Empire.

In view, therefore, of the rights, privileges, and immunities which the subjects of the two nationalities may under existing policies and treaty stipulations exercise and enjoy respectively within the jurisdiction of the other, and which, it must be confessed, will bear no comparison the one with the other in any respect whatever, when considered in the light of reciprocal obligation, bold and audacious indeed must be the representative of that government who would with earnestness in his diplomatic capacity, and by elaborate and labored argument insist that the obligations of the two governments were in virtue of these treaty stipulations, or in virtue of their international relations in any respect whatever dependent or reciprocal. Yet such is the attitude of the Chinese Government to-day. Such is the demand of the Chinese minister; and while denying in emphatic terms and with extended arguments the tenability and justice of this claim, we, at the same time, propose by this legislation to repudiate our own arguments, deny our own position, falsify our established theories, and with uncovered heads, in the presence of the mandarins of the Mongolian Empire, publicly avow our complicity with the mobs of irresponsible aliens in Wyoming—acknowledge our national guilt, and meekly, quietly, and graciously submit to the illegal demand.

But waiving for the present the question of reciprocity, what are the actual stipulations in the Burlingame treaty or in any of our treaties with China that could by any possibility be brought to bear in any possible manner favorably upon the question of the liability of the United States to make indemnity in the case of the sufferers at Rock Springs.

Article VI of the Burlingame treaty provides as follows:

> Chinese subjects, visiting or residing in the United States, shall enjoy the same privileges, immunities, and exemptions in respect of travel or residence as may there be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation.

While Article III of the treaty of November 17, 1880, contains the following:

> If Chinese laborers or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill-treatment at the hands of any other persons the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

But surely it can not with any degree of propriety be said that these stipulations clothe a Chinese subject with any other, greater, or more enlarged rights or privileges than are possessed by any alien resident subjects of any other nationality. These are but declarations of a rule that has existed since the foundation of our Government, and under which aliens of all lands and every nationality are placed on a plane of exact equality in the matter of favor by our domestic law.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I interrupt the Senator?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. Yes, sir.

Mr. EDMUNDS. May I call the attention of my distinguished friend to all this line of Chinese treaties to which he has referred and ask whether it is not stated in article 14 of the treaty of 1844 and article 11 of the treaty of 1858 and in all these treaties that where mob violence intervenes the authorities of the respective countries will use every exertion to bring the criminals to punishment? And then in connection with that (which we all understand is in all these treaties as it ought to be) I wish to ask whether any of the persons concerned in the Rock Springs violence have been brought to punishment, and whether it is not stated in our official reports that it is totally impracticable to do anything about that?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. There is no doubt that it is the duty of this Government under the several treaty stipulations referred to by the honorable Senator from Vermont to do everything in its power to protect these people in this country and to bring the offenders to punishment. I have no doubt about that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Have we done it?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The mere fact that there may be a failure to find an indictment in a given case where the proper necessary, and appropriate judicial tribunal has been established, would, it seems to me, be no reason for saying that they would have a right to resort to the national Treasury for indemnity.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But the question I put to my friend is this, and it is in order that the Senate and the people of the United States may know how the fact is: I wish to know, there having been twenty-five or thirty of the Chinese killed and fifteen or twenty others badly wounded, and property, as it is said, to the amount of $150,000 destroyed by a mob of two or three hundred persons, whether any one of the two or three hundred persons who composed this mob has been brought to justice as a fact?

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I do not know whether they have or not; but I will say to the Senator from Vermont that under our policy and under our system of laws there is but one way to determine whether a crime has been committed, and that is by an investigation by the proper judicial tribunal that has been appointed by law to do that.

Mr. EDMUNDS. There can be negligence between nations on the part of governments as in the case of Great Britain about the rebel cruisers and as other nations have claimed as against us. One nation as between itself and another is not bound by the internal autonomy of that state, but it looks to the body of the nation to carry out its obligations, and if they have not the judicial means to do it, for one reason or another, the nation that is injured is not bound by the failure of the nation whose people committed the injury.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. The Senator from Vermont asked me a question the other day in regard to what I thought ought to be done in case a mob should commit certain violence in Canada. It will be time enough to settle those questions when they come up. We are now discussing the question as to whether we are liable to China in this particular case to make national indemnity out of the national funds; and I feel that we have no right to assume that the judicial tribunals of this country will not afford relief. I ask my friend from Vermont, inasmuch as no part of this appropriation, as I understand, is to indemnify for lives lost, but is simply for property destroyed, whether he knows whether or not a civil suit of any kind or character has ever been commenced by any Chinese subject who suffered loss at the hands of the mob at Rock Springs?

Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not know of any, and I suppose that none has been brought, because when it was seen after a year or more has now gone by that the public strength of the Government there was not sufficient to bring, in a criminal way, any one of this mob into the presence of a court of justice even, the poor Chinaman would feel that it would be rather hopeless for him to employ even so distinguished a man as my friend from Oregon as his counsel to bring a private suit, and particularly if he be dead.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. That is an evasion of the question. As I understand, this appropriation, as I said a moment ago, is intended in no particular to be a recompense to anybody, either the legal representatives of those who lost their lives or the Chinese Government for men who lost their lives, but is intended purely and wholly to indemnify, not the representatives of anybody so far as individuals are concerned, but to indemnify the Chinese Government for property lost and destroyed by certain Chinese subjects at Rock Springs.

Now, I say it is pertinent, especially is it pertinent in answer to the inquiries propounded to me by the Senator from Vermont, to inquire whether any of these Chinese subjects who suffered loss of property at Rock Springs by reason of this mob have ever attempted in any shape, manner, or form to appeal to the judicial tribunals of Wyoming for vindication; and if they have not as a matter of fact, then we have no right to assume here that in case they did appeal they would fail to get justice. So far as I am concerned I have yet to learn that there has been any civil suit brought by anybody.

Referring now to the clause of the treaty, which I last read, I say that the most that can be said with reference to these treaty stipulations, or the highest office that can possibly be imputed to them, is that while conferring no new or peculiar rights not possessed by other aliens, they may perhaps be held as constituting a pledge, or conferring something in the nature of a special privilege which in the event of ill-treatment would require not indemnity, but this Government to "exert all its power to devise measures for their protection," which would secure to them those rights in the future to which they are in common with each and every other alien resident of this country justly entitled. Only this, no more.

That is to say to enact such laws, create such judicial tribunals, and take such legitimate governmental steps as will secure to these subjects the rights and privileges under proper and uniform forms of law, and appropriate remedial tribunals, already attaching to them equally with every other foreigner residing in this country. But that these provisions in any manner impose an obligation upon the United States to indemnify for losses sustained by reason of infractions of our local and domestic laws by lawless and irresponsible mobs, can not for one moment be maintained. Nor has there been any discrimination whatever of an unfavorable character against the Chinese, or which in any manner discriminates against them in any of the laws of this country, State, national, or Territorial, save and except such Federal laws as have been enacted by Congress relating to the restriction of Chinese immigration, and these, as we all know, were enacted in pursuance of treaty stipulations, while in other respects they are favored, not perhaps above other alien residents, but absolutely above citizens of our own country in the matter of the selection of those tribunals through which they may seek redress of private wrongs or the enforcement of their private rights. The Chinaman who has suffered wrong in this country and desires to seek a remedy in the courts may select at his option a Federal or State court, whereas to citizens of our own country having controversies with citizens in the same State the right to a remedy in the Federal court is denied except in special cases, and thus in the one case very frequently the alien has the right to have his case reviewed by the Supreme Court of the United States, while in a precisely similar case the citizen of this country must be content with the decision of the State court.

Here, then, for the investigation and redress of injuries to the life and limb and property of resident Chinese subjects are established courts, judicial tribunals—Federal, State, and Territorial—always open alike to the Chinese resident, other foreigners, and our own citizens, having full and complete jurisdiction and ample power to afford a complete remedy for every wrong. And this very fact precludes every supposition to the effect that for a private injury to life, or limb, or property suffered by a Chinese resident within our jurisdiction there is on the part of any such Chinese resident or his home government any existing right to demand indemnity from the National Government through legislative or administrative action.

But how strangely different is the case with our citizens in China! What judicial system has that empire to which our citizens can appeal for redress when they have suffered injuries? To what tribunals can they resort for protection and indemnification? What power attaches to those extraterritorial tribunals established for the protection of their own citizens and subjects by those powers in treaty stipulations with China, to take jurisdiction of or determine questions as to the liability of China to aliens? None, whatever. American citizens, therefore, in China are entirely helpless, absolutely remediless in the matter of redress for injuries committed on them in so far as any appeal to established judicial tribunals in that country is concerned. Hence it is that their remedy, and their only just and proper remedy, is by a demand through the home Government on the Chinese Government for national indemnity.

It has been said elsewhere in advocacy of a measure similar to the one under discussion that our Government has in the past been consistent in the one thing of proclaiming through our State Department bad law on this question, while action has invariably been right, and in direct conflict with the position assumed and advocated from time to time by our Government. And therefore it is concluded that while our diplomatic theory has been one thing, and our legislative and diplomatic action has been quite another, and on the assumption that our action has been right and our theory wrong, that the precedent has been firmly established in this country in favor of the policy proposed by the pending bill. This, however, can hardly be said to be true, and for two reasons:

First. In glancing back through the diplomatic and legislative history of this Government in so far as its affirmative action has been concerned, as contradistinguished from the theory it has advocated in reference to this and cognate questions, it will be observed that in nearly, if not quite every case wherein national indemnity has been recommended by the executive and administrative departments of the Government in approximate and similar cases, and that recommendation has been adopted and acted upon by Congress, there has been some ingredient of either official or national delinquency on our part in advance of the alleged injury and which in whole or in part led up to it on the one hand, or on the other some official or property attached to or belonging to the government making the demand, or some emblem or insignia of its nationality has been in some way injured, assailed or involved in the outrage in reference to which the indemnity is claimed. As, for instance, in the case of the New Orleans and Key West riots of 1851, when the Spanish consulate was entered and plundered, as also the office of the Spanish newspaper, La Union, including also, it is true, several coffee houses, tobacco stores and other property, and which riots moreover grew out of a high state of public feeling as the result of the shooting of fifty Americans by Spanish authorities while aiding in the attempted insurrection in Cuba.

But even in that case, in which an insult was inflicted on the Spanish flag, our Government, by its then Secretary of State, Mr. Webster, strongly and ably drew the distinction between injuries that constituted an insult to the Spanish flag and those which merely affected the property of Spanish subjects, and insisted that inasmuch as the outrage "was one perpetrated by a mob, composed of irresponsible persons, the names of none of whom were known to the Government," and inasmuch as "neither any officer nor agent of the Government of the United States, high or low, nor any officer of the State of Louisiana, high or low, or of the municipal government of the city of New Orleans, took any part in the proceedings, or gave it any degree of countenance whatever," that while the Spanish consul might claim special indemnity, the ordinary Spanish subjects who had come to this country to mingle with our own citizens and here pursue their private business and objects were not entitled to such indemnity, but on the contrary must seek their remedy alike with our own citizens, some of whom at the same time suffered at the hands of this identical mob, in the judicial tribunals of our country.

And in pursuance of this position of Mr. Webster, the then President of the United States, Mr. Fillmore, in his annual message to Congress in December, 1851, made the following recommendation: "That provision be made for such indemnity to him (the Spanish consul) as a just regard for the honor of the nation and the respect which is due to a friendly power, in your judgment seem to require," but declined to make any recommendation for the indemnity of ordinary Spanish residents who suffered by the same mob.

It is true indemnity was subsequently made by Congress, but how and with what protestation? And this brings me, secondly, to remark that an examination of the records will show, I think, in every case perhaps wherein indemnity has been actually made in any case in any respect similar in its facts to the Wyoming riots, it has been distinctly and positively asserted and accompanied with a distinct and emphatic protestation when recommended, that it was not made in pursuance of any legal obligation, or by virtue of any obligation resulting from treaty stipulation, or principle of international law, and that such action was not to be regarded as a precedent in the future.

This was the position of Secretary Webster, President Fillmore, and Senator Mason, then chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body, when indemnity was, under such protestations and declarations, finally made to Spanish subjects for injuries received in the riots at New Orleans and Key West. And in the case we are now considering, as has been seen, both Secretary Bayard and the President, while recommending the indemnity, distinctly and ably avow and insist by elaborate argument that there is no legal obligation, and the United States is not, to use the language of the able Secretary, under "any obligation of treaty or international law," to make it, but on the contrary they place it wholly and distinctly on the ground, to again use the language of the distinguished Secretary, of "a sentiment of generosity and pity to an innocent and unfortunate body of men, subjects of a friendly power," and protest that if indemnity is made it shall be, and I again quote the language of the Secretary—

With the distinct understanding that no precedent is thereby created or liability for want of proper enforcement of police jurisdiction in the Territories—

While the President in his message transmitting the demand of the Chinese Government and the suggestions of the Secretary of State attracts the special attention of Congress to that portion of the Secretary's letter from which I have just quoted and gives it his unqualified approval.

The proposed appropriation then of $150,000 as Chinese indemnity is not because of any legal obligation to make it, not because any reciprocal claim demands it, not because any principle of international law or any conventional stipulations require it, but, on the contrary, is confessedly an act of charity and of pure benevolence. For one, while I would give to every Chinaman now in this country that full and complete protection of life and limb and property that is afforded by our domestic laws to the most favored of our own citizens, I shall never vote to indemnify from the national Treasury Chinese subjects in this country, or the subjects of any foreign country on earth, voluntary alien residents within our jurisdiction, for losses sustained or injuries suffered at the hands of mob violence, especially when such mobs are constituted wholly and exclusively, as was so in the case of the Wyoming riots, by other alien residents and law breakers within our territory, so long as hundreds and thousands of our own citizens who have suffered losses to the extent of untold millions by reason of depredations by the wards of this Government—the various Indian tribes of the country—are compelled to go without indemnification or payment for such losses.

The records of our country show adjudicated claims amounting to millions of dollars due and owing citizens of this country in the Western States and Territories for losses suffered by them in life, and limb, and property, through the murders and depredations of the wards of this Government, then and now in treaty relation with the Government, and who from time to time during the past fifty years have reddened our frontiers with the blood of the pioneers, pillaged, burned, and destroyed millions of their private property, leaving their homes in ashes, putting many of them to death through slow and terrible tortures, unknown and unpracticed save by savage men. These claims of our own citizens must go unpaid, must be ignored by Congress, must be repudiated by the nation.

Mr. DAWES. I should like to inquire of my friend if the records report any account on the other side of the spoliations committed on the Indians, or if there is any objection to going into an accounting between the United States and the Indians to determine what would be a just balance when you come to put a fair estimate upon the property which has been wrested from the Indians, and make compensation for the property which has been destroyed by the ravages of war upon the defenseless Indians. I do not understand that the United States raises any objection to paying any honest claim which comes under the name of an Indian depredation, but I do understand that the United States is coming at last to the idea that there is an account on both sides, and that it is quite time that the Indian had some consideration in the court of conscience for the depredations that have been committed upon him.

It is quite fashionable to talk about Indian depredations and to cry out against the Government of the United States because they have swollen to the large amount stated by the Senator. I do not hear of anybody who takes the slightest concern about the question whether the Indian himself has had an injustice done him.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. I differ with the honorable Senator from Massachusetts. I think there is at least one Senator on this floor who takes considerable concern in behalf of the Indian, and I am satisfied furthermore that so long as we have the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts at the head of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this body the Indians of this country will not suffer violence at the hands of the Senate at least.

Now, with reference to the offset the Senator talks about, of course we shall discuss that when we come to it. All I know is that some $13,000,000 have been adjudicated. The claims are not mere claims simply sworn to by the claimants for damages suffered by the frontiersmen and the pioneers of this country by reason of Indian depredations, but they are claims that have been investigated under the authority of Congress by the Secretary of the Interior. Evidence has been taken; adjudications have been had so far as adjudications can be made by the Secretary of the Interior, and the claims have been forwarded to Congress. I am not aware, on the other hand, that an accounting has been had or any adjudication has been had in regard to the claims referred to by the Senator from Massachusetts. In addition to all that my understanding is that whatever has been done with reference to transferring the title to the Indian country has been done not only with the consent but under the direction of the United States, and done by treaty, by various Indian treaties that have been entered into under the direction of Congress. Those treaties have been approved by Congress.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived, it is the duty of the Chair to lay before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. CULLOM. I hope the Senate will give the Senator from Oregon permission to proceed until he has concluded his remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the Senator from Oregon will proceed.

Mr. EVARTS. I was about to ask whether this matter might not be continued until we can conclude this discussion. I am desirous of speaking, but not at any length.

Mr. PLUMB. The tax bill has been a long time before the Senate. There are a great many reasons why it should be passed at an early day if it is to be passed at all. While I would not interfere with the wishes of any Senator beyond an absolute necessity, I think in this case I ought to insist that the tax bill retain its place. Debate has been nearly concluded; in fact, it has been concluded on all the features of the bill itself, and I think it can be disposed of in a very short time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Kansas object to the Senator from Oregon proceeding?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not object to the Senator from Oregon concluding his remarks.

Mr. DAWES. I owe an apology to the Senator from Oregon for interrupting him at all, but I do not mean by what I have said to doubt that there are a great many just claims under the name of Indian depredation claims, and that some of them ought to be paid; and it is a great hardship that they have not been paid. Nor do I object to any transaction with the Indians under the form of treaties by which we have obtained their property through treaty, hard as those treaties were. They have been with the consent of the Indians, however obtained.

But beyond all that, outside of all that, the Senator can not be ignorant of the fact that violent hands have been laid upon Indian possessions, personal property and real property, and they have been driven at the point of the bayonet from possessions which they held under a title that recited it as a perpetual inheritance by the graves of their fathers. Whenever the Senator calls attention to the enormous amount of claims against the Indian, all I say is that he forgets that the Indian himself has a just claim upon the Government of the United States for remuneration. Whether he is likely to be any better off on account of the personal allusion the Senator has been kind enough to make to me, does not seem to be a matter very hopeful to him. I trust that he may have a foundation in the justice and conscience of the Government which will be of more service to him than any such service as the Senator attributes to me.

Mr. MITCHELL, of Oregon. When we come to adjudicate that side of the account, it should be against the Government and not against claims by citizens. Waiving that for the present, I will resume.

On these claimants the back of the Republic must be turned; in their faces the doors of the Government must be closed; to their appeals no response is given; their bills for relief by the scores and hundreds must be consigned to the pigeon-holes of the Committees of Congress, there to slumber the sleep of legislative death; while scarcely has the cry of the alien mob in Wyoming subsided until the Government of the United States, at the demand of the Chinese Empire, turns a patronizing and willing ear and springs with alacrity to the front for the purpose of indemnifying that government, on the principle of benevolence and charity, for losses sustained by its subjects who are not our citizens, and who have suffered losses at the hands of an alien mob. This may be statesmanship worthy of the leaders of a great government. For one, I fail to see in it any element of justice.

For one, while millions of dollars of claims of our own citizens in the States and Territories of the West, arising through losses sustained by them through Indian depredations while fighting the rough battles of frontier life and establishing the foundations of empire in the distant West, and which claims have, under the authority of law, been investigated and found correct, remain unpaid, I do not propose to insult them as a portion of the taxpayers of this country by voting to appropriate their money as a charity and as an act of benevolence to the Chinese Government as indemnity for the losses suffered by a few of their alien residents in this country at the hands of an incendiary mob composed of another set of equally objectionable aliens from some other foreign country. If we are going to deal in charity, then we are taught that charity should commence at home.

At all events so long as there remain unpaid millions of dollars of the character of claims I have described due our own citizens, the payment of which could in no sense be regarded as an act of benevolence, but rather the discharge of a just. legal, and righteous obligation, I am unwilling for one to vote to indemnify the Chinese for losses where it is admitted we are under no obligation to do so, nor in any manner bound to do so by any principle of international law, Federal statute, or conventional stipulation.

In response to my question of the day before yesterday, if I did not misunderstand the honorable Senator from Vermont, he replied that the Government of the United States would not have been under any legal obligation to make indemnity from the national Treasury had the sufferers at Rock Springs been of our own citizens instead of Chinese subjects. Nor would the Senator in such a case, as I understand him, be willing to vote an indemnity as a matter of benevolence or charity.

For one, Mr. President, while I am in favor of according to each and every person within our borders, of every name and color and creed and nationality, the equal protection of the laws, I am unwilling that Congress shall do that which the States respectively are by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution prohibited from doing—that is, deny to any person within the jurisdiction of a State the equal protection of the laws—by giving to the subjects of the Chinese Empire in our midst infinitely greater protection, and throwing around their lives and limbs and property a more ample mantle of protecting care than are accorded to our own citizens. When we say to our own citizens, who suffer at the hands of the mob: "You have your remedy in the judicial tribunals of the country, and there alone; go seek your redress there," and in the same breath say to aliens in our midst: "You have not only the right of our own citizens to seek relief in the established courts of the country, but in addition, or in case of failure in the courts, you are entitled to indemnity through act of Congress by appropriation from the national Treasury," we declare a policy which in my judgment is in direct contravention of the principle—not the provision, because it operates solely on the States—of the Constitution of the United States quoted on yesterday by the Senator from Vermont.

In other words, by such a policy we accord to aliens in our midst rights, privileges, and guarantees which we deny to our own citizens. Or to state the case in another form, we create and recognize and advocate by Congress an inequality of protection forbidden in the States by the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution, giving the preference, and the fuller, more complete, and ampler protection to the Chinese subject than to our own, and subordinating the claims of our own citizens to the higher and preferred claims of the alien. This, Mr. President, is the inevitable logic of the pending bill.

I am not surprised that there is a failure on the part of the distinguished committee reporting this measure to submit with it a report stating the grounds upon which that committee were so unanimous in its recommendation; nor am I surprised at the evident anxiety of the honorable chairman of that committee to choke off discussion and rush this measure through communi consensu and without debate; and on the assumption that inasmuch as the distinguished committee of which he is chairman had unanimously reported the bill, that therefore it is a matter of impossibility that there could be any two sides to the question.

I regard this bill, Mr. President, as an insult to American citizens, as an act of flagrant and uncalled-for partiality to alien residents, operating as a gross injustice to those who, if preferences are to be given, are by every consideration that springs from the relation of citizenship justly entitled to them.

While we are manifesting so much concern for the Chinese Government and for the protection and indemnification of their subjects, it would be well perhaps to remember the millions of dollars' worth of losses sustained by our own citizens along our Southern Texan frontiers by the destruction and capture of stock, the property of American citizens, by raids from Mexicans. Although the line has been guarded as best it could be by the Texan Rangers and Federal troops, our citizens have suffered to the extent of millions of dollars, and yet not so much as a demand for indemnity is made by our Government in behalf of our own citizens, although they have suffered through raids on our own soil from marauding subjects of a foreign power.

Are the Senators from Texas on this floor, whose immediate constituents have suffered so greatly in this manner, willing to vote this charity to Chinese subjects while the just claims of their constituents, citizens of their State, and of our common country are wholly ignored?

What will our fellow-citizens in Arizona and New Mexico, who for years past have suffered so greatly and who are even now and for months past have been subjected to the incessant and murderous raids of the Indian bandit, Geronimo, and his murderous band, think of a Congress of the United States that will employ its time in appropriating the national funds as a charity in indemnification of Chinese subjects who have suffered at the hands of an alien mob, while for our own citizens and pioneers not so much as a word of sympathy is extended?

While we must not for a moment, of course, presume that any other motives than those which spring from the purest fountains of patriotism and from the highest and best considerations of public justice, and the loftiest aspirations of statesmanship, the most enlightened views of public policy, could influence the distinguished Committee on Foreign Affairs, who have, with a unanimity that is charming to contemplate, reported this bill, I have, I confess, in my verdancy and feeble inability to grasp this higher order of statesmanship to which that committee has risen in reporting this measure, and in support of which they have for reasons best known to themselves failed to furnish any reasons in the shape of a committee report, been inclined to the belief that if perchance some portion of that committee had been so fortunate or unfortunate, as the case may be, to have resided west of the Mississippi River, and all had been so located as to have been less subject to the blandishments and plausible arguments of the able representatives of the Chinese Government in this city, that perhaps a somewhat different view might have been taken of this subject.

It has been suggested elsewhere that by voting this indemnity we place our Government in more intimate relations and on a more friendly footing with the Chinese officials and will thus enable them to secure such modifications of our present treaties with China as will result in the near future in the absolute exclusion of Chinese immigrants in the future. On the contrary, Mr. President, in my judgment the effect will be the very reverse. Let it once be understood that this Government is committed to the policy of promptly indemnifying out of the National Treasury for any and all property of Chinese subjects in this country that may be destroyed or lost at the hands of mobs; let it be understood that these alien subjects have not only all the rights of American citizens under like circumstances of appealing to the courts, State and Federal, but in addition can make rightful claim upon the Treasury of the United States, and then the Chinese Government will in my judgment be more loth than than ever before to consent to any arrangement that will tend to the exclusion of Chinese immigrants to this country.

It will be time enough to placate the Chinese officials after our own diplomatists, and those who for the present direct and control the political destinies of this Government, are educated to a realizing sense of the imminent peril to which our country is being rapidly subjected, not alone from a deluge of Oriental slaves, not alone from the blighting swarms of Asian migration, but from the still more dangerous red-handed anarchist and communistic elements pouring in upon us from the lowest, vilest, and criminally lawless classes of European life.

It is our own people, our own statesmen, our own officials that should be brought to a realizing sense of impending dangers, their causes and the remedy; that should be stimulated to arouse themselves, shake off the dull lethargy of at least apparent ignorance in reference to the vital questions of the hour, and of positive inaction, vindicate their own intelligence, statesmanship, and patriotism by rising to a proper comprehension of the magnitude of the evils that confront us, and grasp with ability, energy, effectiveness, and power a subject than which none more important, none more seriously involving the prospective peace and prosperity of the country, the stability of American institutions, the security of life and property, the integrity of free labor, and the welfare of modern civilization on this continent, ever engaged the attention of the American people or challenged the prescience, ability, and patriotism of American statesmen.

The times are not propitious, I submit, when the followers of the red flag are plotting treason against law and order and inciting to riot and bloodshed and anarchy, in which the Government of the United States can with prudence and propriety, or in justice to its own citizens announce to the governments of earth, civilized and barbaric, Christian and Pagan, that we stand ready to respond to each and all of these on demand, in a money indemnity from the Treasury of the United States, for injuries that may be suffered by their subjects resident here, by reason of mob violence. The people of this country, the present tax-payers, the lovers of peace, and justice to our own citizens, and the brave defenders in every proper form of law and order, will not, I fancy, relish the declaration of a policy such as this, which pledges them individually and collectively to the payment of all such claims, whether amounting to a few hundred thousand or many millions of dollars; nor will our posterity, when the generations of the present shall slumber with their fathers, regard with favor the establishment of precedents by us that commit them and their posterity to a like policy.

This bill will pass. It is the wish of the administration it should pass, while our distinguished Committee on Foreign Relations of this Senate while tinkering with restriction acts, at best mere delusions and snares when considered as a remedy for the evil against which they are directed, handling with diplomatic fingers, kid-gloved, for fear of giving offense to the Chinese minister, this overshadowing question of Chinese invasion, and while refusing so far as heard from to declare, when properly called upon to do so, that they or a majority of them are in favor of providing for the future exclusion of Chinese immigration to this country even by diplomatic arrangement between the two governments, recommend it.

This measure will doubtless receive nearly if not every vote of this body cast on its final passage, and for this protest I shall doubtless be charged here and elsewhere with either playing the part of the demagogue, or lacking in ability to comprehend those delicate questions involved in international controversies, and which seem at least in this case to demand that while with one voice protesting the non-tenability of the demand, and the absence of all legal obligation, while stoutly asserting that by no principle of governmental reciprocity, conventional stipulation, or requirement of international law, are we under any obligation whatever to do this thing; yet in order that it may not be said we are not dealing with China by reason of her weakness as compared with some other nations, or by reason of some supposed prejudice we have against her subjects here, as we would deal with such mightier powers, we must as an act of benevolence and out of pure charity make this donation.

If we are dealing thus with China in this instance prompted by any of the considerations just suggested, as I fear we are, and differently from that which our sense of right and of public justice, our views of international law, and considerations of self-respect would allow us to do were it England, or France, or Spain, or any other of the great maritime powers that had made this demand, even though their iron-clads menaced our harbors and our fleets as a means of enforcing it, then it would seem we are basing our proposed action on a principle in which is involved as its most important component part an ingredient of moral cowardice unworthy the representatives of a great nation.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will now be placed before the Senate.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 1812) to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes.

Mr. PLUMB. I should like to make a statement to the Senate and especially to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR] in reference to the amendment which is now pending.

I agree most fully with the general purpose of this amendment. When I first read it my purpose was to offer no opposition to it whatever; but the more I consider it the more I feel that it may, in the first place, embarrass the proper administration of this bill should it become a law, and next that it would be introducing into this bill an important subject which can not be properly dealt with in this connection.

I believe that the best manure for the soil is the foot of the proprietor. I believe no man ought to own any more land than he can reasonably use. Whether the time has come to go as far as that by legislation I do not now say; but certainly I should be glad to commit myself by vote and by voice to any legislation tending to a reasonable extent at least to a limitation upon the holding of land, and to an extent which would prevent speculation in land, and which would as far as possible save all land for those who would make personal use of it by cultivation.

This, however, is a large question, one which ought to be dealt with by itself after due consideration, because the value of the legislation is largely dependent on the details and not on the mere announcement of principles. If this amendment were adopted by the Senate, it might prevent the lands which are the subject of the legislation proposed from being sold at all, and thus prevent the collection of the taxes which Congress is now legislating with a view of having levied and collected.

It is necessary in the collection of taxes, in the West at least, that the counties in which the lands are located shall be a bidder for those lands; and this is not only necessary, but the counties frequently bid in very large areas of land at tax-sales, subsequently disposing of their interest to private persons if private persons desire to purchase. Therefore there ought to be an exception made, if the provision is to be operative at all, in favor of the counties, of the Territory or the State, whatever authority may be provided for that purpose by the law of the locality, purchasing these lands for the purpose of preventing the sale from going by default; and when we enter upon the question of making exceptions to this general rule, as I said before, we enter upon a very wide field.

Believing as I do that the bill as it now stands is designed to accomplish a good purpose and that this amendment will embarrass it in its future conduct as well as almost certainly in its operation, I shall be very glad indeed if the Senator from Massachusetts will withdraw the amendment and address himself to the consideration of a proposition which shall cover all possible details of this very urgent question in order that it may come before the Senate in such a way as to receive consideration independently of other measures like this of which it now clogs the progress.

Mr. HOAR. Mr. President, I had supposed that the general purpose of this bill was a proper one, and expected to support it if its details were satisfactory and it properly provided to do justice to all persons in interest. Of course it is a grave responsibility for a Senator entertaining such opinions to undertake to thrust upon a measure which an able committee has matured a provision which the committee responsible for the measure conceive to be likely to embarrass its successful operation. It is a responsibility which I feel very unwilling to take. I am therefore disposed to accept the suggestion of the honorable Senator from Kansas, the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands, and his assurance that he and, as far as he can represent it, the committee over which he presides will endeavor to combine with other Senators in framing a general and comprehensive measure which will cure the evil to which the attention of the American people is being most emphatically called. I think, however, that it is proper before doing that that I should call the attention of the Senate to the grounds upon which this amendment rests.

The ingenious and rhetorical imagination of my honorable friend from New York [Mr. EVARTS] finds what he calls a lord-paramount arising in this country. He says that nobody will buy a base fee. One would think that that learned lawyer and accomplished Senator had never heard of an estate upon condition in his life——

Mr. EVARTS. Allow me; it was because I had heard of it that I was able to discriminate and know what it led to.

Mr. HOAR. And that no American citizen would buy a dwelling-place or a farm the title of which was attended by any possibility of forfeiture for breach of condition. Why, sir, there is not a populous town or city growing up all over America, certainly not in the New England States, where land titles are not full of conditions for the convenience or comfort of the neighborhood. A large land-owner cuts up his estate and sells it out in house-lots, and every deed for all time provides that no person buying shall put his house or barn within 6 feet or 12 feet or some other prescribed distance of the highway, that everybody shall have a front yard, that his front windows shall not be interfered with in their prospect, that no one shall build a shoe-shop or certain classes of manufacturing establishment, and so on—nothing shall be built but a particular kind of dwelling. Those things are as common as ownership, as common as land, as common as wells or windows. And now we are told that the men who impose those conditions on their estates are lords-paramount, and that the obligation they impose on their grantees is repugnant to the freedom of American ownership in land; that the humble farm of my friend from New York in Vermont, which I think contains not more than 2 acres, if I recollect aright, would be held by a less satisfactory tenure hereafter if we should adopt this principle.

Here is a proposition which is to secure, and only to secure, for all time the great, vast homestead spaces of our Western States and Territories against the danger which has embarrassed England, which has subjected her working classes to countless woe, sorrow, humiliation, and distress, and which has been the ruin of Ireland.

Why, Mr. President, a great orator and statesman, within twenty-four hours, at a meeting in the State of Maine held to express sympathy with Mr. Gladstone, declared to his audience that the one reason for the present condition of Ireland, with her vast and wonderful fertility, is that one-half her soil is owned by between nine hundred and a thousand men, and half of the remaining half is owned by three thousand. The same condition of things, to a great extent, exists in England. I have here the statistics, which I will not undertake to read, but a very few men in Great Britain, I think less than seventy thousand in all, own the entire land of that prosperous and powerful country; and the result is, notwithstanding all the pride that the Englishman feels in his country, and notwithstanding her power, notwithstanding her wealth, her workingmen emigrate to this country if they can scrape together the means to get to the seaboard and make the voyage.

There is a story that I heard of an American traveler in England who was traveling on a railroad train with Sir William Watkyns Wynn, the possessor of the vast landed estate which belongs to the great house of Buckingham. Sir Watkyns was a stranger to him. He asked him who owned the house they passed and the baronet replied that that was his. They went about 10 miles farther. He looked out and saw a beautiful mountain crested with wood and green on the sides, and he said, "Who owns this mountain?" and his fellow-traveler replied rather sleepily, "That is mine." Several miles farther on they came to a wood, and he asked, "Who owns that wood?" His fellow-traveler waked up from his sleep and said, "Why, that is mine." The stranger got out at the next station and told the guard that there was a lunatic on the train who fancied that he owned the whole kingdom round about, and he thought they had better take him into custody; but he was not dangerous, as he then seemed to be asleep.

This danger is not a danger which is found only in the imagination of radical reformers or demagogues or alarmists. It is the pregnant and real danger which menaces our great spaces in the new States and in the Territories of the Northwest. It is reported to us by Congressional committees, it comes to us in communications of our Departments. Here is a list contained in a document communicated to the House of Representatives at the second session of the Forty-eighth Congress by Secretary McCulloch, showing purchases of lands in this country by foreign syndicates:

	Acres.
English syndicate No. 1 (in Texas)	4,500,000
English syndicate No. 3 (in Texas)	3,000,000
Sir Edward Reid, K. C. B. (in Florida)	2,000,000
English syndicate, headed by S. Philpotts	1,800,000

English syndicate (in Florida)	59,000
Total	20,941,666

It seems to me that we are all somewhat justly exposed to the criticism made by the honorable Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER] yesterday that we have allowed this thing to go too far already. The wonder is, not that we have waked up so soon, but that we have waked up so late. In my judgment the time has come when it is the duty of the Congress of the United States wherever the matter is in its power to break up these large holdings by corporations and by aliens altogether, and to limit them strictly, as this amendment of mine proposes to limit them, to the ownership of parcels reasonable in amount in single hands. Certainly 640 acres are enough for any one man who is himself to be counted as a husbandman. I do not think we are aware of the extent to which tenant farming is already becoming an institution in this country. According to the census of 1880 there were 1,024,601 farms rented by tenants in the United States; 1,024,601 farms in this country occupied by men to whom the produce of the soil they till does not belong except as tenants or holding under landowners who have nothing to do with the cultivation of the soil. At this moment, proud as we are of our yeomanry which throughout certainly the Northern belt of States in this country as in England has been the class to which the history and character of our country has been due, we are the largest tenant-farming nation in the world.

The Senator from New York talks about the feudal system, and he finds that system in a condition that no one man shall engross more than 640 acres in one ownership and fails to find anything of feudalism in a system under which 1,024,601 tenants have grown up.

My notion of what feudalism is to be dreaded differs from that of my honorable friend. I do not think that a condition entering into the very ownership of land itself, that the land shall not be sold to a corporation to be held in mortmain, is feudalism. It is a blow at feudalism. I do not think a condition that land shall be held on the tenure that it shall not be sold to a man who owns 640 acres already is feudalism. It is a blow at feudalism. I find the danger of the feudal system to this country in its essence in the system which provides that one man shall own the land which another man is to till.

The number of tenant holding is estimated to have increased 25 per cent. since the result which I have stated was ascertained in the census of 1880. There are but 547,222 tenant farmers in Ireland, and in England and Wales 424,000 more, making 962,000 in all, and in Scotland 80,101. So the United States at the present day possesses more tillers of the soil paying rent to landlords by more than 25 per cent. than England, Wales, Scotland, and Ireland combined.

I shall not pursue this subject, and I will withdraw the amendment, but the subject will be pressed upon the attention of Congress until it is disposed of.

Mr. EVARTS. Whenever, Mr. President, a subject is before the Senate that involves either primogeniture or the aggregation of land in single owners I shall be able to express my opinions, and whether they shall differ with those of my honorable friend from Massachusetts will appear when those opinions of mine are expressed on a topic involved in the subject of debate.

I had no fault to find with the measure that these tax-sales should carry to a single purchaser no more than 640 acres. I was not on that point. I only meant it should carry the 640 acres and the man should own it when he bought it as every freeman in the United States now owns his land.

The condition by which under the feudal system there could be a reversion to a mesne or a paramount lord was the essence of the feudal system. All that was left in the common law that we imported in this country was that a common-law forfeiture hung over land forever and forever in the name of the heir of the first grantor, without a scintilla of estate left in the grantor at all, but he held over the land the power and the pall of destroying its marketable value. Now, at this day in the Senate we hear under cover of entirely different topics and interests and motives and occasions an introduction of a proposition that when the tax-gatherer shall sell the 640 acres no man shall be able to get a good title to it.

What is the common-law condition? The common law before the invention and introduction or development of equity had no resource to gain the adherence of the granted property to the purpose intended to be secured, except by imposing an absolute forfeiture which should bring it back to the grantor, although the absolute fee except for the condition had been parted with by the grantor and been paid for by the grantee. As feudalism declined this remnant of feudalism was condemned by the common law in the mother country under those fearful words, that the common law abhors a forfeiture. What principle of freedom, what ownership of land, what energy of the common law could express that relation more firmly than that, that the common law abhors a forfeiture?

If you believe the Senator from Massachusetts, while this limping paragraph as to tax-sales is thus to be burdened with this abhorred forfeiture of the common law, he makes it an occasion to think that it would be desirable that all the lands of the people of this country should be held under that same terrible overhanging forfeiture, and he amuses the Senate with the notion that in his own neighborhood people like nothing better than to buy lands and to build houses with a forfeiture hanging over them.

I do not know what energy of intelligence and of self-respect has taken hold of his neighbors, but I know there is not a man in the State or in the city of New York who buys a base fee if he knows it. I can point out unused and unusable plots of land in the city of New York because in a remote deed there is found a forfeiture at common law that may be exerted. Who will buy a lot in the city of New York under such a forfeiture and build a structure that is to cost ten times that of the lot with a forfeiture hanging over it at common law, that to the heirs, if they can be found after a hundred years, the condition is reserved against which by possibility no adverse possession can run and it never can be cured, because there is no estate? It does not spring out into re-entry and reversion except upon the fact that if you only had the forfeiture happen then the principles of law may run adversely; but until the forfeiture takes place the right of entry as of his original estate is always arising under the principle of the feudal lordship that thus reserved this power.

The great real estate lawyer, Sir Edward Sugden, says that under the principle of the common law, which abhors forfeiture, under the development of the equity jurisdictions and facilities, the courts will always hold that what used to be regarded as a common-law forfeiture should be only a covenant, if there can be found one shred or word upon which that can be founded; and that so far as estates arise under dispositions by will, courts of equity will always interpret them in that way, and courts of law when they can will turn a forfeitable condition, where the fee passes, into a covenant. That answers what was the whole purpose of the common-law forfeiture; that is, that the lands should be held to the purposes for which the grantor intended; but it disposes of the cruel and exacting tyranny that if there be a diversion the land shall go back, that ruin shall be wrought upon the owners, and the land thus liberated again be disposed of. But equity intervenes and says it is to be treated as a covenant, and the courts of equity retain the title and ownership in the grantee, break down the forfeiture, and then enforce the application of the equitable covenant.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to ask the Senator from New York if it has not been the policy and the enactment of the English law down to the present generation at least, if not the present day, that no land should be sold to an alien, and that no land should be sold to a corporation to hold in mortmain except in certain specified cases; and what there is of distinction in principle in his mind between a legal bar against selling land to a corporation or to an alien and one against selling it to a man who has got 640 acres already?

Mr. EVARTS. If I am to go into the whole doctrine of mortmain and of alienage, let us open them. They have no more connection with the notion of forfeiture at common law than the arrangements of the marriage contract or of the statute of wills.

The objection to land in mortmain is disclosed by the term itself, that it is held in a dead hand; that it is held now in the name of corporations by those who do not represent citizenship and cultivation and enterprise. In the old time it was in mortmain, in dead hand, that could not perform the feudal duties attached to tenure of serving the crown or the nobles on the battlefield. Whenever there is any subject about mortmain, whenever there is a talk as to whether we shall limit the land that can be aggregated by this or that or all corporations put together, I will debate that question, and then it will be seen how much we differ.

So too about aggregation. It is said that we have tenancies springing up here. I detest the system. The true system has been that the man who owned the land tilled it. My narrow acres are all tilled by myself, and not a tenant occupies any portion of that humble domain. We have very little of that anywhere at the East; but in the great farms of the West, in the middle West, there has been of course a great increase of that. It is not a desirable condition of things, and not a condition of things in my judgment likely long to endure.

I believe in freedom in discussing the question of these aggregations. I am willing to have any limitations that you please, but I do not want to have it said that the only way we can meet one of the difficulties that attend the disposition of the public domain or of the land system in private hands is to put us all under the condition of forfeiture to the Government itself.

But the subject before the Senate is of the narrowest practical interest. I have nothing to say about it except that as I read the text it seemed to make a perpetual forfeiture hang over these parcels of land from hand to hand. I supposed it was an oversight. When the Senator avowed the purpose, when he avowed it as a plan, I could not but oppose it as frustrating really the purpose of a sale possibly taking place, for it would be an advertisement to every one not to buy.

There are occasions in which conditions are imposed—I mean in the practice of our people. Generally it is done where the grant is a donation and a public use is thus secured; but there is no such custom. I venture to say that you may search the common-law reports of the State of Massachusetts and every New England State, and you will find that the rarest topics of discussion are those which relate to common-law forfeitures. I think you will find as vigorous a line of decisions in this abhorrence of the common law of forfeitures in those New England reports as in the judicial decisions of any portion of our country.

So, sir, while my learned friend from Massachusetts pursues these large discussions of so great interest to the race and to the people of this country, I confine myself to the question whether when you are going to put land up at public vendue, 640 acres, or any more, you are to tell the buyer that he is to hold it under a common-law forfeiture if he buys it at all.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President——

Mr. HOAR. Will the Senator from Mississippi allow me one moment?

Mr. PLUMB. Will both the Senators yield to me to say that there is no subject before the Senate except the tax bill? The amendment has been withdrawn. It would subserve my convenience certainly if debate on a subject which is not before the Senate should be left until some other time in order that the bill may go through.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BLAIR in the chair). The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has the floor.

Mr. HOAR. He will give me one moment?

Mr. GEORGE. Certainly.

Mr. HOAR. I wish to say one word in reply to the Senator from New York. I do not think that the people of this country who are looking to having as the foundation of its society and its institutions the holding of humble homesteads to be tilled by the men who own them, in a fashion very different from that which in the imagination of my honorable friend he says he tills his own, but by the hard labor of the husbandman, will be contented to have the wind of any rhetoric from whatever Æolian harp it may come instead of the solid fact.

The one thing I want to say is just this, that no land the title to which is now within the power of the Government of the United States shall ever hereafter be lawfully conveyed to a man who owns 640 acres already. That is my proposition.

Mr. PLUMB. I can instruct the Senator somewhat on that point. The law of the United States now is that no man who owns 320 acres can obtain any land from the United States.

Mr. HOAR. That is not the point I was talking about. My proposition is that the land now owned by the United States shall never hereafter be conveyed, into whatever it may in the mean time pass, to any person who holds 640 acres already. To answer that proposition by talking about a forfeiture or by talking about the evils of feudalism in the past, seems to me, with due respect to the source from which it comes, mere rhetoric.

The Senator says that the common law of England abhors forfeitures; and it does abhor those forfeitures with which it has done away; but forfeitures based upon this principle, if you give that name to it, forfeitures intended to accomplish the same end or a like end, the common law of England and the policy of England, especially so far as the voice of her workingmen can be heard, favors to-day and always has. That is, it is the policy of England that foreign wealth shall not come in and take up English soil from which English sovereignty is to proceed, and therefore England says that no alien shall own her real estate, and the effect of a deed to an alien is exactly what I propose to have the effect of a deed to the wealthy man who already engrosses 640 acres.

England says that her real estate shall not be conveyed to a corporation which can not die and which can not divide the estate among heirs equally and which shall hold it in the dead hand. The effect of an attempt to do that by any process of conveyance is exactly what I propose to have the effect of the attempt to do this; and when I ask my honorable friend, these two things being exactly the same in principle and undistinguishable as it seems to me, he says that the English law now abhors forfeitures. If it abhors forfeiture where there is an attempt to obtain the land in mortmain to a corporation, or if it abhors forfeiture when there is an attempt to convey the land to an alien, as these 20,000,000 acres of land in the American Territories have already been conveyed within the past ten years to corporations whose shares are owned exclusively by aliens, what is the answer to my proposition? The Senator answers me and says that we shall talk about mortmain and talk about alienage at the proper time!

Mr. EVARTS. Now, Mr. President——

Mr. GEORGE. Does the Senator from New York want to speak?

Mr. PLUMB. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. GEORGE] has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall not detain the Senate long. I am entitled to the floor.

Mr. PLUMB. I am aware that the Senator from Mississippi has the floor, and that has been the trouble all along.

Mr. GEORGE. It has not been the trouble when I had it.

Mr. PLUMB. But I mean the trouble of debating a question which does not concern this bill, and a debate which is going on to the obstruction of most useful legislation. It is that to which I object.

Mr. HOAR. I think the debate is more important than the bill.

Mr. PLUMB. Of course a man who utters as short a speech as the Senator from Massachusetts may think so.

Mr. HOAR. It is not my honorable friend's business whether I make a short speech or a long one.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Order.

Mr. GEORGE. When I get the floor probably I shall proceed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi has the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, this is a very large question which has been precipitated upon the Senate, the most important one I suppose that will or can engage our attention. I do not propose to go into it now. I do not propose to obstruct very long the legislation which the Senator from Kansas desires to have consummated.

In a great deal that has been said by the Senator from Massachusetts about the great accumulations of wealth by individuals and corporations I concur. I know that it is one of the great dangers of our age that not only land but wealth in other forms has accumulated inordinately in the hands of a few. I know that, sir.

I regret to say that in my opinion this large accumulation of wealth in the hands of a few persons both natural and artificial has been not the result of natural causes, not the result of mere individual exertion, but to a very large extent the result of Government policies and Government subsidies. So far as we can correct that by correcting and reversing those policies I think we have jurisdiction to act, and I am willing to act.

It was said by the Senator from New York and also by the Senator from Massachusetts that one of the great fundamental principles of the common law was against the conveyance of real estate in mortmain to corporations. That is true; and England owes much of her glory, much of her greatness, much of the excellence of her free institutions to that principle of the common law. I desire simply to make an application of that principle to the circumstances before us.

In violation of that cherished principle of the common law this Government has granted about 179,000,000 acres of land to corporations, an area twice as large as all the territory of the United Kingdom, including England, Scotland, and Ireland. This great empire, twice as large as the British Empire, excluding her colonies, has been by the action of this Government given in mortmain to corporations. If that be a danger, as I believe it is, to free institutions, to the happiness and the welfare of our people, then I ask the Senator from Massachusetts, who concurs with me in that view, if we had not better act while we have yet the power to retrace our footsteps, and while yet the power remains in us, as it does, to interpose in a constitutional way, in an effectual way? I ask him if we had not better use that power to reclaim this empire, forfeited for non-failure to comply with the conditions of the gift, so that the millions of unsheltered and homeless people in this country may have an opportunity of getting homes?

The Senator from Massachusetts read from an article which he had that there were over a million of tenant agricultural laborers in this country. If the magnificent empire which has been given by the United States in mortmain to corporations was restored to the public domain there would be a shelter and a home for every one of those tenants on land of his own if he chooses to take it.

Mr. President, I desired to say that much, and I will say but a little more. If we really desire that there shall be a fair chance to the American people, to the laboring people of this country, to advance their happiness and welfare here, a fair chance in the struggle for life, then we ought to respond to a sentiment which I believe to be universal all over this land when you go outside of railroad circles, namely, that every power which remains in us, every governmental energy and force which still are in our hands, shall be used speedily and efficaciously to restore for homes to the people the empire to which I have alluded and which we have recklessly granted in mortmain to corporations. This land, so far as the conditions on which it was granted have not been complied with, justly belongs to the people of the United States, and they ought to have it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is still as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. What is the pending question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is on the bill. There is no pending amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I thought there was an amendment pending.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is none pending.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I think that this bill is a very dangerous one, and one which may complicate if it does not effectually embarrass and unsettle the question of forfeiture of the unearned railroad grants. It is true that the bill contains a provision in the third section that the act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enforce the forfeiture of any land so granted. That is a reservation of the power of Congress to declare a forfeiture. But the bill makes the entire grant subject to taxation, and we know very well that after the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts was withdrawn, which, I think, was an impracticable one, the only effect of exposing these lands to sale for taxes would be their purchase by the railroad companies at tax-sales for the purpose of concluding that question.

The bill therefore practically under the guise of taxing lands by the States and Territories may be a bill of confirmation of every acre of this land subject to forfeiture. It is in my opinion a very extraordinary method of even pretending to be a bill for the taxation of these lands by the States and Territories. Under the acts of admission of the several States in which these lands may be there is an exclusion of the power of the State to tax the lands of the United States. Outside of that exclusion the power of a State exists by virtue of its own State organization. Its power of taxation can not be moved by the United States Government, and is not in any way the subject of its control.

The State is absolutely sovereign and independent of any power on the part of the General Government in this respect, and the only manner in which the Congress of the United States can enable the States to tax the property of the United States is by divesting the United States of its title. It can not be subject to taxation otherwise except by the act of Congress imposing its own tax or devoting it to some special purpose. The power of State taxation rests upon anything which is in it of the nature of property excepting only the power excluded of taxing the lands of the United States, and it would be an anomaly and a contradiction and a most awkward, if not an entirely impracticable proceeding, for the United States to confer upon the States the power to tax the property of the United States. That has never been the method in which this Government has proceeded.

Therefore, these lands are not subject to taxation by the State authority and ought not to be unless they are the lands of the railroad company, and when the act of Congress authorizes this taxation to be made either by the States or Territories or otherwise, it may imply that it is the property of the railroad company and not the property of the United States, and the lien from which it is exempted is only the lien for the cost of the surveying and other fees of that description.

It is a peculiar and an extraordinary method of proceeding. As was observed by the Senator from Oregon, the practical method would be to decide whether these lands are the lands of the United States or the lands of the railroad company. That is the only method in which it can be done safely and certainly.

Let us meet this question boldly and decide it either by forfeiting the grant beyond the point of completion at the time fixed by the granting act, as the country demands, or if the Senate will place itself in the way of complying with the demand of the people then let those who are willing to defy the public will vote to confirm the grant.

It has been said that it is desirable that these lands should be in the hands of the people. Instead of this awkward and cumbrous and doubtful method, the only effect of which, notwithstanding this reservation of the power of forfeiture in the Government, may be practically to confirm the title in the railroad company, why not open these lands by the action of Congress now to the homestead settlement of the people?

That will settle the question, that will determine the matter at once, and not only subject the property to the taxation of the States and Territories, but put upon it a race of hardy, industrious, laboring people who are now without homes and without employment. That will relieve much of the present distress, and will let the people know and the railroad companies know to whom the land belongs. If the people who live on these lands are to be placed in the power of the railroad companies and compelled to pay high prices for their lands, let Congress so declare here and now.

For these reasons, unless the bill shall be amended by declaring that the lands covered by it are only those which were earned by the completion of the road within the period specified in the grant, I shall vote against it. I believe every interest of the people demands the immediate forfeiture of this grant beyond the point of completion in 1879, when the grant expired, and its being opened to and settled by actual settlers under the homestead laws without cost to them. This will settle all questions of forfeiture and taxation in the interests of the States and Territories and the people.

Mr. PLUMB. I move to amend the bill by adding to section 3 the following words:

But all the rights of the United States to said lands or to any interest therein, shall be and remain as if this act had not passed, except as to the lien mentioned in the first section hereof.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 1, line 11, after the word "manner," I move to add "by the purchaser;" so as to make the proviso read:

Provided, That any such lands sold for taxes shall be taken by the purchaser subject to the lien for costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, to be paid in such manner by the purchaser as the Secretary of the Interior may by rule provide.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. In section 1, line 4, I move to strike out the word "local" before "taxation;" so as to read:

That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation by States, Territories, &c.

The word "local" may possibly embarrass the clause.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CALL. In section 1, line 4, after the word "Congress," I move to insert the words "which have been earned within the time required by the granting act;" so as to read:

That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress, which have been earned within the time required by the granting act, shall be exempt from taxation by States, Territories, and other municipal corporations on account of the lien of the United States upon the same for the costs of surveying, &c.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

Mr. CALL. I will state my object in offering the amendment. I wish to have the question voted upon. If this is the land of the United States it is not, and ought not to be, subject to taxation by the States and Territories. If it is the land of the railroad company it ought to be subject to taxation; and the amendment is to confine the operation of the bill to that land which we recognize to be the land of the railroad company.

I take it, from the House reports and the action which has been had, that we can all concur, if this body sees fit to do so, in the proposition that the railroad company shall have the lands which were earned within the time specified by the granting acts up to the point of completion at the time required by the granting acts for the grant to expire—or for the completion of the road—after which it is too clear even for a doubt that no right to any part of the grant can exist without another act of Congress creating such a right and conferring title. Let us then deal with the question in the interests of the people and declare the grant forfeited, and not embarrass and complicate the question with a subterfuge like this.

Mr. GEORGE. The fallacy of the position taken by the Senator from Florida lies in this, that when land has been granted upon a condition subsequent, the proprietorship of the land is in the grantee until forfeiture has taken place, and also until the rights of the grantor have been enforced by an act of entry. These lands in law belong to the railroad companies, and the mere right of the United States to enforce the forfeiture, though a very valuable right and if enforced will return the land to the Government, does not prevent them from being liable to taxation before the forfeiture is enforced.

I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Florida to a very familiar principle upon the subject, that when the forfeiture takes place, when entry has been made at common law (and a bill passed by Congress is simply an entry), the entry avoids all incumbrances, all liens, all conveyances, and transfers which may have been made by the grantee or which arose under him prior to that time; or, in other words, it restores to the grantor his rights in the land as fully and perfectly as they existed at the time he parted with the title. So there is nothing incongruous in the idea of taxing the estate or the right, whatever it may be, of the railroad corporations in these lands.

The third section of the bill, as amended on the motion of the Senator from Kansas, removes utterly all doubt that could exist on that subject. If the amendment of the Senator from Florida is adopted it will amount simply to this, if I have read the history of the railroad corporations correctly, that not one acre in five hundred which the railroads have gotten has been earned within the time limited in the acts making the grants, and the bill would simply be inoperative for the want of a subject-matter to which it could apply.

I may add that by this bill the United States do not undertake to tax these lands. The bill merely allows the States and Territories in which they lie to tax them by removing the only obstacle in the way of their doing so. How taxation by a State or Territory can affect the right of the United States I can not see. Besides, strictly and legally speaking, the taxation is on the railroad companies on account of their interest in and title to the land, and not on the land itself. The tax when assessed will be a debt against the railroad company, and any property which it owns will be liable to seizure and sale to pay it. If the land is sold to pay the tax, then under the bill, whatever interest the railroad company has in the land will be sold and nothing more. The third section of the bill is an absolute, specific security against any transfer of the title or interest of the United States by any such sale.

Mr. CALL. I appreciate the points of law of the Senator from Mississippi. I am very well satisfied that this is not an estate vested in any grantee; it is an estate which is in the United States, because the condition has never been performed upon which the land was proposed to be granted; but I do not propose to argue that point and to open all those questions.

This is a correct amendment, for the reason that whatever may be the law, whether the land is in the railroad company or not, it should not be taxed if we propose to forfeit it. The railroad company should not be required to pay taxes upon that land which we do not intend it to possess and own.

Mr. GEORGE. Will the Senator allow me to interrupt him for a minute right there?

Mr. CALL. Certainly.

Mr. GEORGE. When a man holds land by deed subject to forfeiture by condition subsequent up to the time of entry by the grantor for condition broken it is his. He can use it; he can keep everybody else out of it; he can rent it; he can plant it; he can cultivate it; he can take timber from it; he can do anything he pleases with it. Because there is a condition which may never be enforced during the time in which his proprietorship is undisputed and absolute against everybody in the world, except the right of entry on the part of the grantor, why should he be exempt from the ordinary burdens imposed upon every property-holder to help support the Government? Suppose I were to grant to the Senator from Florida a thousand acres of land upon a condition-subsequent, who is to pay the taxes on that? He is in possession; he can sue any man for trespass who goes upon it; he can maintain an action of ejectment against any man who ejects him from it; he can cultivate it; he can sell it; he can mortgage it; he can do anything with it that an absolute proprietor can do, and thus clothed with all these indicia of right and of ownership, why should he be exempted from taxation just because his title is not complete?

Mr. CALL. The difference is between technical deductions of law and fact. It might be that where property has become the undisputed subject of taxation and been so for some time and has been transferred to other hands, the tax should be borne by the person in whom the legal title was vested. That is not the case with these railroad grants. They were grants of large territories of unoccupied lands, and to a great extent they are now unoccupied. They have been reserved from actual settlement for the purpose of having the conditions of the grant complied with. They have been reserved awaiting the action of Congress, and the title to them rests, except the mere naked legal fiction that words conveying a present interest are operative to vest the interest, whatever it is, created by the law, subject to the conditions of the law, in the United States alone. For all practical purposes the title remains in the Government.

These lands have never been subject to taxation. They were granted for a great public purpose; they are the lands of the United States. Whatever legal fictions may be declared or exist in regard to these matters, the fact is that it is a part of the public domain excluded from taxation by a compact between the States and the Federal Government, and granted to certain public agencies in the shape of corporations for conditional objects, the completion of certain lines of road within a designated time. In that condition of things, with the question of forfeiture pressed upon us by the united voice of the people of this country of all parties, with the necessity on the part of the people for homestead settlement and cultivation, with this question easily to be settled by saying whether we will or will not forfeit these lands, we propose to pass a bill subjecting them to State and Territorial taxation.

If they are not the lands of the railroad company, if it is intended to forfeit them, we should not tax them; we have no right to tax them. If they are not the lands of the railroad company the objects of the bill are to be immediately attained by passing an act opening the lands to homestead settlement and inviting the people of the country to go upon them. This would subject them to State and Territorial taxation and at the same time settle the question. But the passage of the bill will embarrass the question, and may be a confirmation in disguise of the title of these lands to great corporations, and you can not prevent it by any amendment to the bill which will reserve the legal power of forfeiture in the Congress of the United States. It may become a method of giving two or three hundred millions of dollars, to be paid out of the toil and suffering of the men, women, and children who are to cultivate these lands, to a few individuals. I am not in favor of using the powers conferred on us for this purpose or to this end.

Mr. GEORGE. I call for the reading of the third section of the bill as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The third section of the bill will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enforce a forfeiture of any lands so granted. But all the rights of the United States to said lands, or to any interest therein, shall be and remain as if this act had not passed, except as to the lien mentioned in the first section hereof.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Florida [Mr. CALL].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. BLAIR. Mr. President, when the bill first came on to discussion, now more than a month since, I proposed an amendment, the same in its nature as that which was offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. HOAR], excepting that the amount of ownership in a single individual derived by a tax-sale under the provisions of the bill should be limited to 320 acres of agricultural land, and to not exceeding 640 acres of any other description. Understanding that the Senator from Massachusetts was to press his amendment at a later time, I withdrew or indicated a purpose to withhold my own. Since he has abandoned the whole matter, I do not propose to renew it in that form.

I did, however, give notice at the same time of an intention to move as an amendment to the bill the provisions of Senate bill No. 1495, which I introduced at an early stage of the session and which was referred to the Committee on Public Lands, a bill which covered the entire question as to the amount of the parcels in which the public domain should now and forever hereafter be disposed of, as from time to time the title of the country to its domain should be parted with; and also restricting the lands to an ownership of no greater amount than the original parcels for all time in perpetuity, and providing that the patents, the original title from the United States, should recite this provision, and that the provision should appear forever afterward in the conveyances between parties.

I had designed to move that bill as an amendment to this measure, and now that the matter has been discussed considerably, if the Senator from Kansas who has the bill in charge and who is the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands would feel like taking the matter up and disposing of it in connection with this bill, I should be very glad indeed to have him do so.

As it is a very great question, I am not disposed to press the amendment for consideration at this time against his objection, but I submit to him and to all who entertain the views which have been expressed here with scarcely any opposition that it is exceedingly desirable, if a policy of this kind restricting the holdings of the now public domain forever hereafter to a limitation is to be adopted at all with reference to any of the public domain, it should be adopted at this time with reference to the great amount of land the control of which in the future will slip through our fingers if this bill should become a law.

It is said that about 200,000,000 acres have been granted in the way of assistance to the construction of railroads in this country. Almost 50,000,000 acres were granted a single road, the Northern Pacific road, which probably more than any other will be affected by the provisions of the bill. That is one-fourth part of the amount of available agricultural domain which is supposed to be now in the possession of the United States itself and open for homestead settlement in future.

It must be at once apparent to the chairman of the committee and to the Senate that if the policy, which seems to be almost unanimously concurred in, of limiting to small holdings so much of the public domain as is still within our control for the future is to prevail at all, it ought to be adopted now when we are practically disposing of our control of so large an amount of it.

As I said before, I do not like to press this measure against the sense of the chairman of the committee. I will send the proposed amendment to the Secretary's desk that it may be read. I design it to be in the form of additional sections. I send up the original Senate bill 1495.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment proposed by the Senator from New Hampshire will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. It is proposed to add to the bill the following additional sections:

SEC. —. That no natural person or persons or partnership shall hereafter acquire, hold, or own, either by virtue of the laws relating to the disposition of the public lands, or by grant, assignment, purchase, descent, or by any other method by which title to land may be acquired, more than 320 acres of agricultural lands nor more than 640 acres of any description of lands which shall belong to the public domain, on or after the passage of this act; and hereafter all patents and evidences of title to any portion of the public domain to which this act shall apply shall recite the provisions hereof.

SEC. —. That all lands acquired, held, or owned in violation of the provisions of this act shall be forfeited to the United States, and it shall be the duty of the Attorney-General to enforce every such forfeiture by due process of, law.

Mr. BLAIR. In this connection I desire further to say that there is in the possession of the Senate, in one of the published documents of the country, the testimony taken by the Committee on Education and Labor upon the relations between labor and capital, a vast amount of information upon the great evil of absenteeism, landlordism, and the result of immense land holdings in certain individuals or in certain titles. There is in that document a great amount of information bearing on this subject, and if Senators have occasion to examine the matter I think they will be satisfied that there is but very little to be said in opposition to an amendment of the kind which I have proposed to the bill.

I do not wish to undertake to go into anything like a lengthy discussion of the matter, but I have thought it would be well for me to send to the desk and have read a newspaper article, but which I know to be substantially true. It is only an illustration in a single instance of an evil which is already pressing upon the country, and which is felt and suffered even in some of the older States of the Union. It is in the form of a communication to the New York World, and by saying that I know it to be substantially true I do not mean to call in question the accuracy of the New York World as an authority upon questions generally, but simply to say that this is only one instance of a great many which the investigations of the committee brought to light and the truth of which they corroborate. I ask the Chief Clerk to read so much of the article as I have indicated, omitting the irrelevant matter which I have erased.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire asks leave to have the paper sent to the desk read. If there be no objection it will be read.

Mr. PLUMB. I will ask the Senator from New Hampshire if it would not answer his purpose as well to have it put into the RECORD and save the time of reading?

Mr. BLAIR. No; I can read it myself, it is short.

Mr. PLUMB. Then I have no objection to its being read at the desk.

Mr. BLAIR. I do not care to have the whole of the article read. I have indicated the parts I desire to have read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The paper will be read.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

THE IRISH LAND-MISER—HOW WILLIAM SCULLY ACQUIRED TWO HUNDRED THOUSAND ACRES OF WESTERN LANDS.

LITTLE BRITAIN, N. Y., May 5.

The publicity recently given to the rack-renting practices of William Scully, the Irish absentee landlord, of thousands of acres of Western lands has attracted much attention here. Mr. Charles Reynders, of this place, related to a World correspondent to-day some facts that throw an important and interesting light on Scully's character and the results of the system he has imported.

"I spent a long time with the Scully tenants, or 'renters' as they are called, in the summer of 1882," said Mr. Reynders. "It was in Logan County, Illinois," he continued, "that Scully laid the foundations of his present fortune. Immediately after the Mexican war he began buying up soldiers' homestead warrants. For these he paid extremely little, as he went to work very quietly and systematically, buying from men who either remained in the Army or returned to occupations in the large cities, which indicated their indisposition to become pioneer farmers in what was then a wild region of country. In more than one instance, it is said, he secured a 160-acre tract for $5 or $10. He has never sold an acre of all the land thus acquired. On the contrary, it has been made the means of wringing from the hard hands of a large peasant tenantry by any indirection all that their daily toil might produce above a wretched subsistence year in and year out. He is virtually as much master of about a thousand of these human toilers as the pharaohs were of the Egyptian slaves whose lives were sacrificed in building the pyramids, and their condition is little better than that of the wretched fellaheen of to-day, who are compelled to labor unceasingly through a miserable existence to provide for the extravagance of successive khédives.

Scully's rents are adjusted according to the quality of the land, but in no case are they low enough to leave the cultivators more than enough to keep body and soul together. These are mostly men with families, and without capital, who rent the land in the vain hope of being able to save enough in a few years to enable them to become purchasers of other land and establish comfortable homes. Instead of this they usually find themselves worse off at the end of five or six years than they were at the beginning, with their labor mortgaged to pay arrears of rent. Besides the rental the tenant is obliged to pay all taxes and other charges on the land, and to make his own improvements, no indemnity being allowed. In the city of Lincoln Scully has several agents to watch and report on crop prospects, secure prompt payment of rents, and see to the exact observance of the iron-clad leases. His agents make much of the assertion that Scully's rents are reduced when the crops fail. This, however, is only partially true. For every such "reduction" the tenant is charged with the deficiency and obliged to make it up in the next good season. The astute landlord does not try to extract blood from a stone.

Having been bought up in small parcels here and there, Scully's lands often adjoin farms owned by those who live on them, and the contrast is striking. A squatter's shanty in Harlem is a palace compared to the squalid huts of the renters. On the other hand, the dwellings of the owners of adjoining farms are, as a rule, well-built, tasteful, and comfortable houses that indicate the prosperous industry of the American farmer.

* * * * * * *

From his lands in Logan County alone he derives an annual rental of nearly $150,000. The pitiable condition of the people under this system is likely soon to result in decided action. While I was in the neighborhood there was no little talk of bringing forward a measure in the Legislature to forfeit the lands to the State, paying Scully a fair indemnification, and allowing his tenants to become proprietors by a system of small payments extending over ten years. This is somewhat on the plan of Gladstone's land bill for Ireland, and much trouble might be avoided by adopting some such scheme before it is too late.

Mr. BLAIR. It is apparent from that and other like instances that the evils apprehended are already realized; they are an existing factor in the affairs of this country; and legislation to be of any avail ought to be made applicable to the comparatively small pittance of our public domain which still remains under our control. There is scope enough for the evil among the lands the title to which is already vested in private individuals, beyond our action probably, and probably beyond that of the power of the States, certainly until in some dire extremity there be a resort to revolution or something like it. And I appeal once more to the Senator from Kansas to know whether he will object to my moving or himself moving this amendment at the present time on the present bill.

Mr. PLUMB. If this bill is to go through it must go through as a measure for the taxation of railroad lands and not as a measure for gathering together all the other things we think we would like to have done. I hope the Senate will stand by this bill, if not in its present shape at all events as a bill for the accomplishment of one purpose, and not bring up a question of this kind, which will undoubtedly lead to long debate, in which the subjects will get inextricably mixed. If the Senator is zealous about his bill, as I have no doubt he is, he will have ample opportunity to get it before the Senate as a substantive measure, when it can be considered on its own merits and not be embarrassed by the consideration of the tax measure at the same time and not embarrass in its turn the measure now before the Senate.

Mr. BLAIR. I ask the Senator if he believes his construction of the bill as it is before the Senate is such that if there be a failure to interpose this safeguard at the present time there will be any difficulty in doing it by subsequent legislation?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not think there will, but there are a great many other bills to which it can be hitched, and as this bill has been experimented with considerably, I hope the Senator will not desire to make further experiments.

Mr. BLAIR. As I said, I do not wish to press any amendment against the judgment of the chairman. I do not wish to embarrass the bill, but I think this is a measure to be attended to by substantive legislation very soon.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is withdrawn.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. VANCE. I ask for the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. VAN WYCK. Before the vote is taken on the final passage of the bill, in order that the bill may be accelerated in its passage in the other House I ask unanimous consent to move it as an amendment to a House bill upon the same subject. Therefore I move that this bill be substituted after the enacting clause of House bill 5874.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us see what that is.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That can only be done by unanimous consent or by postponing the present bill and taking up the House bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let the House bill be read for information.

Mr. VAN WYCK. If there is objection I move to take up the House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska can make such a motion.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the Committee on Public Lands be discharged from the further consideration of House bill 5874, and that it be taken up for consideration for the purpose of substituting for it the Senate bill we are about to pass.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let us hear the House bill read for information, if that is the motion.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Have not the yeas and nays been ordered on the Senate bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been ordered on the passage of the bill, but it is still in the competence of any Senator to move that the Senate take up any other bill pending the consideration of the present bill. That, the Chair understands, is the motion of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. EDMUNDS. On that question I ask that the bill proposed to be taken up be read for information.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be read.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act, but before concluding was interrupted by Mr. EDMUNDS. I do not myself ask that it be read any more.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is, Will the Senate proceed to the consideration of the House bill referred to, discharging the Committee on Public Lands from its further consideration?

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider House bill No. 5874.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the bill just read and insert Senate bill 1812, as amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska moves to amend by striking out all after the enacting clause and inserting what will be read.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senate bill having just passed to a third reading, it need not be read.

Mr. INGALLS. It had better be read as amended.

The Chief Clerk read the words proposed to be inserted, as follows:

That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation by States, Territories, and other municipal corporations on account of the lien of the United States upon the same for the costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying the same, or because no patent has been issued therefor; but this provision shall not apply to lands unsurveyed: Provided, That any such lands sold for taxes shall be taken by the purchaser subject to the lien for costs of surveying, selecting, and conveying, to be paid in such manner by the purchaser as the Secretary of the Interior may by rule provide, and to all liens of the United States, all mortgages of the United States, and all rights of the United States in respect of such lands: Provided further, That this act shall apply only to lands situated opposite to and conterminous with completed portions of said roads, and in organized counties: Provided further, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as now provided by the laws relating thereto.

SEC. 2. That if any railroad corporation required by law to pay the costs of surveying, selecting, or conveying any lands granted to such company or for its use and benefit by act of Congress shall for thirty days neglect or refuse to pay any such costs after demand for payment thereof by the Secretary of the Interior, he shall notify the Attorney-General, who shall at once commence proceedings to collect the same, but when any sum shall be collected of such railroad company as costs of surveying, selecting and conveying any tract of land which shall have been purchased under the provisions of section 1 hereof, the Secretary of the Interior shall out of such collection reimburse said purchaser, his heirs or assigns, the amount of money paid by him as the costs of such surveying, selecting, and conveying.

SEC. 3. That this act shall not affect the right of the Government to declare or enforce a forfeiture of any lands so granted, but all the rights of the United States to said lands or to any interest therein shall be and remain as if this act had not passed except as to the lien mentioned in the first section hereof.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that the last proviso of section 1 may be amended by striking out the word "now" where it occurs in connection with the words "provided by the laws," &c. It might be construed to carry into this bill by reference the present existing land laws, which may be hereafter amended.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The amendment is open to amendment.

Mr. INGALLS. I suggest that the word "other," before "municipal corporations," in line 5 of section 1, be stricken out. The use of the word "other" there would imply that a State or Territory was a municipal corporation, which I suppose is not the case.

Mr. PLUMB. I ask unanimous consent that that word be stricken out.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The modifications proposed will be read.

The CHIEF CLERK. In the last line of the last proviso of section 1 it is proposed to strike out the word "now;" so as to read:

Provided further, That at any sale of lands under the provisions of this act the United States may become a preferred purchaser, and in such case the lands sold shall be restored to the public domain and disposed of as provided by the laws relating thereto.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. PLUMB. I now move to strike out the word "other," in line 5 of the first section, before the word "municipal;" so as to read:

That no lands granted to any railroad corporation by any act of Congress shall be exempt from taxation by States, Territories, and municipal corporations, &c.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

Mr. CALL. I do not know what is in that House bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has all been stricken out.

Mr. HARRIS. The House bill has been stricken out and the Senate bill inserted.

Mr. CALL. It is very singular legislation.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I desire to amend the title by striking out the title of the House bill and inserting that of Senate bill 1812; so as to read: "A bill to provide for taxation of railroad-grant lands, and for other purposes."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAN WYCK. I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and ask for a committee of conference with the House of Representatives on this bill.

The motion was agreed to; and by unanimous consent the President pro tempore was authorized to appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

Mr. MORRILL. I desire to inquire what has become of the bill of which we recently reached the third reading?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection Senate bill 1812 will be indefinitely postponed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 6975) to establish additional life-saving stations; and it was thereupon signed by the President pro tempore.

POST-OFFICE APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. PLUMB. I present to the Senate the conference report on the Post-Office appropriation bill. It is not my intention to call it up now, but I ask that it lie on the table, and I will state for the information of Senators that it will not probably be called up until some time next week. Several Senators have notified me of their desire to speak upon the subject of the principal disagreement between the two Houses.

The report is as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5887) "making appropriations for the service of the Post-Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887," having met, after full and free conference have been unable to agree.

P. B. PLUMB,
WM. MAHONE,
JAS. B. BECK,
Managers on the part of the Senate.

JAMES H. BLOUNT,
J. M. RIGGS,
HENRY H. BINGHAM,
Managers on the part of the House.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish that the conference report be printed?

Mr. PLUMB. I do not care about having it printed. There is nothing in it but a simple disagreement as to all the amendments. Sometime during the latter part of next week, probably, I shall call it up and at a time when it will answer the convenience of Senators who desire to speak on the subject.

Mr. BECK. As one of the conferees, I hope the Senator from Kansas will give us one day's notice before he calls it up.

Mr. PLUMB. I propose to give at least two days' notice to the Senate.

CONSULAR AND DIPLOMATIC APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. The Committee on Appropriations instruct me to report the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, with sundry amendments.

INDIAN TRADERSHIPS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair announces the appointment of the following Senators as the Select Committee on Indian Traderships: Mr. WILSON of Iowa, Mr. TELLER, Mr. SPOONER, Mr. HARRIS, and Mr. WILSON of Maryland.

Mr. SPOONER. I understand the Chair has announced me as one of the committee to investigate the Indian traderships.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Yes, sir.

Mr. SPOONER. I shall be obliged to ask to be excused from service upon that committee. It will be impossible for me to give attention to it with the engagements I have made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin asks to be excused from service upon the Committee on Indian Traderships. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator is excused.

Mr. WILSON, of Iowa. My name was announced at the head of that committee. When the resolution was introduced I stated that I had no personal knowledge of the facts involved, but that the subject belonged properly to the jurisdiction of the Committee on Indian Affairs. I would very cheerfully, however, discharge the duty which service upon that committee would impose upon me if it were practicable for me to do so; but I have about all the committee work now that I can attend to during the session, and afterward I have engagements which will require my attention during the vacation. I therefore ask to be excused from service on that committee.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa asks to be excused from service upon the Committee on Indian Traders. If there be no objection the order excusing him will be made.

Mr. TELLER. I desire to prefer the same request. I do not see that I have any time to give to this special subject, and I do not think it is a subject for a special committee. I think it is a subject for the standing committee of this body on Indian Affairs. That committee arrogates to itself a good deal; and when there is a little labor I think that committee ought to discharge it. I think there is where the inquiry should have gone, and there is where I understood it did go; but it seems that I was mistaken.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Committee on Indian Affairs reported the resolution substituting a select committee to be appointed by the Chair for the standing committee.

Mr. TELLER. It will be utterly impossible for me to discharge any duties in that direction.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs made the report without any desire to shirk any duty that properly belongs to it. The Committee on Indian Affairs found itself in a position where it could not discharge this duty for the very reasons that the Senators who are appointed upon this committee have indicated to the Senate and which have been considered by the Senate sufficient reasons for excusing them. Each member of the Committee on Indian Affairs found himself as having made engagements, like the Senator from Wisconsin, for the vacation, which render it impossible for them to discharge this duty.

There was no desire to either disparage the duty itself or to shirk any labor proper to be performed by that committee. It is well known that that committee has devoted its vacations for four or five years to duties which they have not sought themselves but which have been devolved upon them, so that while other Senators have had the opportunity to discharge other engagements during the vacation, that committee has found itself employed during the whole vacation upon matters that the Senate, without their seeking and in many instances against their entreaty, have imposed upon them. Now members of the committee find themselves in this situation, and that is the sole reason why they have asked that a special committee of the Senate should take this duty off their hands.

It is due to the Commissioner of Indian Affairs that I should say in this connection that since the reference of the resolution to the Committee on Indian Affairs he has addressed a letter to the committee which indicates that he feels, after the introduction of this matter upon the statements made, that it is due to him and to his usefulness as an official of this Government that in good faith and thoroughly and impartially this investigation should be carried on. It can not be carried on in the opinion of the Committee on Indian Affairs by that committee; and that is the reason they reported it back to the Senate and asked that a special committee having no other duty upon it should devote itself to that work.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question pending.

Mr. TELLER. I asked to be excused from service.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That makes a question. The Senator from Colorado asks to be excused from service on the select committee. If there be no objection that order will be made.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

Mr. EVARTS. I move that the Chinese indemnity bill which was under discussion yesterday and this morning shall be now taken up with a view of finishing it.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, I have no desire to detain the Senate long from a vote on this bill. I hope that it may be brought to a vote at this sitting and without a very prolonged debate; certainly I shall occupy but a very brief time.

It came in my way as Secretary of State early to take up for deliberate and responsible consideration the relations between this country and its Government and the Chinese population here and the Chinese Government. I then formed the opinion that the interests of the United States required that Chinese immigration, as it was called, really presented no conformity with, in fact no similarity to, the immigration that we have been hospitable to through the whole history of this country, and which I hoped, so far as my opinions went, would never be changed.

Without insisting upon the traits of this discrimination to which I have adverted, I formed the opinion that the coming of the Chinese as they were here and as they were expected to be if the country was still open to them, was more properly the condition of importation or of invasion than of immigration. I have therefore from the beginning and have acted from the beginning on the opinion that the arrangements existing under the former treaties ought to be changed, and took the lead therefore in a commission that brought about the treaty of 1880. That treaty still left remaining in this country the Chinese population that had come here under the Burlingame treaty, and the question therefore was of the right acquired by this Government to regulate the condition of the Chinese here, how that was properly to be administered in conformity with the concession and the terms found in the new treaty.

We have just disposed of a bill of very thorough and comprehensive application and action, that is to carry out in the interests of the people of this country, as I regard them, the administration of the continued population now here of that race and of that nation. We are now to confront another element of importance in the relations between the Chinese Empire and this country, between the Government of this country and the government of China, and that is the relations arising out of the deplorable massacre and violence and spoliation in a Territory of the United States which was practiced without any other provocation that I know of than the fact that these poor victims were Chinese, subjects of the Empire of China. Their presence, their toleration became offensive to another portion of our population then locally intermixed with them, who were rivaling in the industries for which they were competing.

It has been said—it was said by you, Mr. President—that none of those engaged in these violences were citizens of the United States. They were persons subject to the laws of the United States; they were persons for whose conduct we were responsible as much as we were for that of native or of naturalized citizens. We exert our power and extend our authority over all that are within our territory and subject to the general dominion of our power and of our laws. We are to treat this, therefore, in dealing with China, as if this was the act of the people of the United States.

Nor can we draw any distinction as toward China or toward the emperor between the circumstances under which these Chinese were here, nor of the particular occasion or opportunity for division, for disagreement, for rivalry, for hatred, and for the pursuit of wrath. They were entitled to as much protection as if they had been subjects of Great Britain or citizens of France. They were under the same law; we had the same power; and we do not lower our authority in the presence of any difficulties or dangers on this land.

There comes then under these circumstances first the dignity of the occurrence. It was not an ordinary mob; it was not a temporary excitement or perturbation of spirit unconnected with the carrying out of a purpose. This was a violence against the Chinese who were here in the peace of our laws, under our Government, under our Constitution, and under the late relations of almost the extreme of comity and concession which had been accorded by the Chinese Government in accommodating to our occasions the treaty of 1880 in disparity from the Burlingame treaty. There was also an indication that, relieved from its asperities, most of the resentments, most of the competitions of our people had passed away. There was only this remnant that was to be dealt with, and that were to pass out of our territory never to return, or if to return at all, under the restrictions that identified them.

This was what fairly may be called a massacre, a disgrace to any community where it occurs, and a disgrace to any power or government that does not punish the offenders and reinstate the injury. I do not qualify that in any term or word. That occurrence was a disgrace to the community where it occurred; it is a disgrace to the United States Government and power if it can not punish, if it can not resent, and if it can not repair.

Now the scene of this outrage and violence was not disparaged or encumbered by any of the difficulties under our Constitution of direct authority within the States. This was in our own territory, our own local government. There were no laws prevalent in that community but the laws of the United States of America either by direct legislation or by legislation called into power directly by this Government and exercised within our own territory.

The history shows that for these fifteen murders and this list of less serious injuries and of spoliation of these poor people, counting by a hundred or so and culminating only in the sum of $147,000, nobody has been punished and no restitution has been made. If it was then a crime of excitement on the part of the mob, it was a crime either of indifference or of imbecility on the part of the Government there. If it was a crime of imbecility and indifference on the part of authorities there, then those who represented the power of this great Government should themselves have been punished and themselves removed from position. And thus in all relations that prevail between nations we stand as the power responsible for the transaction, not in its origin, but for the transaction as it has been treated, or as it has proceeded since it occurred.

I have now to say but a word about the distinction between the relations between this country and the western powers, and the relations between this and the western powers and the Oriental, or, as they are generally called, non-Christian nations. Between Great Britain and ourselves there is what we may call an absolute unity in the habits of government and administration of law; not merely that we have the same common law and the same system of trials of fact and of control of judicial matters; but we have the same habits of feeling, and we know exactly how far and how close may be the excesses that are possible in the administration of justice which will occur to the disgrace of its administration in any community for a moment or under extraordinary circumstances. So with the Continental nations; we have the same religion, the same race, the same institutions, the same humanity, the same amenities, and we do not hesitate to understand that when our citizens or their subjects or citizens are in the country of another, we submit them and expect them to be submitted to the ordinary fate that belong to the administration of affairs as governing and protecting the safety and security of the population.

In our dealings with the Oriental or non-Christian nations, including Turkey, we have never been willing to stand upon those footings. We have never been willing that our citizens, when sojourners in those countries, were to be treated as subject to their laws. Extraterritorial protection of our people in providing tribunals and methods of trial and protection have been insisted upon and are governed by our treaties.

Now when it comes to a question between China and the United States, with this transaction present between them for observation and criticism and judgment of these two nations concerning this identical transaction and in the judgment of all the nations of the world, how are we to meet this situation under this responsibility so direct of this Government, except to deal with it upon the same terms that we have insisted upon from those nations? We in advance have said, "We will claim exemption and extraterritorial jurisdiction for our citizens in their rights and in their trials; we have refused that to you;" and now putting it upon a ground of superiority in our laws, in our humanity, in our cultivation of all Christian and all benevolent relations, we ask you to receive from us the cold answer of diplomacy that all people are safe here and the laws protect, and the laws punish, and the laws redress!

Our Government has been called upon in regard to Turkey, and Japan, and China, to exact indemnity for outrages that had been perpetrated at the cost and injury of our citizens, our missionaries, our merchants, our travelers. We have done it and have not hesitated to do it, regarding it as a charge for which those governments were responsible although the acts complained of proceeded from no act either of the Japanese or of the Chinese or of the Turkish Government. I do not mean that all the cases were of this kind, but all cases falling within that condition. We have said that we do not occupy the same relation, we do not recognize that the administration of justice or of punishment or the rules of protection are the same with you that they are with us. But diplomatically the answer must be made to the Chinese as I had occasion to make it in the instance of the Colorado violence, which was fortunately much less and much better administered in the way of redress and protection than in this case—the diplomatic answer is the same, and that is that when persons are within a foreign country and there are laws and courts of justice and violence has sprung out of the ground, as it were, and victims have fallen among your sojourning population the fate is the same as it would be upon our own people; our laws punish with severity all such crimes; our laws protect by police against the perpetration of such crimes, and your people while within the borders of our territory must submit to the same fate with ours. And this we say to these Oriental or non-Christian nations with the same tone with which we deny to them the same answer on their part when violence and massacre or violence and spoliation spring out of the ground also in their territories, not by the act of the government. We insist upon indemnity and have exacted it over and over again.

There is, therefore, no inconsistency in the view which I presented of the relations by which the executive government were held to a recognition of responsibility from that position which I now take and in the concurrence that Mr. Blaine when Secretary of State did me the honor to present in his own letter and that the present Secretary of State has also done. There is no difference whatever in the view all of us presented in this diplomatic relation and that which we—I at least and the present Secretary of State—have occasion now to consider.

What is, then, the relation we are in? As against any of the Western nations, when the administration of justice by them, although they have the same laws, the same system, the same freedom, the same submission to the supremacy of jury trials, &c.—when there is an instance of a great, noticeable, undeniable violence and spoliation that has been followed by an actual indifference of the ordinary administration of justice and the obstruction and the indifference put wholly on the ground that our race and our nationality was the occasion of the violence and the occasion of the indifference, we have not been disposed to submit to an answer that the laws are equal and the situation is the same.

What then should be our attitude toward China, for we need not discuss it as applicable to other nations nor as furnishing a rule for action herafter? It is this: Although ex debito justitiæ we can not admit that it is a rule of responsibility, yet every nation recognizes that it hears with respect and attention whatever may touch the heart and the feeling and the duty of a foreign nation and may properly be presented to the heart, the feeling, and the duty of our nation; and that is, whether on pre-existing obligations or not, and as a matter of diplomatic recognition of responsibility that the executive government undertakes. When it is thus presented to us we will look at the features and the circumstances and the relations of the actual transaction. And I apprehend that whatever divergence of opinion or feeling there may be as to whether there should be an actual unanimity in making this indemnity, I think all will agree that the circumstances of this transaction will be, in the judgment of the people of this country, objects of future consideration, of future record, if we have done what we can to obliterate the disgrace to our Government on the subject of there having been no punishment and no reparation in a Territory where our Government has direct authority.

All will agree that China has a right to be stirred in the breasts of all that mass of population and may affect the great statesmen and the great rulers of that friendly nation, and our people have a right to be stirred; and they have a right not to submit themselves to the final disposition of a local community where the neighbors will not prosecute and will not convict and will not punish for these outrages. This Government itself by whatever regulation of absolute obligation may subsist, our people must rescue itself from this foul blot of violence and turbulence, and this fouler blot of the indifference of our communities.

It is in this view, Mr. President, that I have chosen to present this case, because of the course of the Chinese minister in the discussion of diplomatic views which have been brought to attention.

I am told that in the other House, as matter of argument in favor of this indemnity, some reference has been made to the attitude taken by the counsel of this Government in the insistence and prosecution of its rights against Great Britain for the injuries that we suffered by the spoliation of our commerce by the escaped cruisers. It is quite true that within the scope of that argument thus raised between nation and nation, under no pre-existing obligations of recognized and stipulated force and operation, the answer there made that they had laws and they were laws of freedom and that they could not arrest and they could not intervene except on the principles of the common law and of adequate evidence before they could be called upon to exercise their power, and that the escape of the cruisers, therefore, was to be treated as one of those misfortunes that must happen under the exercise of these liberal views in the administration of justice.

It is true that that answer was met on our part by the position that as toward us they were bound to maintain neutrality, and if that neutrality could not be preserved under proper obligations to us except according to such domestic and municipal regulations as they thought were of advantage to themselves, this violation of neutrality and these outrages upon us could not be perpetrated upon us at our expense for the benefit of their domestic affairs. It appears to me that when a nation comes to act, as it does not under pre-existing obligations, but of its own motion, of its own sense of what it should do as belonging from one great nation to another great friendly nation toward whom more than ever presently we should show a disposition both of justice and of regard, in a case never likely to occur between other nations with more striking obligations than in the particular relations between these two great governments, we must concur that the grant of this indemnity from the Treasury, asked for by the executive government and now submitted to the action of the Senate, should receive, I should hope, almost a unanimous support.

Mr. CALL. Mr. President, I wish to make a few observations upon this bill.

This has been one of the most grievous outrages ever committed in our country or in any other. It is a barbarism which it is impossible for language to describe. I read a very short extract taken from a paper published in the county where this outrage occurred:

A look around the scenes of the previous day's work revealed some terrible sights Thursday morning. In the smoking cellar of one Chinese house the blackened bodies of three Chinamen were seen. Three others were in the cellar of another, and four more bodies were found near by. From the position of some of the bodies it would seem as if they had began to dig a hole in the cellar to hide themselves. But the fire overtook them when about half way in the hole, burning their lower extremities to a crisp and leaving the upper portion of the body untouched. At the east end of Chinatown another body was found, charred by the flames and mutilated by hogs. The smell that arose from the smoking ruins was horribly suggestive of burning flesh. Farther east were the bodies of four more Chinamen, shot down in their flight; one of them had tumbled over the bank, and lay in the creek with face upturned and distorted. Still further another Chinaman was found, shot through the hips, but still alive. He had been shot just as he came to the bank, and had fallen over and lay close to the edge of the bank. He was taken up town and cared for by Dr. Woodruff. Besides this two others were seriously wounded, and many who got away were more slightly hurt. The trains to-day have picked up a large number of Chinamen on the track and taken them west.

[From Salt Lake Tribune.]

AT ROCK SPRINGS—A SPECIAL TRIBUNE REPRESENTATIVE ON THE GROUND.

After the massacre on September 2, the bodies of twenty-five Chinese were gathered and buried on a portion of the burnt district. The bodies were exhumed and placed in coffins, and given burial in the Chinese cemetery, while the Government directors were here, and they had an opportunity to see the ghastly remains. Probably no more horrible mortuary scene ever presented itself to man than this. Trunks and limbs of human beings, showing the work of fire-arms, knives, bludgeons, and of fire, mingled in one mass of putrefaction when all had been gathered together. On many the skulls were mashed in and brains protruded. Regarding the number killed, and who have perished from fright and starvation, or died from their wounds, it is doubtful whether the full list will ever be made known, but it is known that twenty-five have been buried; that in all forty-eight are missing, including these twenty-five, and it is believed that fifteen are dead in the hills. One Chinaman, who came in after living out several days, reports that two of his comrades died, and before he left them the coyotes had begun to devour the bodies. This is probably one incident in a half dozen or more. The Chinaman who reported this when he came in was so nearly famished that he lay down by a tub and drank as if he never would be able to quench his dreadful thirst, and, being wounded in his foot, went away for treatment, and can not now be found.

This is a very small part of the description of this most cowardly outrage upon humanity as well as upon the laws and upon the treaty obligations of this Government to protect these Chinese. It has been argued that there was no obligation on the part of this Government to do more than give to these people the usual remedy of access to the courts, to the judicial authorities. I do not so understand the relations that one government sustains to another. For a thousand years the traveler who goes beyond the jurisdiction of his country and enters into the sovereignty of another has been followed by the power of his government, and to that alone does he look for protection. It is true that he has the right to appeal to the judicial authority; but suppose that, as is generally the case and as is recognized by international law, protection has not been thus afforded to him, who is there to hold the foreign government amenable? Who throws protection around the citizen except the sovereignty under whose flag and under whose power he has gone abroad? Whose obligation is it to secure the peace of the Commonwealth and protect the people from organized violence? It is the Government's, and foreign governments must hold the sovereign responsible that it shall be done.

Mr. President, it seems strange to me that there should be any question made in regard to the necessity and propriety of passing this bill. I find in the official documents which have been presented to us the following:

But the official and published records of the Government of the United States show that, in the past thirty years, that Government has repeatedly intervened officially and demanded of the Chinese Government not only the punishment of rioters, robbers, and other lawless persons, who have destroyed or appropriated the property of American citizens in China, but has also asked the imperial government either to compel the outlaws or the local authorities to indemnify those citizens for the losses sustained, or has asked the imperial government itself to pay these losses. The most noted instance is that of the convention of 1858, when, at the close of the British and French hostilities against China, at the urgent instance of the Government of the United States, $735,258.97 were paid by China to satisfy the claims of American citizens, a large amount of which was for losses occasioned by mobs, robbery, and other lawless acts of individual Chinese subjects. For detailed information as to these claims, reference is made to inclosure No. 3.

Since that date the official publications disclose a number of cases, one of the most important being that of the Tien-Tsin riot in 1870, when the native population attacked the French Catholic mission in that city, destroyed the cathedral, the French consulate, and the establishment of the French Sisters of Mercy, and the mob resulted in the death of sixteen French subjects, including the consul, and three Russians. Although the riot was directed against the French Catholic missions, some property belonging to the American board of missions was destroyed or injured. The American minister, Mr. Low, very promptly united with the other members of the diplomatic corps in a joint note to Prince Kung, calling urgently upon the imperial government to take prompt measures to punish these rioters, in which they state that "it is indispensable that, as other countries hear the tidings of this crime, they should, at the same time, be informed that justice is being done." (For. Rel., 1870, p. 359.)

In connection with that I read the following from the communication of the Secretary of State:

Such remedies must be pursued in the proper quarter and through the avenues of justice marked out for the reparation of such wrongs.

The doctrine of the non-liability of the United States for the acts of individuals committed in violation of its laws is clear as to acts of its own citizens, and a fortiori in respect of aliens who abuse the privilege accorded them of residence in our midst by breaking the public peace and infringing upon the rights of others, and it has been correctly and authoritatively laid down by my predecessors in office, to whose declarations in that behalf your note refers. To that doctrine the course of this Government furnishes no exception. And in this connection I venture to say that you labor under a misapprehension in citing as an exception the action of the United States, in 1859, in respect of the violence committed upon the Spanish consulate at New Orleans by a mob of irresponsible persons unknown to the Government, and with which no officer or agent of the United States was allied.

Nothing can be clearer than the enunciation of the doctrine of Government non-liability on that occasion. While denouncing such outrages as disgraceful and in criminal violation of law and order, it was emphatically denied that the acts in question created any obligation on the part of the United States, arising out of the good faith of nations towards each other, for the losses thus occasioned by and to individuals. Neither is there a parity between the Spanish incident of 1850 and the recent riot and massacre of the Chinese at Rock Springs.

Now, Mr. President, there is a great contradiction between this enunciation of the Secretary of State and the practice of this Government in demanding indemnity from the Chinese Government. Can that be law which the Government of the United States does not recognize and enforce in its relations with other governments? We understand that it is a legal fiction that the sovereignty is bound by no law except the law of its own sovereign volition, but the question is upon what principle of right did the Government of the United States act in demanding indemnity from the Chinese Government for a robbery and a violence perpetrated upon an American citizen by a Chinese mob? And when the Government of the United States undertake to say that there is no obligation upon this Government to do what they demanded of China to do, there can be no justification of such a proposition.

Does not the action of any sovereign government toward another government furnish the law for its proceeding in regard to that same government when a like case occurs? I merely wish to say that there is no reasoning in this proposition. What has the Senate of the United States, in dealing with a great question relating to the foreign intercourse of this Government with another one, to do with technical questions as to legal responsibility? I undertake to say that by the light of precedent, by the acknowledgment of this and every other government as to what is just, as to what are the obligations of international law, the man who comes into this country invited by a treaty obligation comes here under the protection of the National Government, to whom is remitted the conduct of its foreign affairs and its relations with foreign countries. And I say furthermore that when this Government demanded and received indemnity for an American citizen for violence perpetrated by a Chinese mob, we affirmed to the Government of China and all the world that we would furnish the like protection and the like indemnity to Chinese and others who should suffer under like circumstances.

I conceive that there is neither authority nor reason nor justice in denying the responsibility of the Government of the United States for the protection of these Chinese subjects and for indemnifying them for their losses in this great outrage.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, I did not anticipate that this bill would come up for final action to-day. I desire to submit a few remarks upon it, particularly to refer to some precedents and authorities which I have not now convenient. I would be very much obliged if the Senator in charge of the bill would consent that we might now go into executive session and take it up in the morning. It will save a great deal of time, because I do not want to detain the Senate long, and if I were to speak now I should be compelled to read a great deal more than I should do if I had time to arrange the paragraphs I wish to quote.

Mr. EVARTS. Certainly; I think it is a proper concession if it is desired; but I should like to have some understanding as to whether we shall be able to go on with the matter to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. It comes up as the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will come up as the unfinished business at 2 o'clock to-morrow.

Mr. COCKRELL. Give notice that you will call it up in the morning hour again.

Mr. EVARTS. I will call it up again.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will come up as the unfinished business at 2 o'clock.

Mr. COCKRELL. But the Senator can move to take it up before that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from New York submit a motion?

Mr. EVARTS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Before that is done, I ask the Senator from New York to yield. I hope we shall finish this bill to-night.

Mr. EVARTS. I yield to the Senator from Vermont.

PENSION APPEALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to submit an amendment to be proposed to the legislative, executive, and judicial appropriation bill, which I ask to have referred for the time being to the Committee on Pensions which has charge of these affairs to consider, and I should like to have the amendment read together with a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, addressed to me about the number of pension appeals now depending before him from the Commissioner of Pensions, which I think is worthy of consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the proposed amendment will be read, and also the letter of the Secretary of the Interior.

The Chief Clerk read the proposed amendment, as follows:

To enable the Secretary of the Interior to speedily dispose of the appeals from the Commissioner of Pensions to him in pension cases, the President of the United States is hereby authorized, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint not exceeding seven special assistants to the Secretary of the Interior for the consideration of such cases, at a compensation not exceeding $10 a day for a period not exceeding twelve months, $21,000.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Now read the letter.

The Chief Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, Washington, May 26, 1886.

SIR: I am in receipt of your letter of the 24th instant, requesting to be informed of the present total number of pension appeals before the Secretary of the Interior, and when the appeal in the case of Adrian T. Woodward, late surgeon of the Fourteenth Vermont Volunteers, will be reached in its order for consideration, and how long it has been pending. I have the honor to state in reply that during the year 1885 there were twenty-six hundred and twenty-one appeals filed. About six hundred of these have been disposed of, and those appealed in March, 1885, are now being considered. The appeal in Mr. Woodward's case was filed on the 6th of May, 1885, and there are about four hundred cases ahead of his on the docket; approximately it will therefore be at least three months before his case will be reached in its order.

I will state further that there have been appealed during this year up to the present date something over twelve hundred cases, making a total of over three thousand claims pending on appeal before the Department.

Very respectfully,

L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary.

HON. GEORGE F. EDMUNDS,
United States Senate.

The amendment was ordered to be printed and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. EVARTS. I renew my motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After one hour and nine minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 6 o'clock and 3 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, June 4, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

COLLECTORS OF INTERNAL REVENUE.

Frank J. Pratt, of Massachusetts, to be collector of internal revenue for the tenth district of Massachusetts.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 856) of Frank J. Pratt, of Massachusetts, to be collector of internal revenue for the tenth district of Massachusetts, in place of Edward R. Tinker, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Frank J. Pratt is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Edward R. Tinker, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT, March 17, 1886.

SIR: Your communication on behalf of the Finance Committee of the Senate, dated March 16, 1886, asking whether or not "there are any charges on file against the official or moral character of Edward R. Tinker, late collector of internal revenue for the district of Massachusetts, suspended," is received.

In reply thereto I have the honor to state that, so far as this inquiry relates to a suspension from office, I feel bound by the rules laid down in the President's recent message to the Senate upon the general subject of such suspensions.

But in order that I may surely act within the requirements of the statute relating to the furnishing by this Department of information to the Senate, I beg leave to remind the committee that the office referred to has no fixed term attached to it, and to further state that the President is satisfied that a change in the incumbency of said office will result in an improvement of the public service, and that the policy of the present administration will be better carried out by such change.

Except as the same may be involved in these considerations, no papers containing charges reflecting upon the official or moral character of the suspended officer mentioned in your communication are in the custody of this Department.

Respectfully, yours,

D. MANNING, Secretary.

Hon. JUSTIN S. MORRILL,
Chairman of the Senate Committee on Finance.

A resolution, as follows, was unanimously adopted by the Committee on Finance, April 6, 1886, in relation to this and all similar letters to the foregoing:

"Resolved, That the letters of the Secretary of the Treasury to the Committee on Finance, dated March 16, 1886, or subsequently, in relation to the suspension of collectors of internal revenue, should be received and held as honest declarations made in good faith that there are no charges or papers on file in the Department reflecting in any manner against their moral or official conduct or character."

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Pratt.

Andrew L. Ellett, of Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of Virginia.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No.—) of Andrew L. Ellett, of Virginia, to be collector of internal revenue for the second district of Virginia, in place of Asa Rogers, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that Andrew L. Ellett is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Asa Rogers, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Ellett.

John W. Causey, of Delaware, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Delaware.

The above confirmation was accompanied by the following report from the Committee on Finance; which was ordered by the Senate to be printed in the RECORD:

The Committee on Finance have had under consideration the nomination (No. 1285) of John W. Causey, of Delaware, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Delaware, in place of Beriah Watson, suspended, and, so far as they have been able to obtain the information, they find that John W. Causey is a fit and proper person to discharge the duties of the office, and that there are no charges or papers on file reflecting upon the character of Beriah Watson, suspended, as will appear from the following letter of the Secretary of the Treasury:

Under this statement of facts, and the fact that there is no fixed term attached to the office of collector of internal revenue, the committee recommend the confirmation of Mr. Causey.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, June 3, 1886.

The House was called to order at 11 o'clock a. m. by Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, its Clerk, who directed the reading of the following communication:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1886.

Having to be absent from the city, I hereby designate Hon. OLIN WELLBORN to preside as Speaker pro tempore during this legislative day.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK,
Clerk House of Representatives.

Mr. WELLBORN accordingly took the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

EVENING SESSION FOR DEBATE.

Mr. HILL, by unanimous consent, submitted the following resolution; which was read, considered, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the House take a recess at 4.55 p. m. this day until 8 o'clock p. m., the evening session to be devoted to debate only on the Oklahoma bill.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the regular order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The regular order is the call of committees for reports.

RELINQUISHMENT OF LANDS, SAN FRANCISCO.

Mr. HENLEY, from the Committee on the Public Lands, reported back with favorable recommendation the bill (H. R. 6402) to relinquish the interest of the United States in certain lands to the city and county of San Francisco, and its grantees; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

KANSAS CITY, FORT SCOTT AND GULF RAILROAD COMPANY.

Mr. ATKINSON, from the Committee on Railways and Canals, reported back with favorable recommendation the joint resolution (S. R. 18) for the relief of the Kansas City, Fort Scott and Gulf Railway Company; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

JOSEPH S. MOODY.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 948) granting a pension to Joseph S. Moody; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

MATHIAS WONDRACK.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back favorably the bill (S. 1384) granting a pension to Mathias Wondrack; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

CHESTER A. ARTHUR AND WILLIAM H. ROBERTSON.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2053) for the relief of Chester A. Arthur and William H. Robertson, late collectors of customs of the district of the city of New York; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

E. B. BAILEY.

Mr. WARNER, of Missouri, from the Committee on Claims, also reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 9033) for the relief of E. B. Bailey; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

J. M. HOBBS.

Mr. HOWARD, from the Committee on Claims, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 118) for the relief of J. M. Hobbs; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If there be no objection, the Chair will now recognize gentlemen to present reports who were not in their seats when their committees were called.

There was no objection.

CHAPTER 218 OF ACTS OF FORTY-SEVENTH CONGRESS.

Mr. CULBERSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2152) to amend chapter 218 of the acts of the first session of the Forty-seventh Congress, approved June 15, 1882; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

GEN. BENJAMIN F. KELLY.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (S. 838) granting an increase of pension to Benjamin F. Kelly; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORT.

Mr. WORTHINGTON, from the Committee on Foreign Affairs, reported back with an adverse recommendation the bill (H. R. 1524) making an appropriation for the purchase of a work entitled "Port charges and requirements on vessels in the various ports of the world, with tables of moneys, weights, and measures of all nations, and a telegraphic code for masters, owners, and ship-brokers, by Theodore Hunter and Jarvis Patten," for the use of United States consuls that are stationed at seaports, and through said consuls for consultation of American ship-masters visiting those ports; which was laid on the table, and the accompanying report ordered to be printed.

LOUISA KEARNEY.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on Pensions, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5927) for the relief of Louisa Kearney; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

ADVERSE REPORTS.

Mr. THOMPSON, from the Committee on Pensions, also reported back adversely bills of the following titles; which were laid on the table, and the accompanying reports ordered to be printed:

A bill (H. R. 5280) to pay to the surviving children of Revolutionary soldiers the arrears of pensions between 1818 and 1832;

The bill (H. R. 1856) granting a pension to Isaac Winans; and

The bill (H. R. 8942) increasing the pension of Dwyer Tracy.

PUBLIC BUILDING AT TROY.

Mr. WILKINS, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 7775) to increase the appropriation for the erection of a public building at Troy, N. Y.; which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, and, with the report hereafter to be filed, ordered to be printed.

LETTER-CARRIERS.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Missouri, from the Committee on Labor, reported back favorably the bill (S. 2076) to extend to letter-carriers the privileges secured to other employés of the United States by section 3738 of the Revised Statutes, relating to the hours of labor; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

APPEALS TO SUPREME COURT.

Mr. CASWELL, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported back favorably the bill (H. R. 5577) to provide that a judgment in the circuit court of the United States upon an interest coupon of a bond by a municipal corporation shall not be conclusive in a question on the bond when the amount gives jurisdiction to the Supreme Court on appeal; which was referred to the House Calendar, and, with the accompanying report, ordered to be printed.

FURNITURE FOR GOVERNOR'S OFFICE, UTAH.

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting an estimate from the secretary of Utah for the purchase of furniture for the office of the governor; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

NEW PENSION BUILDING.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting, with inclosures, an estimate from the Secretary of the Interior for the construction of an additional floor in the new pension building; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

The SPEAKER pro tempore also laid before the House bills of the Senate of the following titles; which were referred as follows:

The bill (S. 188) to prevent the acquisition of real property by aliens, and for other purposes—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill (S. 1991) supplementary to and amendatory of "An act to execute certain treaty stipulations relating to Chinese," approved May 6, 1882, as amended by an act to amend said act approved July 5, 1884—to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. HUDD, indefinitely, on account of severe indisposition.

To Mr. CLEMENTS, for ten days.

To Mr. LAIRD, indefinitely.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

On motion of Mr. ELY, by unanimous consent leave was given to withdraw from the files of the House certain papers presented with the application for pension for the grandchildren of General Eleazer Brooks, of Lincoln, Mass.

OLEOMARGARINE.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. By an agreement entered into yesterday evening the regular order now is the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, &c. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is recognized.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, availing myself of the privilege of the rules, I shall occupy the hour allotted to me in further explanation of the provisions of this bill and of my own reasons for so earnestly supporting it. In many respects this is the most remarkable parliamentary contest that has been had on this floor for many years. The very fact that this bill was reported from the Committee on Agriculture and not from the Committee on Ways and Means seems to have aroused antagonism at its first reading.

How does it come that this bill is reported by the Committee on Agriculture? It results from a direct vote of this House. The jurisdiction conferred upon that committee comes from the same power that confers jurisdiction upon the Committee on Ways and Means, and upon all the other committees of the House. The Committee on Agriculture did not seek the responsibility of this measure. No member of that committee introduced any bill upon this subject until after the House had acted upon the bill introduced by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. SCOTT] and, by a decisive vote, had referred that bill to the Committee on Agriculture. Afterward the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. WHITE] and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. FREDERICK], and perhaps other members of the committee, introduced supplemental bills which also were referred to the same committee. The Committee on Agriculture brings this bill before the House with all the authority and all the jurisdiction conferred upon any committee to report a bill, and this measure is entitled to the same careful consideration that it would have received had it been reported by the Committee on Ways and Means.

Perhaps no bill that has been under consideration in this Congress or in any Congress during the past ten years has received a more thorough and in many respects a more searching, instructive, and able discussion than this. While I am glad to say that this is true in the main, yet it is also true that in this discussion expressions the most reckless, opposition as bitter as could possibly be put in words, has been hurled at this bill. Gentlemen opposing the bill started out with the cry of "fraud." Like the cuttle-fish which attempts to darken and muddy the waters when it seeks to make its escape from danger, like the malefactor who blinds his pursurers by the cry of "stop thief!" gentlemen have raised this cry of "fraud" knowing and feeling that in opposing this bill they stood here the advocates of the monumental fraud of the nineteenth century. [Applause.]

Where is the fraud? Read the title of the bill. Is there a single word in it as to the purposes of this bill that any honorable man can object to? It is a bill to define butter and to place an internal-revenue tax upon oleomargarine, and it defines what oleomargarine is. Where is the fraud? The fraud is in the manufacture of the article; the fraud is in the sale of the article; the fraud is committed upon sixty millions of people who are asked to buy this article under a false and fraudulent name. The fraud exists only in the imagination of those gentlemen who are haunted by their own advocacy of this stupendous fraud.

At the very outset, as was anticipated by the committee, we are met by the objection that this bill is unconstitutional. Has any gentleman dared to assert in terms upon this floor and to risk his reputation as a constitutional lawyer upon the proposition that there is in the terms of this bill, in any section of it or in its entirety, an unconstitutional feature? Not one. No gentleman has ventured to risk his reputation as a lawyer by asserting that this bill upon its face is amenable to the objection of being unconstitutional. But they say that incidentally it involves a constitutional objection.

Mr. Speaker, it is a very strange fact, but it is nevertheless a true one—and I state it because I am justified by the past action of this House, because the records of the last few Congresses bear me out in the statement—it is a very strange fact, I say, that every single measure that is brought before the House of Representatives of the United States which looks to the amelioration of the condition of the agricultural masses, which looks in the direction of clipping the wings of some magnificent close corporation or monopoly, always meets with a flood of "constitutional" objections.

When measures come before this House in the interest of great corporations and corporate powers, of monopolies, either railroads, banks, or manufactures, no one hears a word about the Constitution; but let any representative of the agricultural interests of the country raise his voice here in behalf of any measure seeking to relieve them of the undue burdens of taxation resting upon them and he is sure to be met with constitutional objection. The lion of the Judiciary Committee, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER], marches out into the middle aisle, shakes his shaggy mane, stamps his foot, and cries "unconstitutional;" and all the constitutional lawyers of the House, big and little, great and small, echo "unconstitutional?" [Laughter and applause.]

This is but a repetition of what we witnessed in the Forty-eighth Congress when the bill creating a bureau of animal industry was under discussion. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. TUCKER] in the same emphatic and earnest manner declared that measure to be utterly unconstitutional and vicious, and yet a majority of both Houses differed with him, passed the bill, it was signed by the President, and is now existing law. That gentleman comes in again and cries "conscience!" in connection with this bill; and, lo and behold, all the constitutional lawyers who are so ready to advocate the interests of the corporations and monopolies of the country cry out "conscience."

I accept the gage of battle. I place my advocacy of this bill upon the broadest and the grandest conscience—the conscience of each individual member. Whenever I am found on this floor on the side of corporate power and monopoly, whenever I am found on this floor advocating like a special pleader the effort of the greatest manufacturing monopoly of the nineteenth century, then I want somebody to keep my conscience for me; but I will not go the constitutional lawyers of the House. I will go to some man, if I can find him, who is linked to the throne above by the ties of his mission, that I may get acquittance for such a deed as that.

"Unconstitutional" because we levy a tax! I hope gentlemen of the House will remember that in this extended argument of nine days not one single decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, not one line of any great commentator upon the Constitution, not even a single decision of a State court has been presented to the House in support of the position that this bill upon its face in its separate provisions or in its entirety is unconstitutional. A great many such citations have been read to sustain the constitutionality of the measure; and some things have been read against it.

I sat in my seat with some trepidation on the first day of the discussion on this bill, when the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HAMMOND] rose in his place and, with an air which was intended to paralyze the intellects and still the hearts of the members of this House until that great expounder of the Constitution could be heard from, proclaimed the unconstitutionality of the bill. He had two books before him; and I listened with a great deal of interest to find out from whom he would quote to sustain his position. He did not keep us long in waiting. He quoted first from the living statesman from Georgia—himself [laughter]; and for fear that he could not overwhelm the House with the soundness and eloquence of that quotation, he consented to supplement it by reading a short extract from the writings of the great dead expounder of the Constitution, Webster of Massachusetts! But you notice he put Webster last. [Laughter.]

In the name of all the living admirers of Webster, I thank the gentleman for having placed that great constitutional lawyer again upon the records of Congress side by side with the living statesman from the great State of Georgia. [Laughter and applause.] And that gentleman, not satisfied with having read his opinion delivered some years ago upon these constitutional questions, undertook later in the discussion, with an arrogance which I say has never been equaled in this House, to call in question the motives and the "manhood" of gentlemen who advocate the passage of this bill. Who made him the keeper of any man's manhood here? If he wants to try the manhood of some gentlemen who advocate this bill, let him not do it under the shield and protection of the rules of this House in a discussion here. Let him not use language that is susceptible of one of two constructions—either courteous or discourteous. Because, forsooth, the advocates and friends of this bill, the Committee on Agriculture, come in here and ask to amend it so as to meet the views of some gentlemen who desire that it shall be so amended, this can not be done without that gentleman saying that the committee had not the "manhood" to bring in this bill in such and such a way, or having brought it in here, had not the "manhood" to stand by it. He will find out before he gets through whether we have the manhood to stand by it or not. When he thinks that the Committee on Agriculture or the two hundred men who stand behind this bill as its advocates can be driven from its support by either the eloquence or the maledictions of the gentleman from Georgia he makes the mistake of his life.

Mr. Speaker, gentlemen on this floor for whose opinions I have profound respect, have in this discussion made issue that the bill is a discrimination in favor of one legitimate industry of the country as against another. I have listened throughout this long discussion to all the arguments in support of that view; and if I could have been satisfied that the position was sustained, I would myself have moved to strike out the enacting clause of this bill. If to-day we can not convince a majority of this House that such is not the object and effect of this bill I hope it will be defeated. I am not here as the advocate of the protection of one legitimate American industry at the expense of another. My voice has never been raised and my vote never cast in favor of any such proposition; and any gentleman who attributes to me any such motives not only does me an injustice, but he does himself a greater wrong. We are not asking the protection of a great American industry at the expense of any other legitimate industry of the country. If the manufacture and sale of this compound known as oleomargarine is not in all its elements an outrageous and infamous fraud from the beginning to the end, then I hope this bill will be defeated. We are simply seeking to protect the people of the country from the imposition of a fraud in the hands of a great and wealthy close corporation and combination, and that under letters patent, which have been, and will be again, read before the House.

What is it that we seek to tax? Is it a legitimate industry of the country? Are the people at large engaged in the manufacture of this commodity? Not by any means. The production of this article is confined, so far as I have been able to get reliable statistics, to less than three hundred and fifty, or at the outside five hundred, manufacturers in the United States. Of this number less than one hundred manufacture seven-eighths of the whole product. Who ever heard of this article a few years ago? The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN] says that it is one of the boons and blessings of the age in which we live; and he makes the remarkable statement on this floor that in his judgment it is better than butter. "Ephraim is joined to his idols." I shall not attempt to convince that gentleman of his error. "Where ignorance is bliss 'tis folly to be wise." [Laughter.] But what is it?

Now, I want to say in the very outset of this argument that I do not agree with the admissions made on the part of some of the supporters of this bill, that in their judgment oleomargarine can be made palatable and wholesome as human food. Without a qualification I do not consent to that proposition.

I do not believe that it is within the power of chemistry, that it is within the power of patentees by any process, or that it is within the power of skilled workmen, to so combine the raw materials with the chemicals used in the manufacture to make the oleomargarine to be used in its raw state as butter a wholesome or palatable food. I deny it altogetner, and I have no respect for the opinion of any chemist who asserts it. That selected samples of the product have been sent to chemists and have received their commendation, that large sums of money have been paid for their opinions upon them, no man who has studied the question doubts for a minute; but any doctor or chemist who tells me that I can take for three hundred and sixty-five days in the year and three times a day into my stomach the raw, uncooked product of oleomargarine, used as butter, simply writes himself down in my judgment as a knave or an ass. [Laughter.] I do not believe any such nonsense; and no man who has ever given the subject the slightest attention and knows what it is believes it.

That oleomargarine can be used, manufactured from pure materials, in cooking when subjected to a high temperature—the heat of the fire—and recooked, may under such circumstances be a wholesome food, I do not pretend to deny; I have not a doubt of it; and I am perfectly willing to admit that the gentlemen who sent the certificates from Chicago, Armour & Co., Fairbanks & Co., Swift & Co., in connection with their mode of manufacturing oleomargarine, make the very best and purest that is used in the United States. I do not question that. Nor do I question the further fact that when the product is made, there is put upon it a little stamp of "oleomargarine" upon the top or the bottom of the tub simply to be erased the moment it leaves the manufactory. That these great houses in connection with the slaughter-houses of Chicago, which is exactly as the manufacture is conducted in France, in connection with the abattoirs, is the best product of the kind that can be made, no man doubts.

But that is not the danger. The danger is in the hundred and one little dead animal factories on the lines of the railroads, where they buy broken-down, diseased, and dead animals from the railroads; these little rendering establishments in the out-of-the-way towns and villages, that simply operate by purchasing the refuse and scrapings of the butcher-shops, and making this oleo oil to be used in the manufacture of oleomargarine and butterine, spreading disease and destruction throughout the country. There is the danger which is constantly going on; and if it is not checked it will be impossible for the citizens of the towns and villages, and in the cities also, to buy one pound of honest butter in this country. There will be no such thing as good, honest markets. They are attempting even now to seduce the smaller creameries, and even the farmers themselves, into using this oleo oil to be used in the manufacture of their butter on the farms and in the creameries.

Why is it, Mr. Speaker, that no gentleman here in the discussion of this question has attempted to explain why, if this be a fair, honest, wholesome food product and intended for an honest market, that these people are using a method of coloring and flavoring this stuff to make it resemble butter? Why is it? Why, any one who knows anything of the manufacture of oleomargarine knows that the product itself is whiter than this handkerchief; it is as white as chalk, entirely colorless and odorless, as well as tasteless, but there comes in the process of fraud. Then they commence to color and flavor it to look like butter and to taste like butter, and put it on the market to sell it as and for butter. That is the fraud.

It was said by one or two wise men in the course of this debate that this is just what the butter-makers do; that they color the butter; and in the definition of butter as given in the first section of the bill this committee in reporting the bill sustained the fraud of coloring butter. These are the allegations that have been made in the discussion. Let me ask has your gold dollar got any alloy in it? Has your silver coin got any alloy it? Is it any the less a standard silver or gold coin because it has got a little alloy in it? But do you, because of that fact, protect the counterfeiter? When the counterfeiter goes to make his base coin the color of gold or silver in order to pass it as a counterfeit, do you go to his aid and protect him? Now, it is true that the manufacturers of butter in the creameries of the country, who buy the cream product from one hundred or five hundred farms, gathering their cream from a circuit of 10 or 15 miles, in preparing their butter use sometimes annotto or expressed carrot juice or some other coloring matter for the purpose of keeping it a uniform standard in color. But there is no need for it. The great mass of the farmers do not use it at all. Not one in ten thousand puts any form of coloring matter into the butter. But the creameries are compelled to use it to make a uniform color of their product, because of buying their cream from so many different farms. But is that a crime? So far as I am individually concerned I do not believe it adds anything to the value of the product. So far as I am concerned, in my judgment the highest standard of butter is that which comes pure from the churn, without artificial color, without adulteration, except that which nature gives, that which has come down to us through all the long ages, so long ago that even history itself fails to record the time of its earliest manufacture.

But the creameries are compelled to use it, and that is why the committee placed in that section the words "with or without coloring matter." An amendment to that was adopted by the Committee of the Whole under a misapprehension, and in my temporary absence from the floor, offered by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], and I hope every friend of this bill will vote against it when it comes up before the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The gentleman does not mean to say, does he, that he wishes to countenance that fraud on the part of the creameries?

Mr. HATCH. I wish to say this, that after having waited nine days for the privilege of expressing my views on this bill, I do not propose to yield for any interruption. The gentleman from Arkansas and other gentlemen will bear me witness that I have not interrupted a single gentleman in his argument. I thank the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GIBSON] for his compliment that I have behaved very well, and I wish it were in my power to return the compliment. [Laughter.] But I will say this, that with but a single exception (his demand for a quorum) that gentleman has behaved remarkably well.

There can be no mistake about my position. I say it is essential and necessary in connection with this bill; it is an absolute necessity that those words should be retained in the bill. Do you want to deprive the creameries of the power of making a uniform color of butter and to give that right to the maker of a fraud? That is the position of the gentleman from Arkansas and of those who advocate that amendment. You would confer the right and privilege of fraud upon the men who make the imitation and fraud upon butter, but deny it to the creameries of the country upon which thousands and thousands of farmers rely for a home market for their cream.

It is necessary in this connection that I give the House some little information about what this product is, how it is used, and how it is sold. I will ask the Clerk to read two paragraphs I have marked in a slip taken from the American Grocer, published in the city of New York:

The Clerk read as follows:

[From the American Grocer.]

DISINGENUOUS.

We notice that the manufacturers of oleomargarine and butterine, who are opposing the passage of the Scott bill, which imposes a national tax on butter substitutes and places their manufacture under the regulation of the Internal Revenue Department, are seeking to blind Congress to the main issue, which is its fraudulent sale at retail. The manufacturers profess to be in favor of its being honestly sold to the consumer, and claim that all efforts to regulate this trade should take that direction. Some of them may be honest in this, but our experience has led us to believe that the majority of these manufacturers do not care a fig whether it is sold honestly or fraudulently so long as they are able to find a profitable market for their product. They salve their consciences with the reflection that they are not responsible if other people commit frauds, when, in reality, their position is that of the manufacturer of counterfeit money, who sells it for what it is to the "shovers of the queer."

The leading dealers in food products of the United States, Messrs. Thurber, Whyland & Co., who at one time were agents for the largest company manufacturing oleomargarine under the Mége patents, refused more than two years ago to further handle the product, because it had become evident that its honest sale at retail could not under existing conditions be enforced. Although they sold it at wholesale for what it was, they were unwilling to be a party in any way to the marketing of a product which reached the consumer fraudulently; and if the present manufacturers were equally conscientious they would take the same course.

The great dairy interest of the country favors this measure because it will compel honest competition. Consumers are in favor of it because it will diminish their chances of being imposed upon; and honest dealers welcome it because the worst competition they experience is unscrupulous competition, which does not hesitate to misrepresent values. Arrayed against all these interests are a few rich and shrewd manufacturers who understand the art of throwing dust to conceal their movements and who are disingenuously advocating measures to "compel its honest sale," when they know very well that it can not and will not be honestly sold unless the temptation to sell it dishonestly is removed through taxation which will so enhance the price that there will not be such an enormous profit left to the retail dealer that it is constantly leading him into temptation to fraud. Members of Congress who may be in doubt as regards this question should give the public and not these manufacturers the benefit of it.

Mr. HATCH. And also the following extract from an editorial in the Missouri Republican of May 30, one of the most influential and widely circulated journals published in the Mississippi Valley.

The Clerk read as follows:

SOAP-GREASE AND THE CONSTITUTION.

The gang of adulterators and counterfeiters who manufacture bogus butter from soap-grease protest that the Hatch bill makes martyrs of them and violates their constitutional rights. They have their headquarters in Chicago. In Missouri and many other States their business is a criminal one under State laws, but Illinois allows them to carry it on because their frauds have been such a prolific source of gain that they are a great power in the State. While these conditions continue it is impossible to keep their fraudulent products out of Missouri and other States which have passed laws against them. In fact, the object for which they carry on business is to violate law. If they had no market except Illinois they would go out of business. They defy and nullify the laws of every State that has legislated against the adulteration of butter. If their product was offered in market as what it is—a mixture of butter and the grease extracted from animal refuse—it would have no sale at all. It does have an immense sale, because, by the aid of drugs, it is made to resemble the best article of butter, and is sold under the odious false pretense that it is butter.

The right of a State to use its police power to prevent frauds by adulteration is not questioned. It is also an unquestionable fact that no State can exclude the legitimate mercantile product of another. If adulterated butter is a legitimate mercantile product, the State laws against it are unconstitutional and void. But the courts have declared the law and the fact that the product in this case is illegitimate and that laws against it are proper and valid. These facts are not to be refuted, and to admit them is to destroy every argument against the principle of Mr. HATCH's bill.

That principle is that if bogus butter is a legitimate article of commerce, as its manufacturers claim, the States have no power to pass laws against it, but the United States alone under the Constitution have the right to regulate it. If, on the other hand, its manufacture in one State is for the purpose of violating a valid law of another, and imposing an illegal and dangerous counterfeit on the people, then the United States still have power to regulate by the constitutional method of license laws. The bill has nothing to do either with tariff or anti-tariff. It is simply a measure by which the police power of the States, not extensive enough, is to be re-enfored by the police power of the United States for the protection of the entire people against fraud.

Mr. HATCH. In this connection I desire to read for the information of the House a few lines from the testimony of one of the manufacturers of this compound, Mr. Louis Mendel, one of the firm of N. I. Nathan & Co., a statement made under oath before an investigating committee of the New York State senate, February 7, 1884:

Q. Will you give me the composition of this product—what ingredients you use?
A. I have got it all here.
Q. I would like to have you tell me in words what it consists of?
A. It consists of the extract of beef fat, called "oleo;" it consists of fat of what we call beef oil.
Q. That is the fat from cattle?
A. Yes, sir; the caul fat; then, in winter time, to prevent the brittling of it, there is some leaf lard added—deodorized leaf lard made from the fat of hogs.
Q. In what proportion are those two products added?
A. It depends on the weather.
Q. Say this winter.
A. We put, perhaps, one-fifth to one-sixth of leaf lard to the oil.
Q. Five parts of oil and one part of leaf lard?
A. Generally; sometimes a little more or less; it depends on the weather.
Q. What other product?
A. Then we add the sesame oil; it is made from African seed. I have not seen the seed. It has been told me it is like grape seed.
Q. It is a vegetable oil made from an African seed?
A. Yes; comes from the coast of Africa.
Q. It is made here?
A. It is manufactured in France.
Q. Why do you use that oil?
A. To prevent the brittling of the butter and to give it a gloss.
Q. To prevent the brittling of the oleomargarine?
A. Yes, sir; and at the same time it gives it a gloss.

* * * * * * *

Q. You said you use the sesame oil for the purpose of keeping it from being brittle; and you also state that you use the lard for the same purpose?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Can you give the reason why the lard will not do it alone?
A. We found it was necessary to put that in; it improves it.

I tried to get my friend from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR] who is an expert on these subjects to give me some additional information as to the characteristics of sesame oil, but he did not seem to know much about it. I went to the library, and in Watts's Dictionary of Chemistry, page 239, I found something about sesame oil, and also in the United States Dispensatory, pages 997 and 1040. It is described as a rich, fatty oil that is taken from the seed of a plant grown in India and Africa that belongs to the species of the benne plant, and in a milder form has the delightful medicinal qualities of castor oil. [Laughter.] And that is added to this compound and sold as butter. And yet gentlemen who oppose the regulation by a tax of this compound say the bill is a fraud. No, no; the compound is the fraud, not the bill.

In the sworn statement made by Mr. Philip D. Armour, of Chicago, presented by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DUNHAM] and published in the RECORD of May 29, he says:

At certain seasons of the year, namely, in cold weather, a small quantity of salad oil made from cotton seed, is used to soften the texture of the product, but this is not generally used by us.

To what extent cotton-seed oil is used in the manufacture of these imitation and counterfeit compounds let those most interested in the cotton-seed oil industry testify.

In the letter read by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] yesterday, Mr. Wright, vice-president of the Little Rock Oil and Compress Company, says:

A law unfriendly to such manufacture of substitutes for butter will affect the price of every gallon of oil made by the oil-mills of the South, and, incidentally, the value of the cotton seed to the farmer, pure, highly refined cotton-seed oil entering into the composition of most of these substitutes. It is, therefore, to be hoped that the Arkansas delegation will carefully examine all contemplated legislation on this question, and sustain the munufacturers of cotton-seed oils of their State and of the South with their votes and influence in Congress against unfriendly legislation.

And the following telegram from the officers of the Cotton-Seed Crushers' Association would seem to be conclusive on this point:

The undersigned, at the request and on behalf of the Cotton-seed Crushers' Association, now in convention assembled at Memphis, earnestly request your influence and co-operation in defeating a bill reported from Committee on Agriculture by HATCH, of Missouri, to impose a tax on manufactured butter. If passed, this bill would strike directly at Southern cotton-planters, whose seed is crushed by about one hundred and thirty mills, the oil from which enters largely into the manufacture of butter. Furthermore it would deprive poor classes of a cheap butter pronounced by eminent chemists to be wholesome.

J. W. ALLISON, Prest.
E. URQUHART, V. P.
J. H. DUGGAN, Secy.

Let me read for the benefit of the distinguished delegation from the State of Louisiana, who, with I believe but one exception, a very honorable and notable exception, seem to be opposed to the passage of this bill—let me read from a review of the New Orleans butter and cheese market from May, 1885, to May, 1886, by C. H. Lawrence & Co., Nos. 68, 70, and 72 Tchoupitoulas street:

Now, as regards imitation butter, butterine, oleomargarine, and all other oleaginous compounds, sales have been quite large during the fall and winter months. The bulk of the stock was of the very cheapest grade and very little high-grade butterine has been sold here. The oleomargarine has been sold principally in 1 pound and half-pound rolls and prints. It was the poorest of the poor, being made from the scrapings of the packing-houses in Chicago and Kansas City. Price at wholesale ranged from 8½ to 11 cents per pound delivered here. The receiver or buyer of it sold it to the retail trade on small margins, which enabled him (the retailer) to sell 2 pounds for 25 cents, or 1 pound for 15 cents. Large quantities of this stuff was sold, but quality deteriorated as price was reduced, until it become so vile that it was impossible for human beings to eat it, and considerable was shipped back to be worked over again. As the warm weather approached and butter declined, the sale of bogus butter becomes less and less and we predict it will soon disappear from the market and be resurrected again only when the price of pure butter is advanced again next fall. We can not but help sympathizing with the honest dairyman who must compete with dishonest goods. The steps that are now being taken in the Eastern and Western States by interested parties as regards the protection of the dairy interests, we can not help but applaud. We want to see the time come when the Government will compel a dealer to sell it for what it really is and not make misrepresentations. If that law was enforced it would not be long before the oleomargarine interests would suffer. The great fraud in selling oleomargarine nowadays lays exclusively with the dealer who comes in direct contact with the consumers. He may think it honest when he represents oleomargarine as genuine butter, and as a general thing the buyer does not doubt the word of his family grocer but pays for his supposed butter and goes away. Now, if the dealer would act fair and square and offer the oleomargarine with the genuine butter, he would find not one in fifty who would buy it; but it pays him to be dishonest, and as long at he remains unpunished just so long will this state of affairs continue. We sincerely hope that the National Government will take the matter in hand and protect the great dairy interests of this country, worth millions of dollars annually, and whereby so many people are enabled to earn a livelihood.

I have here a letter, which I will print in this connection, from the secretary of the Wisconsin Dairymen's Association. It is addressed to Hon. L. B. CASWELL, M. C. As it is short, I will read it:

FORT ATKINSON, WIS., May 29, 1886.

DEAR SIR: Having read from time to time the statements made in the papers by prominent butterine manufacturers of Chicago about the wholesomeness of butterine, I am reminded of a visit which I paid to one of the large butterine factories of Chicago, some two or three years ago, in company with another gentleman, and of the butterine which I saw being manufactured at that time, and sold in large quantities. This creamery establishment belongs to one of the largest manufacturers of Chicago, who makes affidavit as to the wholesomeness of butterine.

On a long table was piled large quantities of butterine, and the workmen were busily engaged in putting this in 1-pound prints; and it was then neatly wrapped in clean muslin and put in a nice clean box for shipment. The foreman says, "Taste of that," and we did so. He said, "Do you taste any mule in that?" Our reply was that it did not taste very sweetly; and he was asked what part of that was butter, and he said, "Not a particle; it is the coarsest grease that we can buy in the market. We manufacture it into butterine, and deliver it in Saint Louis at 10 cents per pound. We can not supply the demand." This is the cheap wholesome butter that is manufactured for the laboring classes, who can not afford to buy dairy butter. Comment is unnecessary.

Yours very truly,

D. W. CURTIS.

Hon. L. B. CASWELL, M. C., Washington, D. C.

Mr. REAGAN rose.

Mr. HATCH. I must decline to be interrupted at present. I regret the position occupied by my distinguished friend from Texas [Mr. REAGAN] on this bill more than that of any other individual member, except perhaps one whom I will come to presently. I have known the distinguished gentleman so long, have admired him so much, have loved him so much, that I regret more than I have language to tell the position he is occupying here upon this great measure which is in the interest of ten millions of the agriculturists of this country.

Mr. REAGAN. I reciprocate the gentleman's feeling.

Mr. HATCH. I have followed the gentleman for years in his efforts to remove some of their burdens from the farmers. I have followed him in every step that he has taken since the beginning of the Forty-sixth Congress to lift from the shoulders of agriculture a portion of the tax imposed upon them by the carrying trade, but I say to the gentleman now that there is more involved to the agricultural interests of this country in the passage of the pending bill than in all the interstate-commerce bills that have ever been introduced here. [Applause.] I know that the gentleman has got his brain into such a condition that it can not entertain any other idea than interstate commerce just at this time. If he were waked up in the middle of the night by an angel from heaven who brought him straight from the throne the plan of salvation, I believe he would unhesitatingly reject it as unconstitutional unless he was allowed to amend it with his interstate-commerce bill. [Great laughter.]

Mr. Speaker, I have here some statistics which I will not consume the time in reading, but will print in this connection to show the increasing danger and character of the competition which confronts the growers of the great staples, wheat and corn, in the United States, and which tends to make this legislation a necessity:

THE WHEAT QUESTION.

The average crop in India is from 10 to 11 bushels per acre, against 15 to 16 bushels in the United States; but India is capable of an immense increase in yield under careful cultivation, and where fertilizers have been applied its yield has increased to 40 bushels per acre. Great as is already the present production of wheat in India it is steadily increasing, its development being limited only by the lack of transportation to the seaboard, an obstacle that is steadily disappearing in the rapid construction of the great railroad and canal system under direct patronage of Great Britain.

It was not until 1874 that the first shipment of wheat from India to Europe was made, and was then only 95,000 bushels; in 1875 it extended to 1,500,000 bushels; in 1876 it exceeded 4,500,000 bushels; in 1877 and part of 1878 over 12,000,000 bushels. During the famine of 1878-'79 the exports fell to about 2,500,000 bushels, but reached in 1880 over 15,000,000 bushels; in 1881 rapidly increased to 38,500,000 bushels; in 1882 the exact amount was 36,485,580 bushels; in 1883 the crop slightly failed, and only 26,021,875 bushels were exported; but in 1884 the crops rose once more to 38,502,285 bushels, while in 1885, up to November, over 42,500,000 bushels were exported, and for over 3,400,000 bushels freight-room had been engaged for Europe.

To obtain such results the English Government has widely and gratuitously distributed among the native ryots, or farmers, for the purpose of encouraging them in the use of improved machinery, a number of plows, constructed with a special design and of peculiar style to meet the requirements of their soil. In addition, large quantities of all kinds of plows and other implements, adapted with studious care to the wants of Indian agriculture, have been sent out by the English Government to be sold at a mere nominal price.

Great care has been exercised to select seeds from foreign countries—mostly American—of the best varieties and suitable for the soil of India.

PRICE OF LABOR AND LIVING CONTRASTED.

The Indian ryot, or farmer, lives in a bamboo hut; cost about 20 rupees, or $9.60; his utensils, a few earthenware pots, value 2 or 3 rupees, or 96 cents to $1.44. His meals consist of half an anna's (1½ cents) worth of rice or millet seed. His farming outfit consists of rude plow, a primitive wooden cart constructed with his own hands, a grubbing-hoe, a pair of bullocks, a few cows or sheep. He cuts his grain with a sickle, treads it out with his bullocks, winnows it in the air, and carries it to market on his back. If he employs a farm hand it is at about 2 annas (6 cents) per day. These circumstances tend toward an equalization of the terms of competition between the Indian and American farmers in laying down wheat in Europe, but notwithstanding the low wages of India and its increased railroad facilities, it would still be impossible for the Indian ryot to sell wheat as cheaply in Liverpool as the American farmer were it not for the divergence caused by legislation in the relative values of gold and silver.

OUR HEAVY LOSSES.

The exportation of wheat from India during 1884 and the eleven months of 1885 amounted to over 84,400,000 bushels, representing a loss of over $80,000,000 to our farmers and of over 3,500,000 tons of freight to our "granger" railroads, and of over $17,000,000 on their earnings.

It is needless to point out the manifold ways in which such a subtraction from one principal article of our export trade has made itself felt in all employments, and to the detriment of all branches of business.

But this is not all. On the 22d of October last, Indian wheat sold in Liverpool at 89 cents per bushel; while quality for quality compared, brought in Chicago on that day 88½ cents. The cost of transportation, partly by water, of each bushel of wheat from Chicago to New York is a little over 6 cents; the present laydown cost of wheat from New York to Liverpool is:

	Cents.
Free on board and insurance per bushel	1.00
Freight to Liverpool	6.82
Cost of discharging in Liverpool without commission	4.50
Total per bushel	12.32

Add to it 6½ cents from Chicago to New York and the cost of transportation, less commission, is just 18¾ cents per bushel, which added to 88½ cost in Chicago brings our American wheat in Liverpool first cost equal to $1.07 per bushel, or 18 cents per bushel more, than quality for quality Indian wheat is selling in Liverpool.

This state of affairs is the consequence of the extremely low price for silver bullion which is more or less controlled in the British market. At the present price of silver bullion in London, 47*d.* per ounce, the exchange on India is 1*s.* 6*d.* per rupee, or 33⅓ per cent. in favor of the British importer of India's wheat, who with £1,000 purchases 13,333 rupees instead of 10,000 rupees, which is all he could have purchased for that number of pounds in 1873, and yet the purchasing power in India of the rupee is a little greater now than it was in 1873.

Add, therefore, to the ruling rate of 89 cents per bushel of wheat in Liverpool the 33⅓ per cent., and the price at once advances to $1.19 per bushel. This rate of $1.19 in Liverpool, less freight and other charges from New York to Liverpool, would leave the market price of wheat in New York $1.06⅔ per bushel, in place of 90⅝ cents, the now ruling rate; and in Chicago it would be equal to $1 in place of 85 cents per bushel, as it is now. It is evident from these figures that the restoration of silver to its old place by free coinage would at once enable the American farmer to put Indian wheat out of the European markets.

This price of 89 cents per bushel in Liverpool not only prevents us from exporting our wheat, but actually regulates the market value of it to the detriment of our farmers, who lose from 20 to 25 cents per bushel on their wheat in order to enable them to meet the now ruling low market price in Liverpool. These 20 to 25 cents on our present crop of 1885 of 352,000,000 bushels of wheat mean a loss to the American farmers of from $70,000,000 to $88,000,000.

RAPID DECLINE IN OUR WHEAT EXPORTS.

Let us review the rapid decline in our wheat exports for the past few years.

In 1883 we exported 106,385,828 bushels, for which we received $119,879,341, equal to $1.12⅔ per bushel.

In 1884 our exports declined over 30 per cent., and we exported only 70,349,012 bushels, for which we received $75,026,584 or $1.06 $\frac{5}{10}$ per bushel.

In 1885 we exported some 84,500,000 bushels of wheat, for which we received only $72,933,097, or 86.32 cents per bushel, while the year previous we got over $75,026,000 for only 70,349,012 bushels, a loss of over 20 cents on each bushel.

Not only has the American farmer been a direct loser by this reduction of the demand and price abroad for his wheat product, but he has indirectly suffered in still greater degree by the resulting depreciation of his whole crop, whether consumed at home or sent abroad; and on the crop of 1885 alone, so far, he has submitted to a loss of over $70,400,000 as compared with last year's price.

This one fact is therefore proved beyond cavil or dispute, and should always be borne in mind, that to destroy the profits of the American wheat-grower it is not necessary that India should raise a crop which will meet the whole demand of Europe; it has but to furnish such a portion of the amount as will prevent an advance in the price to a point which will repay the cost of production by our own farmers.

How important a part the wheat crop of this country constitutes of the total of our exports is shown by the fact that since 1873 to 1883 about 24.85 per cent. of the whole value of our agricultural exports was made up by wheat and flour; yet the latest official statistics for the month of December, 1885, as compared with 1884, show a decline which must create an uneasiness to all who have America's welfare at heart.

Exports of wheat and flour.

December, 1884:
Wheat, bushels	8,261,153
December, 1885:
Wheat, bushels	4,211,850

A decline of nearly 50 per cent.

December, 1884:
Flour, barrels	1,016,617
December, 1885:
Flour, barrels	757,829

A decline of over 25 per cent., ending with December, 1885, as compared with 1884 and 1883, as shown by the latest official custom-house returns.

Total value of exports of breadstuffs.

July to December, 1883	$88,014,626
July to December, 1884	79,700,507
July to December, 1885	52,998,732

But the contrasts of the average yearly exports of wheat and flour exhibit still greater and more deplorable deficits.

The exports of wheat and flour from 1873 to 1883 were:

Articles.	Exports.	Value.
Wheat.....bushels...	919,073,737	$1,095,174,727
Yearly average.....do.....	91,907,373	109,517,472
Flour.....barrels...	54,001,528	325,308,458
Yearly average.....do.....	5,400,152	32,530,845

The accumulation of stock on hand January 16, 1886, in the United States as compared with corresponding period of 1885, 1884, and 1883 shows the marked decline in our exports of wheat.

Stock on hand or visible supply:

	Bushels.
January 15, 1883	21,909,118
January 15, 1884	33,948,813
January 16, 1885	42,575,703
January 16, 1886	57,108,226

While our exports are gradually decreasing our stocks on hand have rapidly increased from 21,909,118 bushels in 1883 to 57,108,226 in 1886.

In order to comprehend more fully the rapid decline in the exports of wheat from this country, the official returns of the Bureau of Statistics gives the following figures:

	Bushels.
Exports of wheat from all ports for December, 1884	8,400,000
Exports of wheat from all ports for December, 1885	3,773,153
Decrease	4,626,847
Twelve months ending with December 31, 1884	81,628,478
Twelve months ending with December 31, 1885	53,025,918
Decrease	28,602,560

If we consider that from 1873 to 1883 inclusive we exported 919,720,637 bushels, or 91,972,063 bushels on the average for each year, the decline from 91,972,063 bushels down to 53,025,918 bushels shows a decrease of 38,946,145 bushels, or a decline of over 57½ per cent. Compared with the exports of 1879, when 122,775,751 bushels were shipped, and in 1880 153,250,685 bushels, and in 1881 150,565,450 bushels, as well as 104,030,584 bushels in 1883, the rapid decline is startling.

The half-yearly returns of shipment of wheat from San Francisco from July 1 to December 31, 1885, compared with 1884, are equally as disturbing:

	Bushels.
July 1 to December 31, 1884	12,447,000
July 1 to December 31, 1885	5,850,000
Decrease, 1885	6,597,000

A loss of over 50 per cent.

The imports of wheat into Great Britain for the four months August (harvest time), September, October, and November, 1885, when compared with corresponding period of 1884 are equally important and exhibit the gradual supremacy India's wheat is gaining in that country:

	Bushels.
Wheat from United States:
1884	11,973,160
1885	4,494,879
Decrease	7,478,281
Wheat from India:
1884	6,833,195
1885	8,867,427
Increase	2,034,232

While the exports of wheat to Great Britain from the United States have decreased by over 7,000,000 bushels, those from India to Great Britain have not only held their own but have increased by over 2,000,000 bushels.

The contrast between the rapid increase in the exportation of wheat from India and the equally rapid decline in the exportation of wheat from the United States is significant and startling. The export of wheat from India in 1879 amounted to 1,972,544 bushels, but has rapidly increased year by year, until in 1884 it amounted to 39,202,636 bushels; our own exports have, when compared with corresponding period of 1879, when we exported 122,353,936 bushels, fallen in 1884 to 75,026,678 bushels, a decrease most appalling as well as mortifying.

The decrease in the exportation of wheat from New Orleans exhibits the following: 1880-'81, 6,523,747 bushels, while the year following it fell to 2,474,581 bushels, gradually reaching for the fiscal year September 1, 1884-'85, down to 784,195 bushels; while so far this fiscal year, of which five months have passed, not one bushel has been exported from New Orleans.

CORN QUESTION.

Indian corn, equal in every particular to our own of the same appellation, though of comparatively recent introduction, has increased in favor most rapidly, and there were raised in 1882 in India over 75,000,000 bushels. The first cargo of India's corn was shipped to Europe in January, 1883. In 1883 the crop was over 120,000,000 bushels; in 1884 over 160,000,000 bushels. It would indeed be one of the curiosities of international trade if from this small beginning in 1882 there should grow, as in the cases of wheat, an export trade from India to Europe of equally as great proportions. It is a positive fact that in the central provinces of India alone enough Indian corn can be raised to supply the wants of Europe, to which we have shipped during the year (calendar) of 1885 62,525,742 bushels, and for which we received $33,090,350.

About twenty States of the Union have legislated upon this subject of the manufacture and sale of oleomargarine, and have demonstrated their inability to properly control it. They can not prevent its introduction from other States; they can not successfully identify it in the hands of the retailers. The State of Missouri has a law prohibiting its manufacture and sale, but it is impossible to enforce it. Pass this bill and all the States can easily control its manufacture and sale to consumers.

Tax it and stamp it and compel it to sail under its own flag. It will only be in the nature of supplemental legislation in aid of the States. Already the Canadian Parliament is perfecting measures to prohibit its manufacture, introduction, or sale within the Dominion of Canada. Good people everywhere are uniting in their determination to stop the fraud. Shall we refuse or hesitate to do our duty in regard to it? I trust not.

And just here I desire to enter my earnest and vigorous protest to the position that this legislation is inimical to the interests of the laboring masses of our country; that this oleomargarine is the poor man's butter. I deny it. As a rule the laborers and mechanics are the best customers for pure and honest butter. Their prudent housewives do their own marketing, and buy the best food products offered for sale. The best customers for oleomargarine are the hotel-keepers, boarding-house keepers, stewards of steamboats and steam-vessels, and that class of housekeepers who order their butter from the retail grocer through the telephone. I utterly deny the statement that this counterfeit and fraud is purchased by the laboring classes knowingly, and repudiate the sentiment that they should be permitted to buy it because it is cheap, except under its real and true name, plainly marked and stamped, that there may be no deceit or cheat in it.

I have heard the silvery and eloquent voice of my old time friend from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE], whom I have known and loved so well from his boyhood, even from that period which he has described so eloquently and beautifully, the period of his earlier and better days when he was "a barefooted boy" in the State of Kentucky. Did the gentleman ever know a Kentucky boy that was not barefooted? [Laughter.] We all went barefooted. The gentleman has forgotten the feet that he is worshiping. It was only the egotism of his later years that caused him, in the beautiful pastoral picture which he drew here, to refer so touchingly to the barefooted boy of Kentucky. The gentleman has made a mistake. It is not the feet of the barefooted boy, it is those of the pretty little girl—

Whose feet beneath her petticoat
Like little mice played in and out—that haunt the gentleman's memory. [Laughter.] Who ever heard of a boy being in love with his own feet? [Laughter.] A barefooted boy—yes; but the misfortune is that they put shoes upon him too early in life to make him a farmer. [Laughter.] My friend found very early in his career that he had an eloquent and silvery tongue, and he has been wagging it ever since, instead of working with his hands upon the farm. He found that it paid better to plead the cause of rich clients in the courts of Kentucky, and I rejoice in his success.

I only regret that his eloquence, his influence at home, his power in this House, should be thrown against the great farming interest of that grand old Commonwealth and in behalf of two or three hundred merciless and unconscionable manufacturers of the greatest fraud of the nineteenth century. [Applause.] I tell you, my friends, that the farmers are getting sick and tired to death of being fed upon soft and eloquent phrases. The gentleman talks about what he intends to do for the farmers of Kentucky by this great tariff bill which the Committee on Ways and Means have hanging here between the dome of the Capitol and its final resting place of either victory or defeat, the Lord only knows at this time where. [Great laughter.] Why not bring forward that bill, gentlemen? Why do you leave it hanging upon the Calendar day after day and week after week? Nobody doubts the sincerity or the courage of the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means. Has he lost confidence in his committee?

You are all here fighting the farmers. Every single member of the majority of that committee is here fighting agriculture and agricultural interests. Have you deserted your chairman? If so, and you will let us offer a resolution and turn over the Committee on Agriculture (leaving me off of it) to the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, they will bring that bill before the House and fight for it to the end.

Talk about what they are going to do. The farmers of this country want to see something done. Every time they come here and ask for bread we give them a stone—the cold stones of the past. The distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. WELLBORN] pointed to the tombs of Jefferson and Madison and Monroe. I prefer to go to the homes of the ten million of free men of this country, engaged in the pursuit of agriculture, for my inspiration. [Applause.]

I had the pleasure of hearing a week ago last Sunday night a distinguished divine, Rev. W. A. Bartlett, preach in this city a sermon from the twelfth chapter and thirty-second verse of First Chronicles. The preceding verses contain an enumeration of the tribes and families of Israel that, ready armed for war, flocked to the standard of David at Hebron, where the kingdom of Saul was turned over to him according to the word of the Lord, and he was coronated king of all the mighty bands. Here is the text; and I wish these gentlemen from Virginia and Kentucky and the gentleman from Texas could have been present to hear that magnificent and eloquent sermon:

And of the children of Issachar, which were men that had understanding of the times, to know what Israel ought to do; the heads of them were two hundred; and all their brethren were at their commandment.

That great tribe of Issachar, the agricultural tribe of Judah—and I wish you could have heard that eloquent divine as he pictured the magnificence of that agricultural band—were those upon whom, in the time of peril, Israel leaned. They "had understanding of the times" in which they lived, and knew what Israel ought to do. They coronated David king, and that tribe went on "conquering and to conquer." I wish to God that to-day these gentlemen from Virginia who are always talking about what was done in the moldy and musty past "had understanding of the times" in which they live. Thank God, Virginia has one Representative who is a true son of Issachar. I refer to the member from the seventh district [Mr. O'FERRALL]. Eight times wounded in her defense, twice left upon the battlefield for dead, I honor him. All hail, son of Issachar, who knows what the old Commonwealth of Virginia ought to do! [Applause.]

Why should gentlemen rake among the dead embers of a long-forgotten age? Why, sir, if my reading in regard to Thomas Jefferson is correct, he was the author of that immortal sentiment which has long since been forgotten in this Congress and in the United States, that "commerce is the handmaid of agriculture." Now commerce has been made her mistress. Agriculture has been dragged at the wheels of commerce; and we come here in an earnest, honest spirit to try to lift up the hearts of the children of Issachar, and we are met by constitutional objections at every step. And the distinguished son of Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] who, before he had served a single session in this House, was deemed worthy to be transplanted to the other wing of the Capitol, comes here with his power of intellect and his eloquent tongue and tells us that when he sees the Democratic party about to be betrayed into the hands of the enemy he intends to throw his body prostrate athwart that measure. Well, my advice to you, my friend, is, do not do any such thing [laughter], for if you do you will be crushed beneath the train of progress that bears the honors, the duties, and the rights of more than one-half the American people. Betrayed, indeed! Who is going to betray the Democratic party into the hands of the enemy? Whenever that party is betrayed it will be by those upon this floor who seek to hand it over, bound hand and foot, to the monopolists and corporations of the country. [Applause.] It will never be betrayed as long as it is in the hands of the sons of Issachar and their rights are protected upon this floor. It will be betrayed when corporate power and the greed of monopolies place their chains around it and rivet those chains by the votes of their friends on this floor. That is the only betrayal of which the Democratic party is in danger.

But every time we bring in a bill from the Committee on Agriculture, every time we ask for recognition on this floor, these constitutional lawyers bent upon even defeating consideration of such bills, interpose their dilatory motions, wear out the patience of the House, throw themselves athwart this train of progress and attempt to stay it. My friends, before you get through you will find that some people in this country will come to the conclusion that they have been betrayed. It will be the constituents of the men who failed to stand up here earnestly and honestly seeking to protect the agriculturists of the country from this great wrong.

Ah! The gentleman from Kentucky says that all the farmer asks is simply to be allowed to make his battle in the open field of the world. Yes; we accept the gauge of battle. We are now raising wheat and selling it at 72 cents a bushel in the markets of the world in competition with the coolies of India. We are raising corn to-day in competition with the coolies of India. We are raising all the cereals in competition with the world; and we ask no protection. We disdain to ask it. We ask only to be protected from the infamy of a counterfeit and a fraud at home. But, my friends, when the great battle comes—I welcome it, I wish it was here to-day—when it comes, let all the agriculturists of this country stand shoulder to shoulder and side by side. Let us have no distinctions. Let the wheat-grower of the great Mississippi valley, the wool-grower of the Pacific Slope, all the cereal-growers of the magnificent valleys of the Mississippi and Ohio, the sugar-planter of Louisiana, and the rice planter of South Carolina stand shoulder to shoulder and upon the same plane. Along with free wheat and free wool, free salt and free wood, put free sugar and free rice. [Applause.] If that is to be the platform, let it all go together.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman's time has expired.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, indulge me a for moment in expressing my profound acknowledgment to the House for the courteous and kind attention with which they have listened to me. [Great applause.]

I demand the previous question on the first amendment to the bill.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SPRINGER in the chair). The Clerk will report the first amendment to the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

First section, sixth line, strike out the words "with or;" so it will read: "Made exclusively from milk or cream, or both, without common salt, and without additional coloring matter."

The amendment was disagreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question on the next amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the next amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Thirteenth line of second section add the following:
"Hereafter it shall not be lawful for any manufacturer"——

Mr. BAYNE. Let us have order.

Mr. HATCH. I have an amendment to offer before that. The House will recollect I stated to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] I would insert in the tenth line of the second section "when so made," and in line 13 to strike out "used" and insert "sold;" so it will read——

Mr. HAMMOND. Was there not an amendment to the first section?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Yes; that has been disposed of.

Mr. HATCH. Read my amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "or," before the word "calculated," insert "when so made;" and in the thirteenth line strike out "used" and insert "sold;" so it will read: "Made in imitation or semblance of butter, or when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter."

Mr. STONE, of Massachusetts. Will not the gentleman submit it with the last words struck out—"sold as butter?"

Mr. HATCH. I can not do that.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky, rose.

Mr. HATCH. I have asked the previous question.

Mr. REAGAN. The gentleman asked the previous question on another amendment.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I have the floor——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from Missouri to demand the previous question.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. But he can not take me off the floor. The Chair rose and started to put the question when I rose and took the floor. The gentleman from Missouri was not on the floor and did not ask for the previous question.

Mr. HATCH. Before I offered my amendment I demanded the previous question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk proceeded to read the amendment to the second section, but before concluding the reading he was stopped by the gentleman from Missouri, who said in accordance with a previous agreement he had an amendment to offer.

Mr. REAGAN. Yes; and he offered it, but did not call the previous question.

Mr. HATCH. But I had called the previous question on the next amendment.

Mr. REAGAN. Is it competent for the gentleman to call the previous question on an amendment which has not been read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman demanded the previous question on the next amendment, when the Clerk proceeded to read the amendment; but the reading was suspended, and the gentleman from Missouri gave notice of another amendment which he asked to submit.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Where there is honest difference between gentlemen as to the fact can not we have the record read?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. If anybody disputes the statement of the Chair——

Mr. HAMMOND. Not in any offensive sense, but to have the record read. If that can be done I desire it.

Mr. HISCOCK. The recollection of the Chair as to what transpired is as good as any record kept by anybody else.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to submit the Chair has not stated all that has occurred.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Perhaps not.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This is the observation I desire to submit: When the Clerk had proceeded to read the next amendment he was stopped by the gentleman from Missouri, who said that was not the amendment he desired to have voted on, because he had promised the gentleman from Massachusetts to submit another amendment. I take it for granted his memory was jogged about that time.

Mr. HATCH. There was no intimation about it. As soon as the Clerk commenced reading the next amendment I stopped him and directed the attention of the Chair to the fact that I desired the next vote to be on the amendment which I had promised the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LONG] to offer at this place. The Chair will understand I am trying in good faith to carry out my agreement. If gentlemen shall force me to demand the previous question on the engrossment and third reading of the bill, very well.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. That is not the point.

Mr. HAMMOND. I have no opinion about this; I simply do not know. But when several gentlemen differ with the Chair in what the Chair has said, if the record can be read I desire simply to have it read so we may know exactly what occurred. The gentleman from Missouri says he demanded the previous question. I did not hear it; other gentlemen just as honest said they did hear it; others just as honest still said they did not. It is in writing before the Chair; therefore I want to know the facts.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. As soon as it is prepared the Chair will direct it to be read by the Clerk.

Mr. MORGAN. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. MORGAN. Is it permissible, when a gentleman rises on this floor and states that he did make a motion, and the Chair rules that he did, to seek further evidence of the truth of that statement?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will direct the language to be read as soon as it is prepared.

Mr. MORGAN. It is simply a matter of primary and secondary evidence. The man who makes the statement gives the primary evidence; the man who prepares the statement, takes it down, gives secondary evidence. Now, the primary evidence is right here.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. If the Chair will permit me, the point of order that I have been trying to make is this: The gentleman from Missouri introduced that amendment for the first time after the demand for the previous question had been made. The other amendment, on which he demanded the previous question, was an amendment which came from the Committee of the Whole, and was, therefore, a part of the report of the Committee of the Whole, and was on record as such.

Again, if the Chair will give me his attention for a moment, I will try to submit a point of order in which, if I am correct, it will not make any difference about the fact that has been stated, nor will it be necessary to wait for the exact language to be written out. Certain amendments were reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, which are matters of record. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH], in charge of the bill, rose and asked that the first amendment to the first section be read, and upon that he demanded the previous question. He then asked the previous question upon the second amendment, which the Clerk proceeded to read. The amendment on which the previous question was asked was, of course, the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. That amendment, however, was withdrawn, and he introduced on his own responsibility a new amendment upon which no demand for the previous question was made, and it will hardly be claimed that the previous question could have been called before the amendment was read, because the amendment was not then in existence; it was never in existence until the gentleman from Missouri offered it. When he offered it there was, of course, no possible previous question that could affect it until somebody called it. So it makes no difference as to the question of order in which the demand was made. The point I make is that it is impossible for the previous question to be called upon an amendment before the amendment is ever offered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kentucky is substantially correct in what he says. The Chair recognizes the fact that the amendment was not technically before the committee, and, therefore, that the previous question, if then moved, would not have applied to that amendment. But the Chair also recognizes the fact that the gentleman from Missouri intended to move the previous question upon the next amendment, he having so stated; and, therefore, following the precedents heretofore universally followed in all matters of this kind, the Chair recognized the gentleman from Missouri when his amendment was read to move the previous question.

Mr. HAMMOND. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. One at a time. The gentleman from Kentucky is on the floor. Has the gentleman any further point of order?

Mr. HAMMOND. I want to make a point of order upon that decision; and if I am correct in my understanding of it, I want to appeal from the decision.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman as soon as the gentleman from Kentucky has been heard.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The point I make is that while the Speaker might as a matter of right have recognized the gentleman from Missouri to make the unspoken but intended motion for the previous question, in point of fact he did not recognize him and in point of fact he did recognize me. Now, the point of order I make is that having recognized me and being in possession of the floor, it was not competent for the Chair to take me off the floor to recognize the gentleman from Missouri under the intention of the Speaker to recognize the unspoken wish of the gentleman from Missouri for the previous question.

Mr. HISCOCK. I rise to a parliamentary question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia rose, as the Chair understands, for a parliamentary inquiry. As soon as he has concluded the Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. HAMMOND. My parliamentary inquiry is this; and I ask it because, if I understand the Chair correctly, I desire to appeal from the decision. The question is, does the Chair mean to be understood as ruling that although the gentleman from Missouri did not demand the previous question, yet the Chair will recognize him to demand it now because the Chair knew he intended to do it, that information having been given privately and not publicly? Is that the decision of the Chair?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is not here to be catechised by the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. HAMMOND. I am not catechising the Chair, but simply asking information as to the decision with a view to taking an appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Whenever a proper question is submitted to the Chair the Chair will decide it.

Mr. HISCOCK. I wish to ask if there is not now a demand for the previous question pending?

Mr. HAMMOND. Has the Chair announced his decision upon the point of order that I have made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has decided [cries of "Regular order!"] that the demand for the previous question is pending.

Mr. HISCOCK. I understand, then, that the demand of the gentleman from Missouri for the previous question upon the next amendment is now pending and has not been withdrawn?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. He withdrew the amendment.

Mr. HISCOCK. He could not withdraw the amendment. It was an amendment of the committee.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. He withdrew that amendment.

Mr. HATCH. I think it is due to the Chair and to myself that I should be permitted to make a single statement. Before the Clerk commenced to read the next amendment I rose and addressed the Chair, and said: "Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question on the next amendment." I was then taking up the bill to present the amendment when the Clerk commenced to read. As soon as I could I stopped him. I said: "That is not the amendment." I had promised the House to offer this amendment in this connection, and I proceeded to state it. I demanded the previous question on that amendment, as I had a right to do.

Mr. HISCOCK. Have you withdrawn that?

Mr. HATCH. No, I have not withdrawn it, nor have I yielded the floor.

Mr. HISCOCK. If the gentleman from Missouri did not withdraw his demand for the previous question on the amendment which he proposed to offer, or on the one reported by the committee, there is now pending a demand for the previous question which has not been withdrawn.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. On what is that demand for the previous question pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state what is the pending question. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] demanded the previous question upon the next amendment. The Chair directed the Clerk to read the next amendment. Before the Chair put the question on the demand for the previous question the Clerk began to read an amendment to the thirteenth line. He was immediately arrested in his reading by the gentleman from Missouri, who stated he intended to move at that point an amendment to section 2 of the bill. That was the amendment on which the Chair understood the gentleman to move the previous question. When the amendment was read the Chair inadvertently put the question upon agreeing to the amendment. He should have put it on the demand for the previous question. The gentleman from Kentucky meanwhile arose to address the Chair. The Chair did not know for what purpose he had risen and recognized him. He proceeded to make an inquiry, to which the Chair made a response. The Chair is of opinion that this controversy has grown out of the fact that the Chair instead of putting the question on the motion for the previous question proceeded to put it on the amendment itself. On discovering this he recurred to the question pending, which was the demand of the gentleman from Missouri for the previous question; and that is now the question before the committee. [Many cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Upon what is the demand for the previous question now pending?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Upon the amendment which the Clerk will now report.

The Clerk read as follows:

In line 12 of section 2, after the word "or," where it occurs the second time, insert "when so made." In the thirteenth line strike out the word "used" and insert the word "sold;" so it will read:

"Made in imitation or semblance of butter, or when so made, calculated or intended to be sold as butter or for butter."

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The question I now submit to the Chair is whether that amendment was offered before or after the demand of the gentleman from Missouri for the previous question?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated distinctly the circumstances under which the previous question was demanded.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. This amendment was not read until after the demand for the previous question.

Mr. HENLEY. I respectfully demand the regular order.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the Chair to rule on the point of order. I desire to have his decision go on record whether a demand for the previous question made before an amendment is offered is in order. I therefore raise the point of order against the motion for the previous question that the motion for the previous question was made before the amendment to which it was to be applied was introduced, and upon that point of order I ask the decision of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has stated all the facts as they occurred and as the Chair understood them, and the Chair thinks the House understands the situation and recognizes the motion now pending to be for the previous question on the amendment just read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the Chair to give a decision on the point of order, which will carry with it a right of appeal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is nothing from which an appeal can be taken. The Chair has a right to recognize gentlemen on the floor, and on the question of recognition there can be no appeal.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is because—— [Loud and repeated cries of "Regular order!"] Gentlemen will make nothing by these outcries.

Mr. REAGAN. This is a clear case of a mob attempting to rule by force.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is because the Speaker has declined to so decide the question as to give me the right of appeal that I again insist upon a decision on the point of order I have raised as to whether the previous question can be called upon an amendment before it is introduced; and with great respect to the Speaker I desire him either to decide the question so that the appeal can be taken, or to say that he refuses to decide it and let that refusal go into the RECORD. I insist I have the right to have the question of order decided.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair decides the question as it is, which is that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] is recognized to move the previous question upon this amendment, and that that is the question now before the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] has not yet made that motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair understands that that is the motion pending.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I have not yielded the floor, and I now again demand the previous question. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

The question was taken on the motion of Mr. HATCH; and there were—ayes 150, noes none.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No quorum.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The point is made that no quorum has voted. The Chair will appoint as tellers the gentleman from Kentucky, Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, and the gentleman from Wisconsin, Mr. PRICE.

The House again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 159, noes 5.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I demand the yeas and nays.

The question was taken on ordering the yeas and nays; and there were—ayes 42, noes 168.

So (the affirmative not being one-fifth of the whole vote) the yeas and nays were refused; and the previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question recurs on the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Let the next amendment be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

That hereafter it shall not be lawful for any manufacturer, merchant, shopkeeper, or other person to sell or expose for sale within the District of Columbia, or any of the Territories of the United States, the produce known as "oleomargarine," without first branding, marking, or labeling the same in a legible manner and conspicuous place with the word "oleomargarine" so as to be easily observed by persons offering to purchase, and also without first informing the person offering to purchase that the article is oleomargarine.

It shall not be lawful for any proprietor, keeper, or manager of any hotel, inn, restaurant, or house of public entertainment to furnish, offer, or set before, or permit to be offered, furnished, or set before his guests, in the District of Columbia or any of the Territories of the United States, the article known as "oleomargarine," without first putting his guests upon notice, by posting in conspicuous places in the dining-room and in all other rooms where the guests of such house are accustomed to take meals, and also in private rooms of the guests, that can be easily observed and read by the guests, in the following words: "This house uses oleomargarine;" and also by printing said notice on their bills of fare when any bills of fare are used by any such house.

The question was taken; and there were—ayes 53, noes 144.

Mr. HAMMOND. I call for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 89, nays 178, not voting 55; as follows:

On motion of Mr. SOWDEN, the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. MORRILL.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. HALL with Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. REID, of North Carolina, with Mr. RICE. If present, Mr. REID would vote against the pending bill; Mr. RICE for it.

Mr. EDEN with Mr. MARKHAM.

Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. DAVIS. Mr. ARNOT, if present, would vote for the pending bill; Mr. DAVIS against it.

Mr. VIELE with Mr. LAIRD. Mr. LAIRD, if present, would vote for the bill.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. NEGLEY.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Ohio, with Mr. OWEN.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. PIRCE.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. BLOUNT with Mr. BINGHAM.

Mr. MITCHELL and Mr. GOFF were announced as paired on this vote.

Mr. HUDD and Mr. HARMER were announced as paired for this day.

Mr. GREEN, of New Jersey, and Mr. GLOVER were announced as paired on this bill. If present, Mr. GLOVER would vote for the bill and Mr. GREEN against it.

Mr. CROXTON and Mr. DORSEY were announced as paired from the 3d until the 10th of June.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to announce that my colleague [Mr. STEWART] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Alabama. Mr. Speaker, my colleague [Mr. SADLER] is confined to his room by sickness.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WELLBORN). The Clerk will report the next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The Clerk read as follows:

In the twelfth line of section 6 insert the words "or paper" after the word 'wooden;" so as to read "wooden or paper packages."

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question on that amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I understand the committee accepts this amendment.

Mr. HATCH. We do.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

In the sixteenth line of section 6 insert the words "or paper" after the word "wooden."

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question upon this amendment.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union was read, as follows:

In line 3 of section 8 strike out "ten" and insert "eight;" so as to read: "That upon oleomargarine which shall be manufactured and sold, or removed for consumption or use, there shall be assessed and collected a tax of eight cents per pound," &c.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, under an agreement made in the Committee of the Whole, the vote is first to be taken on an amendment which in pursuance of that agreement I now submit, and on which I demand the previous question—to amend the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole by striking out "eight" and inserting "three," the effect of which would be to make the tax 3 cents a pound. I do not favor this amendment, but offer it in accordance with the agreement.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. And by unanimous consent a yea-and-nay vote was to be taken on this proposition.

Mr. HATCH. That is correct.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH] demands the previous question on this amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from West Virginia calls for the yeas and nays on this proposition.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. By unanimous consent it was agreed that the yeas and nays should be taken.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That consent was in Committee of the Whole; but to order the yeas and nays requires the action of the House.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 131, nays 139, not voting 52; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, with Mr. GOFF, for the remainder of this day.

The result of the vote was announced as above stated.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved at the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. In accordance with the agreement made in the Committee of the Whole that I would submit three amendments in the order then stated, I now move to amend the amendment reported from the Committee of the Whole by striking out "eight" and inserting "five," so as to make the tax 5 cents a pound. I will state that I am opposed to this amendment, but offer it in pursuance of the agreement. Upon this amendment I call the previous question; and I shall ask the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. HATCH. I now demand the yeas and nays upon agreeing to the amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Before this question is taken the Chair desires to appeal to members to preserve order so that the vote may be correctly recorded. The Chair is utterly powerless to advance the public business unless members will aid the Chair in the preservation of order.

Mr. HATCH. I ask to have read, and that the Chair will enforce, the seventh paragraph of Rule XIV.

The Clerk read as follows:

7. While the Speaker is putting a question or addressing the House no member shall walk out of or across the Hall, nor, when a member is speaking, pass between him and the Chair; and during the session of the House no member shall wear his hat, or remain by the Clerk's desk during the call of the roll or the counting of ballots, or smoke upon the floor of the House; and the Sergeant-at-Arms and Doorkeeper are charged with the strict enforcement of this clause.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WELLBORN in the chair). The Chair will endeavor to enforce the rule.

The question recurred on Mr. HATCH'S motion to strike out 8 and insert 5 cents a pound.

The question was taken; and it was decided in the affirmative—yeas 153, nays 122, not voting 47; as follows:

MEMBER SWORN IN.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the highest privilege. Hon. Nathaniel Dick Wallace, member-elect from the second Congressional district of Louisiana, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of the late Representative Michael Hahn, is present with his credentials. I move you his credentials be read, and he be sworn in as a member of the House.

The Clerk read as follows:

UNITED STATES OF AMERICA, State of Louisiana:

Be it known and remembered, that on this day, we, the undersigned, Samuel D. McEnery, governor of the State of Louisiana; Milton J. Cunningham, attorney-general, and Oscar Arroyo, secretary of state of the State of Louisiana, did, by virtue of and in obedience to the third section of act 99 of the General Assembly of this State, entitled, "An act to amend and re-enact sections 33, 38, and 41, of 'An act providing for the time and manner of holding elections and making returns thereof,' being act No. 58, approved April 11, 1877, to provide the manner of transferring the ballot-boxes and returns from the polls to the clerks of court and returning officers; to provide for the transfer of returns by the returning officer to the secretary of state and to the clerks of court, and by the clerks of court to the secretary of state; to provide for the compilation of the returns of elections for Representatives in Congress, and for the certificate of their election, and to provide penalties for a violation of the provisions of this act," approved March 14, 1878, proceed to the executive office, in the city of Raton Rouge, the seat of government of this State, in order to ascertain the number of votes cast for each candidate for Representative in Congress from the second Congressional district of this State, composed of the first, second, fourth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth wards of the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, and of the parishes of Jefferson, Saint Charles, Saint James, and Saint John the Baptist, in this State, to the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States, to fill the unexpired term of Michael Hahn, deceased, as shown by the returns of said election for each parish in the said second Congressional district of this State, of an election held on Thursday, the 20th day of May, 1886, agreeably to the constitution and laws of this State and pursuant to the proclamation of his excellency Samuel D. McEnery, governor of the State of Louisiana, dated the 17th day of March, 1886, which returns are on file and of record in the office of the secretary of state of the State of Louisiana, and from which it appears that the following was the result of the vote cast at said election in each parish of said Congressional district, which we do hereby officially announce and declare to be as follows:

Second Congressional district.

Parishes.	N. D. Wallace.	H. W. Martin.	O. J. Flagg.

In faith whereof we do hereby affix our signatures, authenticated with the seal of the State of Louisiana, at the city of Baton Rouge, this 27th day of May, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.]

S. D. McENERY,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.
M. J. CUNNINGHAM,
Attorney-General.
OSCAR ARROYO,
Secretary of State.

I, the undersigned, secretary of state of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify that in compliance with the third section of act No. 99 of the General Assembly of this State, approved March 14, 1878, I have entered on record in my office a certificate signed by the governor of this State showing the person who received the greatest number of votes actually cast for Representative in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States to fill the vacancy occasioned by the death of Michael Hahn, at an election held on Thursday, the 20th day of May, A. D. 1886, in the Congressional district of the State of Louisiana composed of the first, second, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth wards of the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, and of the parishes of Jefferson, Saint Charles, Saint John the Baptist, and Saint James, and that the following is a duly certified copy thereof:

This is to certify that at an election held on Thursday, the 20th day of May, 1886, for one Representative to Congress from the second Congressional district of the State of Louisiana, composed of the first, second, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth wards of the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, and of the parishes of Jefferson, Saint Charles, Saint John the Baptist, and Saint James, the votes stood as follows, namely:

Parishes.	N. D. Wallace.	H. W. Martin.	O. J. Flagg.

Total	5,080	1,765	1,194

Witness our official signatures and the seal of the State of Louisiana, at the city of Baton Rouge, this 27th day of May, A. D. 1886.

[SEAL.]

S. D. McENERY,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.
OSCAR ARROYO,
Secretary of State.

I, Samuel D. McEnery, governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby certify the foregoing is a true and correct copy of the certificate entered on record by the secretary of state of this State, and signed by me, showing who received the greatest number of votes cast actually for Representative in Congress from the second Congressional district of this State, composed of the first, second, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth wards of the city of New Orleans, parish of Orleans, and of the parishes of Jefferson, Saint Charles, Saint John the Baptist, and Saint James, in said State, in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States, to fill the unexpired term of Michael Hahn, deceased; and I do hereby certify that Nathaniel Dick Wallace, having received the greatest number of votes cast at said election for Representative from the second Congressional district of this State in the Forty-ninth Congress of the United States, to fill the unexpired term of Michael Hahn, deceased, I do hereby declare him to be duly elected to said office.

Given under my signature and the seal of the State of Louisiana, at the city of Baton Rouge, this 27th day of May, 1886.

[SEAL.]

S. D. McENERY,
Governor of the State of Louisiana.

By the governor:

OSCAR ARROYO,
Secretary of State.

Mr. WALLACE presented himself in front of the Speaker pro tempore and was duly sworn as a member of the House.

OLEOMARGARINE.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I move to reconsider the vote last taken; and also move that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, state the pending question.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now recurs on the amendment reported by the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union as just amended by the amendment of the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. HATCH].

Mr. HATCH. On that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. I believe the next amendment in order under the agreement is the one offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], upon which I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered.

The amendment was read, as follows:

Provided, That no oleomargarine which has been ascertained to be pure and healthful, and so certified in writing by the duly appointed health officer of a city or State where the same is offered for sale, and which is exposed for sale and sold to the consumer by its true name and without fraud, and without being disguised so as to resemble dairy butter, shall not be subject to the tax imposed by this section.

Mr. HATCH. I ask this amendment be voted on by yeas and nays.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. That is according to the agreement. The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Will the gentleman consent to the alteration of one word, and that is to strike out "no;" so it will read "that oleomargarine which has been ascertained to be pure," &c.? It is simply to perfect the language.

Mr. HATCH. I can not consent to change in any respect the agreement.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. It does not change the sense at all. I ask consent of the House.

Mr. HATCH. So far as I am personally concerned I have no objection to the amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair hears no objection, and the verbal amendment is agreed to.

The question was taken on the amendment as modified; and it was decided in the negative—yeas 118, nays 153, not voting 52; as follows:

So the amendment was rejected.

On motion of Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, by unanimous consent, the reading of the names was dispensed with.

The following additional pair was announced:

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. HIESTAND, on all questions, from now until further notice.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was rejected; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. Speaker, I demand the previous question upon the engrossment and third reading of the bill and upon all the remainder of the amendments.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to move at the proper time to recommit this bill with instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize the gentleman for that motion when in order.

The remainder of the amendments reported from the Committee of the Whole were severally agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, it was accordingly read the third time.

Mr. HATCH. I now demand the previous question upon the passage of the bill as amended.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. MILLS. I move to recommit the bill to the Committee on Agriculture with the instructions which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Add to the bill the following provisions:

That there shall be levied and collected, as hereinafter provided, for the year 1887, and annually thereafter, upon the gains, profits, and income of every person residing in the United States and of every citizen of the United States temporarily residing abroad, derived from any source whatever, whether within or without the United States, except as hereafter provided, and the gains, profits, and income derived from any business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States by any person residing without the United States and not a citizen thereof, or from rents of real estate within the United States owned by any person residing without the United States and not a citizen thereof, the following tax, to wit:

Two and one-half per cent. on the amount of all such gains, profits, and income in excess of $4,000 up to the sum of $10,000, and 5 per cent. of the amount thereof over $10,000 and up to the sum of $20,000, and 10 per cent. on the amount thereof above the sum of $20,000.

SEC. 2. In estimating the gains, profits, and income of any person there shall be included all income derived from any kind of property, rents, interest received or accrued upon all notes, bonds, and mortgages, or other forms of indebtedness bearing interest, whether paid or not, if good and collectible, interest upon notes, bonds, or other securities of the United States; the gains, profits, and income of any business, profession, trade, employment, office, or vocation, including any amount received as salary or pay for services in the civil, military, naval, or other service of the United States, or as Senator, Representative, or Delegate in Congress; the share of any person of the gains and profits, whether divided or not, of all companies or partnerships; profits above costs and expenses actually received or realized in cash or cash value within the year from sales of real estate purchased within two years previous to the year for which income is estimated; the amount of sales of live-stock, sugar, wool, butter, cheese, pork, beef, mutton, or other meats, hay and grain, fruits, vegetables, or other productions, being the growth or produce of the estate of such person, but not including any part thereof consumed directly by the family; and all other gains, profits, and income drawn from any source whatever, but not including the rental value of the homestead owned and used or occupied by any person or by his family: Provided, That no gift, devise, or property acquired by inheritance, distribution, or succession shall be accounted as gains, profits, or income under this section.

SEC. 3. Military or naval pensions allowed to any person under the laws of the United States, and the sum of $4,000 of the gains, profits, and income of any person, shall be exempt from said income tax, in the manner hereinafter provided. Only one deduction of $4,000 shall be made from the aggregate income of all the members of any family composed of one or both parents and one or more minor children, or of husband and wife; but when a wife has by law a separate income, beyond the control of her husband, and is living separate and apart from him, such deduction shall then be made from her income, gains, and profits; and guardians and trustees shall be allowed to make the deduction in favor of each ward or beneficiary, except that in case of two or more wards or beneficiaries comprised in one family, having joint property interest, only one deduction shall be made in their favor. For the purpose of allowing said deduction from the income of any religious or social community holding all their property and the income therefrom jointly and in common, each five of the persons composing such society, and any remaining fractional number of such persons less than five over such groups of five, shall be held to constitute a family, and a deduction of $4,000 shall be allowed for each of said families.

In addition to the exemptions provided, above specified, there shall be deducted from the gains, profits, and income of any person, all premiums on insurance of life or property, and all national, State, county, and municipal taxes paid by him within the year, whether such person be owner, tenant, or mortgager; all his losses actually sustained during the year arising from fires, floods, shipwrecks, or incurred in trade, and debts ascertained to be worthless, but excluding all estimated depreciation of values; the amount of interest paid during the year, and the amount paid for rent or labor to cultivate land, or to conduct any other business from which income is derived; the amount paid for the rent of the house or premises occupied as a residence for himself or his family, and the amount paid out for usual and ordinary repairs. No deduction shall be made for any amount paid out for new buildings, permanent improvements, or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate.

The salaries of all officers, executive, judicial, and legislative, of any State of the Union shall also be deducted from their gains, profits, and income, and be exempted from said tax; and consuls of foreign governments who are not citizens of the United States shall be exempt from any income tax imposed by this act which may be derived from their official emoluments, or from property in foreign countries: Provided, That the governments which such consuls may represent shall extend similar exemption to consuls of the United States.

SEC. 4. That the tax hereinbefore provided shall be assessed upon the gains, profits, and income for the year ending the 31st day of December, 1888, and for each succeeding year, as herein provided, and shall, after assessment, be due and payable upon notice and demand made as provided by section 3184 of the Revised Statutes. When said tax shall have been assessed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, and said lists shall have been returned to the collector, he shall at once proceed to collect the tax assessed in the same manner as all other assessed taxes are required by law to be collected; and in case of default in the payment of the tax as required, or any part thereof, the penalty of 5 per cent. and interest at the rate of 1 per cent. per month shall also be collected in the manner prescribed by law in the case of other assessed taxes. If any person liable to pay the said tax neglects or refuses to pay the same for ten days after demand, the amount shall be a lien in favor of the United States from the time it was due until paid, with, except in case of deceased, insane, or insolvent persons, the interest, penalties, and costs that may accrue in addition thereto, upon all the real and personal property of the persons assessed within the collection district.

SEC. 5. That it shall be the duty of every person of lawful age having a taxable income during the preceding year to make and render a return on or before the 10th day of January, or within twenty days thereafter, to the collector of internal revenue of the district in which he resides of the gross amount of his income, gains, and profits as aforesaid; but not including the wages of minor children not received; and every guardian and trustee, executor or administrator, and any person acting in any other fiduciary capacity, or as a resident agent for, or copartner of, any citizen or non-resident alien, deriving incomes, gains, and profits from any business, trade, or profession carried on in the United States, or from rents of real estate situated therein, shall make and render a return as aforesaid to the collector of the district in which he resides of the amount of income, gains, and profits of any minor or person for whom he acts.

And it shall be the duty of every collector to notify, in writing, by mail or otherwise, all such persons in his district as he shall have reason to believe had a taxable income for the preceding year to make and render a like return thereof. And such notice may be delivered to the person, or left at his dwelling or usual place of business, or may be sent by mail.

Every such return shall be verified by the oath of the party rendering it, and shall be made in duplicate to the collector, who will immediately transmit one copy to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue; and the returns shall be made in such forms and manner as may be prescribed by general rules and regulations of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in order to ascertain the amount of his income, gains, and profits legally liable to said tax; and where the party liable to the tax shall not be a resident of the United States, the collector may in like manner require a like return of any agent of such non-resident, in order to ascertain his taxable income.

SEC. 6. And it shall be the duty of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue to prepare, and forward to the collectors of internal revenue, the needful schedules, blanks, and instructions, with such questions as he may deem necessary in order to elicit from each person a full, fair, and unequivocal account of his income, gains, and profits liable to said tax.

If any person having a taxable income shall fail or refuse, after being notified as aforesaid, to make such return, or shall make a false return, it shall be the duty of the collector, after reasonable notice to such person of the time and place of doing so, to proceed to make such return upon such evidence as he shall be able to obtain by the examination of such person under oath, or from any other source, and shall add, as a penalty, to the amount of the tax due thereon, 100 per cent. in all cases of willful neglect or refusal to make and render a return, and in all cases of a false or fraudulent return having been rendered. The tax, and the addition thereto as penalty, shall be assessed and collected in the manner provided for in other cases of willful neglect or refusal to render a return, or of rendering a false or fraudulent return.

Any person may appeal from the decision of the collector, in such cases, to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue. The form, time, and manner of proceedings shall be subject to regulations to be prescribed by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

And in all such proceedings, any person, in his own behalf, or as such fiduciary agent, shall be permitted to declare, under oath, or otherwise show, that he, or his ward, beneficiary, or principal, was not possessed of an income liable to be assessed according to the provisions of this act; or may declare that an income tax has been assessed and paid elsewhere in the same year, under authority of the United States, upon his income, gains, and profits, or those of his ward, beneficiary, or principal, as required by law; and if the collector shall be satisfied of the truth of the declaration, such person shall thereupon be exempt from income tax in the said district.

SEC. 7. It shall be the duty of each collector, on or before the 15th day of February, in the year 1879, and of every succeeding year, to make triplicate lists of all the returns within his district, giving the name, residence, gross income, exemptions, deductions, and any other facts which, under the regulations to be made by the Commissioner of Internal Revenue, may be required. The collector shall, immediately thereafter, transmit to the Commissioner of Internal Revenue one of each of the returns made to the collector, with the original and duplicate lists aforesaid, retaining one set of returns and the triplicate list in his office. Upon the receipt of said lists and returns, the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall, as soon as practicable, assess the tax due by each person, and shall thereupon transmit the original list, with said assessments, to the collector, who shall give receipts therefor as in other cases: Provided, however, That no collector shall permit to be published in any manner such income returns, or any part thereof, except such general statistics, not specifying the names of individuals or firms, as he may make public, under such rules and regulations as the Commissioner of Internal Revenue shall prescribe.

That if any person signing and making the return above prescribed in regard to said tax shall intentionally and fraudulently sign and make a false return, he may be indicted and convicted in any court of the United States having local jurisdiction, and shall, upon conviction, be subject to a fine of not less than $1,000 nor more than $50,000, or be imprisoned not less than one nor more than ten years, or both, at the discretion of the court.

SEC. 8. The taxes collected under this act shall be paid over and accounted for in the same manner that other internal-revenue taxes are required to be paid by law, and the collectors of internal revenue, before proceeding to execute this act, shall renew their bonds as such, or give a separate bond, with sufficient sureties, as now provided in like cases, conditioned to discharge their duties under it, and to account for all moneys received under its provisions.

The provisions of chapter 2, title 35, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relative to assessments and collections of internal-revenue taxes, are, when not inconsistent with any of the provisions of this act, hereby made applicable to the assessment and collection of the taxes imposed by this act.

SEC. 10. That all the revenues raised by this act are hereby pledged for the payment of pensions.

Mr. HATCH. I demand the previous question upon the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

Mr. McMILLIN. I demand the yeas and nays.

Mr. WILLIS. I did not understand whether the gentleman from Missouri accepted the amendment or not. [Laughter.]

Mr. HATCH. I do not think it is necessary to reply to that question.

Mr. MILLS. I now ask the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 83, nays 188, not voting 52; as follows:

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. RICHARDSON, by unanimous consent the reading of the names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following additional pairs were announced:

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. LAFFOON, on this bill.

Mr. FINDLAY with Mr. REED, of Maine, on this vote. Mr. FINDLAY would vote against the bill.

The result of the vote was then announced as above stated amidst applause.

Mr. HATCH. I move the adoption of the title as reported, and upon that I demand the previous question.

The previous question was ordered; and under the operation thereof the title of the bill was agreed to.

Mr. HATCH moved to reconsider the last two votes; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HATCH. I move that the House now take a recess until 8 o'clock, under the previous order of the House.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. I would like to have the Chair state what the evening session is for.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state, in response to the inquiry of the gentleman from Iowa, that the evening session to-night is for debate only on the Oklahoma bill.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. SYMPSON, one of its clerks, announced the passage without amendment of the joint resolution (H. Res. 112) for the relief of the estate of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives.

The motion of Mr. HATCH was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

The House reassembled at 8 o'clock p. m., Mr. WELLBORN in the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The session of this evening under the order of the House is for the purpose of debate, and debate only, on the bill the title of which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 7217) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Mr. SPRINGER. This bill is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. I move that the House now resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of this bill.

The motion was agreed to.

TERRITORY OF OKLAHOMA.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union (Mr. CULBERSON in the chair) for debate on the bill (H. R. 7217) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, all questions relating to the public domain from the very earliest organization of society have concerned those who earn their bread from the soil. Some of the greatest struggles recorded in history have arisen from an unequal and unwise distribution of land. The use made by this great Republic of its vast domain has been variously and severely criticised. We are rapidly growing to a close of our possession of the virgin territory to which we have fallen heir. But it seems to me one of the anomalous features in the conduct of our public domain is that there should be so vast a territory, so large a body of land apportioned for so trifling a purpose as is this Oklahoma possession to-day. I understand from the debates I have heard on this floor, and from what I have read, that directly and indirectly this title covers between fifteen and sixteen million acres of land; and that under what is called a treaty that land is practically appropriated to the possession of some thirty-five hundred Indians.

I understand further that they have not more than 1,000 acres of this Territory under cultivation. We are met by the opposition with the announcement that a treaty is an inviolable obligation. Why, sir, the footprints of history are marked by destroyed treaties. We have lived to see the Russians and the allied powers make the treaty of Paris, and not more than ten days ago the Emperor of Russia gave practical notice to the world that the treaty growing out of the fall of Sebastopol was torn to atoms, and he would send his fleets into the Black Sea. Treaties between great powers have existed only so long as those powers felt it was convenient to carry them out.

The engagements between the Indians and this Government have been dignified by the term "treaty." The term is misapplied, and by recent court decisions I believe I am sustained in so saying. These agreements with these savages have been kept or modified just in proportion to the demands of the American people for more territory; and to-day with your labor movement, your bread-winners, begging for more means with which to supply their natural wants, are knocking at the door of this Government to be allowed to go upon this territory and make for themselves there comfortable homes to which they can carry their families and live in comfort and with health and all that pertains to home life.

We are met by the assertion that this proposition to place these savages off in territories by themselves is the best means to civilize them. Why sir, it is as impracticable to civilize an inferior race in that way as it would be to tame a herd of deer by placing them in an almost boundless park. If the Indian is ever to be civilized he is to be taught to work with his hands. He is not to be made to believe as some of our friends seem to think that school education is the only road to civilization. Educate him in these schools which you have established and what do you make of him? We have been so told in the vivid speech of my friend from Kansas and in the speech of my friend from Illinois, and I remember distinctly the experience of the Freedman's Bureau when they attempted to cluster the freedmen and bring them under the control of officers of this Government. The iniquities of that system became so glaring and were so early apparent that it was very soon abolished.

The Indian simply taught to read and write is still nothing more than a savage, with additional means of exercising his native cunning, and this education further excites his ambition to enjoy the luxuries of the glittering civilization which he has been permitted to look upon among the whites. He thinks that "education" means that he is to do nothing. This splendid empire—a territory greater than was acquired by the first war of the Third Napoleon when Savoy and Nice were given as his share of the plunder, greater than that which the Germans won in their last war against France—this vast region is at the disposal of these savages, the chiefs and agents of whom have in some instances and in a very large degree undertaken to lease these broad acres to men who fence them around and become great "cattle kings." They are but the harbingers of robbers and murderers. No law-abiding citizen ventures to enter upon this domain; but the man who will steal and murder from the impulses of his own wicked nature finds there a refuge to which he can escape and from which he can make his raids.

If my vote could determine the question, I should at once say: Convert this region into a regularly organized Territory; put over it the controlling hand of the Government; give it courts and the offices pertaining thereto; protect them if need be, and for whatever time it may be necessary, with either regular or volunteer soldiers; open up this country to the energetic, courageous, frontiersman who is the pioneer of civilization; let him be followed by that industrious class of people who are building up to-day Washington Territory, Montana, Idaho, and all the other future States of this great Republic, and let the Indian and his colleagues take their chances with other men in the great race of civilization and fortune. [Applause.]

Mr. STRUBLE addressed the committee. [See Appendix.]

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, the present discussion of the pending measure vividly recalls the unlawful invasions of Oklahoma in recent years and the prompt removal by the military of the intruders. It was asserted in defense of these attempts at forcible possession that the lands sought for were parts of the public domain and subject to settlement under the land laws of the United States.

Proclamations were issued by President Cleveland and his predecessor defining the status of the Oklahoma country, and warning all persons not to attempt settlement. The Executive was authorized by act of Congress of last session to negotiate with the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees for the opening to settlement of the unoccupied lands in the cessions of these tribes, and an appropriation made for this purpose. Nothing was done. Now it is proposed in the measure before us not only to provide a special commission to negotiate with these Indians, but at the same time to create a Territorial government which shall take immediate effect as to the public land strip, which is not Indian land, and thereafter to embrace such as shall be negotiated for hereafter. I shall address my remarks chiefly to objections as they appear on the face of the bill, and in so doing to the real merits of the subject before us for consideration.

The very first objection which confronts us in the pending bill is as to the area embraced in the proposed Territory. We have no right to vaguely anticipate on some future acquisition. It is not the business-like course of an individual or community in ordinary transactions, still less that of a great nation. It is not statesmanship. Policy, precedent, economy, are all against it. The first question is, What is the area over which the Government now has the authority, clear and undoubted, to extend a Territorial organization with all the political machinery of laws, officers, and offices?

The answer to this is found in the first section of the proposed act. It is to include what is known as the Public Land strip and so much of the Indian Territory as is not occupied by any Indian tribe to which title has been conveyed by patent from the United States, or which by treaty with any Indian tribe is not without its consent to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory.

Now, let us examine concerning the brief limits not excepted from the general boundaries, and over which it is proposed to establish a separate political government, with its governor, Legislative Assembly, Delegate in Congress, United States and county courts, precinct officers, and all the paraphernalia incidental to such a well-recognized status in our form of republican institutions. The Public Land strip contains 5,740 square miles, or 3,673,600 acres. It lies along the south boundary of Kansas and Colorado and north of Texas.

A horseman in an easy day's ride can cross it at any point from Texas into Kansas or Colorado. It is the panhandle to Indian Territory, and a narrow strip only 34½ miles wide and 167 miles long. The irregular conformation of the country is an objection within itself. In all our later legislation it is the policy rather to make the exterior boundaries of our States and Territories symmetrical in form where it is at all practicable to do so. This land forms more properly a part of Texas, from which it was once acquired and to which it should again be receded. This respect for symmetry in our later State and Territorial boundaries is seen in Colorado, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Arizona, Oregon, Dakota, Kansas, and others.

Only recently and in this Congress we are reminded that this House provided for the annexation of the Panhandle of Idaho to Washington Territory. Large rivers—as the Mississippi, Columbia, and others—or great mountain ranges often require a deviation from the established precedents and policy. With the Public Land strip there are neither great rivers nor mountains to appeal for its present or future annexation to the Indian Territory. Nor are there any considerations, commercial or otherwise, which should arbitrarily unite the one section with the other. When in the future the whole western half of the Indian Territory may be politically organized and be regular within its parallel lines, to add to it the projecting arm 167 miles long of the narrow Public Land strip would be a blot on the map and an unnecessary burden to the new government with no corresponding benefit.

Realizing the anomalous condition of this land the Commissioner of the General Land Office in his annual report for 1884 recommended its attachment to Kansas. The public surveys have never yet been extended over this strip, and we have no evidence that it contains any bona fide settlers.

Mr. SYMES. Will the gentleman allow me to interrupt him?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SYMES. I wish to suggest to the gentleman that it has been surveyed into townships.

Mr. HERMANN. But the townships have never been subdivided.

Mr. SYMES. The surveys have been extended over them.

Mr. HERMANN. Not completely. I am speaking now with special reference to townships being subdivided, and the facilities for obtaining title. The Commissioner reports that "the entire tract is illegally occupied by cattle companies, who are reported to have fenced in the whole of the territory." There are no schools, churches, villages, or towns—in a word, there is nothing to form even a nucleus for society; and neither public policy nor public necessity demands the organization of a political government for this strip at the present time. It is, however, confidently predicted that in the event of the proposed organization this country must soon be populated, and that we are thus authorized to infer this and to construct in advance a form of government for this anticipated population. Even conceding this future population, we submit that for some time at least all the conditions of society will be amply subserved by attaching this country to some judicial district, surveying the subdivisional lines of the townships, and also including the entire body of land within one or more existing land districts, and making the lands subject to entry by actual settlers under the homestead laws, without the privilege of commutation by cash. Thus those seeking homes can avail themselves of this much of the nation's land system, and enjoy the full protection of the laws.

Such a law has already been enacted by the Senate, and a like measure is now pending in this House in House bill No. 679.

It is incorrect to assume, as has been done, that this entire body of land can be utilized for purposes either of agriculture or grazing. Frequent droughts exist; the soil is in most places gravelly and rocky, and unless irrigated the only resort of the agriculturist is the appropriation of land along the water courses. Though settlement is not prohibited here as in the Cherokee or Oklahoma and other Creek and Seminole cessions, yet we have heard of no "boomers" rushing pell-mell or otherwise to possess themselves of any desirable lands in the Public Land strip, as was done in Oklahoma. We may safely assume, then, if these lands are as fertile as represented they would contain bona fide squatters, who would be reminding us by earnest petitions as to their desires in the matter of some organization and the extension of the public surveys.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will the gentleman allow me?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman from Oregon has just said this country is fenced by cattle syndicates. I have information that settlers have attempted to go in there, and have been driven out by those cattle syndicates.

Mr. HERMANN. The statement of the gentleman is purely voluntary. We have nothing before the House officially or otherwise to show this; we have no statement from the Department and no petition from these settlers who it is alleged have been debarred the privilege of settlement.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Did the gentleman not say himself that that country has been fenced by cattle syndicates?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir; and I repeat, it is being filled up by those who are not there for the bona fide purpose of making a settlement. They are cattlemen, not agriculturists. This class do not seek that country. It is unfit for agriculture.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman will not deny that I have information from those who have gone there and have been driven away.

Mr. HERMANN. It is strange if that is the case that they have not appealed to this body which has authority to give redress.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. They have, and they have asked to have a government organized.

Mr. HERMANN. The committee to whom this measure was referred received no such requests from any persons desiring settlement on this Public Land strip. This House has no knowledge of such request.

It may be claimed that the Chickasaw and Choctaw cession being without restriction as to settlement and Territorial government should be included in the proposed government. Even if this were true, where do we find it? Adjoining, annexed to, or forming a compact body with the Public Land strip? No. It is completely separated from it with the intervening Creek cession varying from 35 to 100 miles. Is it deliberately proposed, sir, that this Congress shall establish such a preposterous limit for territorial boundary? Two separate, distinct, disconnected divisions many miles distant one from the other and yet forming a single political division! Is there any advocate of the pending bill bold enough to venture an affirmative answer?

But, sir, it is hardly a question whether even this disconnected portion of the Indian Territory is not, under the provisions of the pending bill, "excepted out of the boundaries and to constitute no part of the Territory of Oklahoma;" and more than all, is it a question in view of good faith or in any fair interpretation of the treaties and executive orders pertaining to it? This country lies west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, and south of the Canadian and north of the Red River, and contains 7,713,239 acres and was originally in the cession to the Choctaws of all the Indian Territory south of the Creek and Seminole cessions.

The Choctaw treaty contains this clause:

> And that no part of the land granted them shall ever be embraced in any Territory or State.

When the Chickasaw tribe united with the Choctaws the same guarantee was by treaty extended to it. Susequently these tribes leased to the United States all these lands west of the ninety-eighth degree, in the following words:

> And the Choctaws and Chickasaws do hereby lease to the United States all that portion of their common country west of the ninety-eighth degree of west longitude, for the permanent settlement of the Wichita and such other tribes or bands of Indians as the Government may desire to locate therein.

This lease was of indefinite duration, and permanent settlements made on the lands. By treaty of April 28, 1866, this leased district was formally ceded to the United States. These extensive lands were obtained for the special purpose of a permanent settlement of the Wichita and certain other tribes of Indians. This, as in the Creek and Cherokee cessions, was beyond doubt the main inducement for the Indian relinquishment of his rights.

Pursuant to this expressed purpose the United States has settled on these lands the Wichitas, the Kiowas, Comanches, and Apaches under treaty of October 21, 1867 (15 Stat., 581), and in 1869 the Cheyennes and Arapahoes were settled on other portions of the same lands by executive order. This treaty provides that said district "shall be, and the same is hereby, set apart for the absolute and undisturbed use and occupation of the tribes herein named, and for such other friendly tribes or individual Indians as from time to time they may be willing (with the consent of the United States) to admit among them." Further on the "United States now solemnly agrees" that only these Indians, with certain other specified persons, "shall ever be permitted to pass over, settle upon, or reside in the territory described."

Can it be successfully claimed that, in view of these strong guarantees, these lands can be included in the proposed territory of Oklahoma unless said tribes shall signify their assent to the President of the United States? Would such an act on the part of Congress be in harmony with any sense of right? Would it be consistent with any reasonable treaty construction?

The compact entered into with the Choctaws and Chickasaws as to the expressed use which should be made of the lands then leased amounted to a trust which followed the lands after the cession. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his communication to the Secretary of the Interior (October 27, 1881), says:

> The subsequent treaty with the Choctaws and Chickasaws of April 28, 1866, substituted a direct purchase for the lease, but did not alter or extinguish the trust.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman from Oregon yield to me for a moment?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. As I understand the gentleman, he says that the trust obtains by reason of the lease made prior to the cession.

Mr. HERMANN. I do. I will go even further. I propose to say there is a trust not only with regard to this particular cession made to the Wichitas and other friendly tribes, but there is as to all the others in this territory.

Mr. STRUBLE. As to the Choctaws and Chickasaws?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir.

Mr. STRUBLE. By virtue of the lease and not the subsequent cession?

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir; by virtue of the original lease, and that is the decision of the Department. It was to the effect that the subsequent cession did not alter or extinguish the trust, referring to the trust in the original transaction which was the original lease between the parties.

The Wichitas under this trust occupy 1,463,935 acres south of the Canadian River, by virtue of an agreement entered into at Washington, October 19, 1872, as a home. With the Wichitas are also included the Caddoes and other affiliated bands. In consideration of this location and settlement and as showing its permanency "these Indians ceded and relinquished to the United States all their right, title, interest, or claim of any nature whatsoever to any lands in Texas, Louisiana, Indian Territory, or elsewhere within the limits of the United States." This tract is within the Cheyenne and Arapaho reservation. In addition to these agreements, the Indians themselves base their claim to this country as well as that as far south as the Red River, on guarantees made them in the council at Fort Arbuckle that they and their children would be permitted to remain on the particular reservations selected for them "as long as the waters should run." The Commissioner of Indian Affairs, in his letter as late as October 9, 1883, to the Secretary of the Interior, in reporting on the status of these Indians, says:

But from a thorough examination of the papers submitted and the records and correspondence on file I am convinced that the only obligation now resting upon the Government is that of confirming to these Indians by a secure and permanent title the lands now occupied by them. To this end the agreement of October 19, 1872, should be ratified by Congress, and the title confirmed by patent.

Mr. SYMES. What are you now reading from or quoting? A treaty or a comment upon a treaty?

Mr. HERMANN. I am now reading from a construction placed on this treaty by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs and the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SYMES. What Commissioner?

Mr. HERMANN. This bears date October 9, 1883.

Mr. SYMES. Who was Commissioner?

Mr. HERMANN. Commissioner Price.

Mr. SYMES. Are you not referring to the opinion or purported opinion of acting Commissioner Holcombe?

Mr. HERMANN. No, sir. I will refer to that opinion in a few moments. And as the gentleman from Colorado has alluded to it, I will do so now. In further confirmation of this position I call the attention of the House to the opinion expressed by acting Commissioner Holcombe in a communication addressed to the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Kirkwood. This is the position again taken by the Government on this question. He says:

The treaties by which the United States reacquired title to any of the lands in the Indian Territory, or obtained the conditional right to control the disposal of any of said lands, were the treaties with the Seminoles of March 21, 1866; with the Choctaws and Chickasaws of April 28, 1866; with the Creeks of June 14, 1866; and with the Cherokees of July 19, 1866.

By the third article of the treaty with the Seminoles (14 Stat., 756), said Indians ceded to the United States about 2,100,000 acres of land, "in compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon."

In compliance with the same desire, the Creeks, by the third article of the treaty with that tribe (14 Stat., 786), ceded about 3,200,000 acres to the United States, "to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon."

The lands reconveyed to the United States by the foregoing treaties are therefore held subject to the trust named. They can be appropriated only to the uses specified, and to those uses only by the United States, and then only in the manner provided for by law. Miscellaneous immigration even by the intended beneficiaries would be unauthorized and illegal.

The Choctaw and Chickasaw cession of April 28, 1866 (14 Statutes, 760), was by the tenth section thereof made subject to the conditions of the compact of June 22, 1885 (14 Statutes, 613), by the ninth article of which it was stipulated that the lands should be appropriated for the permanent settlement of such tribes or bands of Indians as the United States may desire to locate thereon.

Articles 15 and 16 of the treaty with the Cherokees (14 Stat., 803, 804) provide that the United States may settle any civilized Indians friendly with the Cherokees and adjacent tribes within the Cherokee country, on unoccupied lands, on certain terms and conditions specified in the treaty.

These provisions made the United States the agent of the Cherokees for the sale and disposal of unoccupied land in the Cherokee country for the benefit of said tribe, but restricted such sale and disposal exclusively to friendly Indians.

In pursuance of the stipulations of the foregoing compacts, and in the exercise of the trusts assumed by the United States under the several treaties, and in accordance with specific provisions of law and the lawful orders of the President, all the lands in the Indian Territory to which the United States has title have been permanently appropriated or definitely reserved for the uses and purposes named.

The title of the United States to lands in the Indian Territory is, as heretofore shown, subject to specific trusts, and it is not within the lawful power of either the legislative or executive departments of the Government to annihilate such trusts, or to avoid the obligations arising thereunder.

This opinion was submitted to the Secretary of the Interior April 25, 1881, received and accepted by him, and ever since acted upon as the rule and law of the Department.

Mr. SYMES. The gentleman is now reading from the opinion, or purported opinion, contained in a circular of Acting Commissioner Holcombe, of the Interior Department, and I understand the gentleman is now undertaking to support as a lawyer the legal position that when an Indian tribe by a deed or by cession transfers a piece of property to the Government and agrees that it takes it for a certain purpose, that is a trust within the meaning of the law.

Mr. HERMANN. Under this treaty it is. I have given the opinion of the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as a further comment on this construction. I shall advert to it again before I close. Under the language of the treaty the Government assumes an express trust, which attaches to its appropriation thereafter. Every instrument must be construed according to its own terms.

Mr. SYMES. I only desire to know the gentleman's position. He seems to dodge taking the position as a lawyer, and seeks out some acting commissioner to back him up in a circular written by some Department clerk some morning.

I am used to extraordinary legal positions; but when you look to that quarter for them, the mind has never yet existed that could imagine what letter may be written to-morrow, or what legal opinion may come forth from a clerk of some Department of the Government in the great hurry of business.

Mr. BAKER. If the gentleman will allow me, I will say that I understand the letter which the gentleman from Oregon has just read was expressly approved by the Interior Department, and formed the basis of subsequent action by the Department.

Mr. SYMES. No, sir.

Mr. HERMANN. Yes, sir. And I will state further that from that time down, as well as previously, the Government in all its transactions has acted upon just such a construction; and further to the gentleman from Colorado let me say, that I am very much surprised that he should characterize the Commissioner of Indian Affairs as an "itinerant subordinate." Here is a decision proceeding from the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, and approved by the Secretary of the Interior, and we may well presume that it was not put forth until after proper consultation with the law officers of the Department and their approval as to its correctness as a legal opinion. I proceed.

Special Agent Townsend, in his report as to these Wichitas, says their claims "are of long standing and their rights should be defined and guaranteed to them by some authority from which there shall be no appeal. Emigration and civilization are pressing upon these people on all sides." General Hazen, once superintendent of Indian affairs for the southwest of Indian Territory, including these Indians, writes to the Secretary of the Interior as late as April 14, 1883, and appealing for a confirmation of their present location says:

To one who is acquainted with these quiet, patient, and long-suffering people—long suffering mostly because they always remained at peace—there is a powerful appeal to the better instincts of our nature in their favor that can hardly be felt for any other people.

The remainder of these lands in the Choctaw and Chickasaw cession is set apart for the use of, and now occupied by, the Arapaho and Cheyenne Indians under Executive Order, and seems to be accepted by them in lieu of a former cession by treaty of lands in the Cherokee strip—the location on which they insist they did not understand, and never desired to occupy. Their present reservation is less in amount than that ceded to them of the Cherokee strip, a portion of which has since been appropriated for other tribes of friendly Indians. Thus it is seen that of the Chickasaw and Choctaw cession all is now claimed by treaty, or executive order, and all is occupied; and above all there still attaches the trust under which it was originally obtained—"the permanent settlement of the Wichita and certain other tribes or bands of Indians."

The Cheyenne and Arapahoes occupy their reservation in exchange and for relinquishment of their lands ceded them in the Cherokee strip with which they were not satisfied, and in consideration for this relinquishment and "in lieu thereof the United States agree to set apart for the absolute use and undisturbed occupation and as the future home of the Cheyenne tribe of Indians" the lands at present occupied by them; and to the Arapahoe tribe of Indians by the same precise language the lands occupied by them. These articles of agreement were entered into at Washington city November 18, 1873, signed by the representative chief and the Commissioner of Indian Affairs. It is of these lands given these tribes for their "absolute use, undisturbed occupation, and as their future home" that it is said by some the Indians hold merely by executive order which may be modified or rescinded at the pleasure of the Government! Is it any wonder the unlearned red man should become suspicious of all treaties, agreements, or executive orders, if they are to be thus construed so contrary to the letter as well as spirit? Are these lands to be opened to settlement without any treaty or assent?

The provisions of the bill and the conclusions of the majority of the committee are in strange contrast. The majority say:

The aggregate, therefore, of the lands to be opened to settlement under the provisions of this bill is 11,583,295 acres, a section of country larger in area than the three States of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, and New Jersey.

This, then, we are informed is to be the area of the proposed territory under the Oklahoma organization. But what is to form this area? The report enumerates Oklahoma land strip of the Creek and Seminole cession with 1,887,800 acres; the Public Land strip south of Colorado and Kansas, 3,672,640 acres, and the Cherokee strip, 6,022,855 acres. These together form the proposed territorial area of 11,583,295 acres. This would seem to be an assurance positive that at least this much shall form the new territory over which the new government and laws shall extend. But a reading of the bill invites us to a different conclusion. There we find no exception made of the 7,713,239 acres in the Chickasaw and Choctaw cession. No assent of these Indians is required. This will be disputed ground. Settlers will claim it under this bill, and the Indians under treaties.

Mr. HILL. Does not the gentleman from Oregon know that the bill provides for the appointment by the President of a commission to obtain the consent of the Indians, and provides further that "all such territory shall be excepted out of the boundaries, &c., until said tribes shall signify their assent to the President of the United States?

Mr. HERMANN. The bill provides just this, and nothing more:

That nothing in this act shall be construed to impair the rights of person or property or to impair any patent to lands now pertaining to the Indians in said Territory under the laws and treaties of the United States, or to include any territory occupied by any Indian tribe to which title has been conveyed by patent from the United States, without the consent of said tribe.

That is not the case with the Wichitas. No patent has been given to them yet, nor to the Cheyennes nor the Arapahoes.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Read on.

Mr. HERMANN. "Or any territory which by treaty or agreement with any Indian tribe is not, without the consent of said tribe, to be included within the territorial limits or jurisdiction of any State or Territory."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. That is it.

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, that is just the point where these gentleman are mistaken, because there is no treaty or agreement with the Cheyennes nor the Arapahoes which would give any such protection as here contemplated, and that is the reason why I claim that those Indians are left entirely out and that their assent is not required to be obtained.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman is entirely wrong.

Mr. HERMANN. And I invite the attention of the gentlemen who advocate this bill to that point, for there is evidently a great oversight in that portion of the bill. I ask whether the Cheyennes are included?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Certainly they are. The tribes are not named in the bill. It provides that the lands of no tribe shall be included in violation of any agreement or treaty.

Mr. HERMANN. The gentleman is again in error. The tribes are named. I have just referred for the benefit of the gentleman to the sections which provide that the Creeks and Seminoles and Cherokees shall signify their assent, and that upon their doing so the unoccupied lands occupied by those tribes shall be open to settlement, but there is nothing requiring the Cheyennes or the Arapahoes or the Wichitas, or any of the tribes who inhabit these 7,000,000 acres, to be consulted as to their assent. The lands of the Choctaw and Chickasaw cession are not even referred to in the bill, and the treaty rights of the friendly Indians occupying these lands are entirely ignored.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman has just read the clause of the bill which contradicts his statement.

Mr. HERMANN. Sections 5 and 6 provide that the Creeks, Seminoles, and Cherokees shall signify their assent, and then the unoccupied lands ceded by these Indians shall be opened to settlement. No other tribes are mentioned in the bill, by name or otherwise. But assuming for illustration they are all included, and in the event of their refusal to assent, what then? What extent of country shall then clearly constitute the future Territory of Oklahoma? The Public Land strip, or panhandle, is all that is left. This, then, will be the only fragment of the many millions of acres referred to, which the bill gravely provides "is hereby declared to be a part of the public domain of the United States, and shall be opened to settlement under the operation of the homestead laws only." This is the only land which is expressly opened to settlement. The status of the Chickasaw and Choctaw cession is left in painful uncertainty. It is not surprising that the majority should fail to construe their own measure.

It is claimed that all future acquisition is to depend really upon the negotiation with and assent of the various Indian tribes! Is it upon such shadowy expectations that Congress legislates governments into existence?—and more shadowy still in view of the pleading remonstrance of the tribes affected by the bill. This is a recommendation for a reversal of the usual order in governmental organization. We are accustomed to believe that first there should exist the territory, and secondly the people, and then the machinery of government.

Even if the assent of the Indians is obtained, what evidence have we that there is a reasonable number of inhabitants who are citizens? Sections 2147 and 2148, Revised Statutes, provide that no white person has a right to go into the Indian country to reside without a permit, and if when once ejected he returns he becomes liable to a penalty of $1,000. With such restrictions we can not expect to find many bona fide inhabitants already there desirable as citizens in any American government, particularly where, being in limited numbers, they will necessarily be required to share more or less in the civic administration of affairs in the newly inaugurated system. No persons to be benefited by this government are asking for it. There is not a single individual in the entire Indian Territory now petitioning for the passage of this bill. Even the few who are there by various permits and relations do not ask it.

Mr. SYMES. The gentleman says that there are no people in the Indian Territory asking for the organization of this Territorial government. Is it not a fact that the Government has by force kept people from going into that Territory, and is not that the reason why there are no people there asking for a Territorial government?

Mr. HERMANN. Mr. Chairman, I am very much surprised that the gentleman from Colorado, as well as other gentlemen who advocate this bill, should so persistently emphasize the words "force" and "forcibly." Gentlemen say that the Government has forcibly expelled or excluded people from this Territory. How has the Government done that? In what way and by what authority? Simply by the same authority and the same right that either one of those gentlemen has the right, or I myself have the right, to "enforce" the absence of an individual who is an intruder upon our private property without our consent or without authority of law. The law and the treaties provide against intrusion, and the lands are reserved for a specific purpose. The Government has solemnly guaranteed and stipulated with the tribes, quiet and peaceable possession of the country, and provided for protection against "intrusion from all unauthorized citizens of the United States who may attempt to settle on their lands or reside in their Territory." Is this not enough?

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. Will there ever be any people there to ask for a Territorial government as long as the cattle kings are allowed to fence in that Territory?

Mr. HERMANN. Then, Mr. Chairman, let us first remove those obstacles in a just, regular, and proper way, so that after this proceeding is all over we can wash our hands of it in an honorable manner, and not lay ourselves open to be denounced in infamy as a nation of covenant-breakers.

Mr. SYMES. That is just what we propose.

Mr. HERMANN. I have been criticising this bill more especially with reference to the 7,000,000 acres now occupied by the tribes named on the Choctaw and Chickasaw cession, and I say this bill does not include any provision which would require them to give their assent; and even if it did, I regard your proposition unwise in legislating at all in the direction of a Territory organization until a full, free, and final assent has been procured to the settlement of this country. This being done a subsequent Congress can provide for the government proposed in this bill if the population and needs of the country should then require it. Another objection to your bill is that it constitutes that little Public Land strip a Territory of the United States without regard to the acquisition of any other lands. Such a miniature Territorial government would be a farce.

Until the assent of the Indians shall be obtained, this bill on its passage can only affect the narrow Public Land strip, except for judicial purposes. Over this district, then, without people, it is proposed that an organized Territorial government shall be established. There is no petition before us from any people in this section asking for a Territorial government, nor have we any evidence there are any people in good faith residing there; and yet a governor and secretary are to be appointed and provided for, and to be restricted in their authority by boundaries hardly the extent of many fair-sized counties. A governor of the Public Land strip! This Territory and embryo State, capable only of settling twenty-three thousand occupants with 160 acres each! A wise proviso in the bill postpones the election of a Legislative Assembly and delegate to Congress until the President shall order; or, as might properly have been said, until there are inhabitants to become voters. A Territory may be termed the foundation of the future State. Then let us construct the Territory of such dimensions as that it may for all time fitly serve as the solid and enduring foundation for one of the great States of this Union. If the area is as yet too contracted let us patiently defer until the limits may be extended, and that only by fair, honorable, open-handed negotiation. Let it not be said in some future year that the foundation we are asked to lay was laid by a betrayal of the oft-repeated compacts and treaty assurances entered into with the present occupants.

Sir, I do not argue that these lands or the larger portion of them should remain forever in their present status, to the future exclusion of the white man. I very frankly confess that the millions of acres occupied by these Indians are greatly in excess of their requirements or of any possible use by them. When the forests and prairies once contained abundant game and the chase supplied their exclusive wants these same Indians required more scope of country to follow the game, and could bear less intrusion from another people than at present. Now the game has entirely disappeared. The fruits of the soil and the domestic stock are their only resort.

Their very wants, which in past years required a large district, now can be content with much less. As an incident in this reversed change of life and condition this great excess of territory now remains useless to any class of people, except to cattle monopolies and other intruders. Those great factors of our country, the home-seekers, of whom it is so much the favored policy of this nation to aid, encourage, and protect, they are admonished not to enter, but to respect the laws of their country, and the obligations, treaties, and orders which at present appertain to these lands, until a change of law and obligation is effected in a just and creditable negotiation. There is a right way to do this; then let us do it. This pending measure maps out the future State, names the exterior boundaries, and then excepts those divisions from it whose occupants decline to signify their assent. It is as if the house-builder were to create a design for his edifice on the basis of a certain plot of real estate belonging to another, or rather encumbered with peculiar trusts of another which must first be removed. If he should undertake to construct one corner of the building on his own insufficient and narrow strip adjoining, proposing to continue the building on to the adjoining estate after the trust should be removed, by the voluntary and uncertain consent of the beneficiary or owner, would not any community bestow upon him either its severest criticism or its tender pity?

The immediate effect of the pending bill then is to include only the narrow strip, or Panhandle, and hereafter extend its provisions over the adjoining Territory when the present trusts of indefinite duration attaching to it shall be removed. If like management is not good sense in an individual it is not statesmanship in the American Congress. If we are sincere in our purpose and desire to appropriate the unoccupied lands of the Indian Territory for homestead settlement, is it not for the settler's own best interest and future security that every evidence of good faith and fair dealing should be observed? This being first consummated through a commission or by the Indian Department itself and the Indian trust extinguished the land becomes legally and justly opened to settlement, and there is then sufficient area to include in an organized Territorial government. When these conditions concur it will be time enough to organize Oklahoma Territory. Believing, sir, that it does not comport with the honor and respect of a great Government like ours to act hastily, and still less to act unjustly, I am constrained to oppose this measure and to favor the creation of a commission to first adjust all conflicting differences and to arrange for the opening of the unoccupied lands to settlement.

Not to provide for an adjustment previous to legislation for organization is to create a pending threat and indirectly to coerce. Quoting from the minority:

The passage of a bill organizing a Territorial government, under such circumstances, over a weak and defenseless people, with a condition requiring their assent before the bill should become operative, would evince on the part of a powerful government like that of the United States such a predetermination to create the proposed government as would deprive these people of all freedom of volition in the matter. It would be a miserable perversion of terms to call an assent thus obtained free and voluntary.

It is the iron hand in the velvet glove.

Mr. STRUBLE. Will the gentleman allow me a question right there? Supposing that this commission which the gentleman contemplates should be appointed and after negotiation should fail positively and utterly to secure any concession from the Indians, what then? Would the gentleman allow them to go right along and hold these lands for centuries?

Mr. HERMANN. I propose we shall go on and keep our faith. Let us recognize the solemn seal placed on those treaties which will remain there forever to remind us of our sacred duty which we owe to those weak and defenseless people and which we should fully discharge though it should take from now to eternity. But I remind the gentleman from Iowa, with all due respect, that it will not be long before there will be none of these people left, for they are fast fading out of existence; and in a short time—probably in the generation which is to come after us—they will largely have passed away. Let us while they do exist treat them honorably and fairly; let us stand by our word of honor and the very letter of our compact.

The language quoted from the minority report of the committee is not too strong in view of the past legislation as to these Indians and their interesting and romantic history; not less than the original and continued policy and purposes of the Government in the appropriation of the entire country known as the Indian Territory. The treatment of this subject stands on an entirely different basis from that of the other Indian tribes of the nation. Our policy, legislation, and precedents as to the Indian tribes generally should not be cited in this Congress as a criterion for similar control over the lands, and Indians of the Indian Territory. We should not prove unmindful of the voluntary relinquishment of other lands and privileges by these Indians in accepting the voluntary invitation of the United States to make this country their future, permanent, and undisturbed home for them and their children. This guarantee was evidenced by the solemnity of patents to these lands as well as various treaties and agreements dating back over half a century in our history.

While many of our Indians may be summarily removed from one location and reservation to another with no assent on their part, yet as to these people in the Creek and Seminole and Choctaw cessions a higher respect is due.

A GENERAL COMMISSION.

A general commission, such as provided by the Holman bill, is superior to a special commission. The first, having examined all the Indian lands of the Government and consulted in person with all the Indian tribes, can better know what lands are available for further Indian occupancy and what portions may be best fitted for certain tribes. Climatic effects should also be consulted. A removal from a cold to a hot climate has proven fatal often. Of the Nez Percé Indians taken from Idaho to Indian Territory 25 per cent. died in twelve months. Some Indians being advanced in agriculture should not be confined to lands only fit for grazing, and the converse is true of others. Some tribes will agree to assimilate with others and to accept them within the same reservation limits, as in the case of the Cheyenne and Arapaho tribes, the Comanche, Kiowa, and Caddoes, the Walla Walla, Umatilla, and Cayuse Indians, while others will not consent, or if forcibly united under one agency will engage in ceaseless broils and hostilities.

This commission will be a means of mutual interchange of Indian sentiment as well as an ascertainment of the best and most practicable method of contracting the Indian limits and opening the surplus to an honorable settlement of the white man.

A special commission being confined in its investigation to a limited territory can not reach the same intelligent, broad, and satisfactory result so desirable to a liberal understanding by this Congress in its treatment of a great subject involving alike the integrity of many solemn compacts by this Government, the assured rights and peace of the dependent Indian, and the anxious expectations of American homeseekers.

The Holman bill is comprehensive, and provides:

SEC. 2. That it shall be their duty in making such inspection to ascertain and report in detail as to the exact condition and needs of the Indians; what steps are necessary to be taken on behalf of the Government to improve their situation in the direction of their self-support and complete civilization; what, if any, of the reservations may be reduced in area, and what portion thereof, not needed for Indian occupation, may be held by the Government in trust for the Indians having title thereto by law or treaty, and disposed of for their benefit; what, if any, Indians may, with their consent be removed to other reservations, with a view to their concentration, and the sale, on their behalf and for their benefit, of their abandoned reservations; what, if any, lands reserved by executive orders for Indian occupation are no longer needed for such purpose and may be restored to the public domain; what Indian lands now held in common should be allotted in severalty, the quantity to be allotted to heads of families, unmarried adults, orphans, or others, and what, if any, Indians are not provided with or located upon reservations or land which may be patented to them.

It is indeed a measure proceeding from the department of the Government having the daily study of the subject, acquired by immediate contact and supervision of the Indians.

The President in his last message to Congress devotes much thought to this question, and presents it in its practical as well as humane considerations. He recommends the creation of this general commission, to be composed of six commissioners; "that they ascertain from such inspection what, if any, of the reservations may be reduced in area, and in such cases what part not needed for Indian occupation may be purchased by the Government from the Indians and disposed of for their benefit; what, if any, Indians may with their consent be removed to other reservations, with a view to their concentration and the sale on their behalf of their abandoned reservations; what Indian lands now held in common should be allotted in severalty; in what manner and to what extent the Indians upon the reservations can be placed under the protection of our laws and subjected to their penalties."

Let the appointment of this commission be mandatory, and not discretionary, as left in the law passed at the last session of Congress authorizing the President to negotiate with the Indians of Indian Territory for the same object.

OKLAHOMA.

The unoccupied land known as Oklahoma ("red man's land"), comprising 1,887,300 acres, the unlawful settlement of which was attempted by Payne and his followers, is a part of the Creek and Seminole cession (article 3), and is coupled with the trust that the lands are "to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon." Said article 3 is as follows:

In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Creeks hereby cede and convey to the United States, to be sold to and used as homes for such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon, the west half of their entire domain, to be divided by a line running north and south, * * * and in consideration of said cession of the west half of their lands, estimated to contain 3,250,560 acres, the United States agree to pay the sum of 30 cents per acre, amounting to $975,168, in the manner hereinafter provided, &c.

Over two-thirds of Oklahoma is in this cession from the Creeks, and the remainder is from the Seminoles in their cession of March 21, 1866, with this language: "In compliance with the desire of the United States to locate other Indians and freedmen thereon, the Seminoles cede and convey," &c. The price fixed was 15 cents per acre. These cessions were for a specific purpose. There were inducements in the contract. No higher evidence of this can be found than in the paltry sum mentioned as the price. We must not forget that these tribes had an absolute title in fee simple to these lands. They held patents for them from the United States. It is well known they had an antipathy to the settlement of whites among them, but did not object to allowing "other Indians and freedmen" and "such other civilized Indians as the United States may choose to settle thereon." The lands were ceded for a specific and express purpose.

A contract is as binding in a treaty as in a law. The purpose of the contract should not be changed without a concurrence of the Indians. They claim, however, that if the purpose is to be changed they should at least be allowed the minimum value the Government fixes for its lands when sold for settlement to white men.

Secretary Teller, in his communication to the President (Executive Document 54) as to these lands, says:

It is believed that there will be found at all times in the United States a wholesome public opinon that will demand of the Government that its contracts heretofore made with the Indians be respected in all cases where they do not conflict with the interests of the Indians and are not unjust to the people of the United States. * * * It is, however, within the power of the Government, with the consent of the Indians interested, to change this provision of the treaties, so that these desirable unoccupied lands may be placed within the lawful reach of settlers.

THE CHEROKEE LANDS.

That larger body of unoccupied lands—the Cherokee strip comprising 6,022,754 acres—is less subject to settlement than the rest, and is even more encumbered with treaty conditions.

By the sixteenth article of the treaty with the Cherokees, of July 19, 1866 (14 Stat., 804), it is provided that—

The United States may settle friendly Indians in any part of the Cherokee country west of the ninety-sixth degree, to be taken in compact form, in quantity not exceeding 160 acres for each member of each of said tribes thus to be settled; the boundaries of each of said districts to be distinctly marked, and the land conveyed in fee-simple to each of said tribes to be held in common or by their members in severalty as the United States may decide.

Said land thus disposed of to be paid for to the Cherokee Nation at such price as may be agreed upon between the said parties in interest, subject to the approval of the President, and if they should not agree, then the price to be fixed by the President.

The Cherokee Nation to retain the right of possession of and jurisdiction over all said country west of 96° of longitude until thus sold and occupied, after which their jurisdiction and right of possession to terminate forever as to each of said districts thus sold and occupied.

Under this treaty the Government settled the Osages, Kaws, Pawnees, Poncas, Nez Percés, Otoes, and Missourias on a part. The Cherokee legislature passed an act authorizing a delegation to arrange for an adjustment, as follows:

* * * The said delegation are hereby instructed and empowered to agree to and receive for said lands, upon which friendly Indians have already been located, what will be a fair and equitable price for such lands, and not less than $1.25 per acre.

Be it further enacted, That on the payment of such sum as agreed upon by the said delegation and the United States to the treasury of the Cherokee Nation as other moneys are paid, the said delegation shall, in the name of the Cherokee Nation, execute a deed of conveyance or relinquishment of such tracts to the United States in trust for the benefit of the Indians occupying and located upon such lands. * * *

The land so settled by these friendly Indians amounted to 551,732 acres. The Indians were never consulted as to the price, and in this respect the treaty was ignored from the outset. They declined conveying these lands to the Government, and it could not convey the same in fee simple to these friendly Indians, as it had stipulated in the treaty. The Cherokees retained the right of possession and jurisdiction over the country. On July 31, 1876 (19 Stat., 120), Congress provided for a commission to appraise all the Cherokee lands. This was again a flagrant violation of the letter as well as spirit of the treaty. The treaty only provided for appraising such lands as friendly Indians settled. They were allowed no voice in the appraisement, nor was any provision made for submitting to a fixed price by the President in case the Cherokees remonstrated against the valuation. The Commissioner of Indian Affairs instructed the appraisers who were appointed, as follows:

In determining the valuation per acre of these lands, you will take into consideration the fact that these are lands for Indian occupancy and settlement only, and, consequently, less valuable than lands open to white settlement.

In their report, dated August 22, 1877, they say:

In valuing these lands, it is our impression that the chief difficulty consists in determining the amount of allowance which ought to be made in view of "the fact that these lands are for Indian occupancy and settlement only, and consequently less valuable than lands open to white settlement." We have devoted our attention carefully to the consideration of this subject. Our conclusion is that, in view of this restriction placed upon their use, these lands are worth about one-half as much as they would be if open to settlement by white people. As far as made our appraisal is, in our judgment, in conformity with that opinion.

The price fixed was 47.49 cents per acre, except the lands taken for the Pawnees, amounting to 230,014 acres, which they fixed at 70 cents per acres.

The Cherokees complained that their best lands were now selected for these friendly Indians and valued no higher than their western lands which are far more inferior. The eastern portion, being more fertile and favored with much more moisture, is well adapted for farming, while the western portion is more arid and only fit for grazing, and hence may remain many years unoccupied and not paid for. The Indians then claimed $1.25 per acre for their lands so taken and occupied.

Secretary Kirkwood, in his letter to the President, of February 28, 1883, on this matter, says:

I think that in this matter the Cherokees have some cause to complain that they have not been fairly dealt by.

Secretary Teller, in his letter to the Senate Committee on Indian Affairs, of January 31, 1883, says:

I do not think it is fair or just for the United States to select the most valuable tract of these lands and pay for them at the rate fixed by the President as the price per acre for the whole tract.

On March 3, 1883, Congress provided for payment of $300,000 to the Cherokees on condition that conveyances be made in trust for the benefit of the Pawnees, Poncas, Otoes, and Missourias and Osages, and patents were made to the United States in trust for each of these tribes. With appropriation made in 1880 of $300,000, and $48,389.46 in 1881, ostensibly for the Poncas, and $300,000 on March 3, 1883, above referred to, making $648,389.46, the Cherokees applied to the credit of the $689,665.55 due from the Government (at $1.25 per acre) on the 551,732.44 acres, on which friendly Indians have been settled.

The first $300,000 was paid on the unequal and illegal appraisement of the commission, made in 1877, the appropriation being in 1880; and the second $300,000 being paid in March, 1883, after the recommendations of both Secretary Kirkwood and Secretary Teller that a better price should be paid. It is claimed by some that the second $300,000 was a payment on the remaining unoccupied lands of the Cherokee strip, and it is reasoned that therefore these lands being thus paid for are now subject to control by the Government for occupancy or for purposes of Territorial government. A sufficient answer to this would be that the treaty does not authorize the sale nor appraisement of any of the unoccupied tracts. In the letter referred to of Secretary Teller he says, in alluding to the proposed last $300,000, that "it is not an unreasonable one, as the sums already paid to the Cherokee nation, with this proposed appropriation added, are not believed to be in excess of the value of the lands upon which friendly Indians have already been located."

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. The gentleman understands of course that this bill does not propose to include the Cherokee strip within this Territory without the assent of the Cherokees; and even if they assent it is proposed to pay them for the land at the rate of $1.25 per acre.

Mr. HERMANN. I will say to the gentleman that this argument is made in reply to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. STRUBLE] who has spoken so very ably this evening of our treaty stipulations in reference to the Cherokee land strip, and yet arguing that the Cherokees had more than their right. I am endeavoring to show that these Cherokee lands are hedged about by these treaties and honorable stipulations which it is impossible to avoid without just and proper negotiation with the Indians.

Mr. STRUBLE. Of course the gentleman did not understand me to say that the Government should disregard in the least any existing treaty stipulation or disregard the present status of that title. I argued these equities lying at the foundation of the cession, showing that the Indians had more than they ought to have. Yet we recognize by the bill that the commission shall treat with them as owning both the entire equity and the fee of the land.

Mr. WEAVER, of Iowa. And we propose to pay them $1.25 an acre.

Mr. HERMANN. I feel satisfied that the honorable gentleman from Iowa would not be a party to anything bearing on its face a tincture of dishonor.

To all the unoccupied Cherokee lands that tribe retains the absolute title by patent and as valid as that of any private ownership. The title being still in the Cherokees it can only be divested by a compliance with the treaty or a voluntary agreement on their part. This has been definitely decided by the Supreme Court of the United States in Holden vs. Joy (17 Wallace, page 211).

The Secretary of the Interior, in his letter to the United States Senate January 3, 1883, says:

The Cherokees have a fee-simple title to their lands, and they do not recognize the right of the Department to interfere in the management of their affairs with reference thereto.

This should also be a sufficient answer as to our right to annul and prohibit the Cherokee leases.

I think I have now clearly established that the only district which can at present enjoy the honors proposed by the pending bill is the uninhabited Public Land strip, or, as it is more appropriately known, "No Man's Land." This becomes a Territory regardless of Indian assent as to remainder. All the rest must be subject to the assent of the Indians. Now, should this Congress deliberately establish a Territorial organization, with its costly machinery, its governor, and other officers, over a district not much larger than a county and without inhabitants? A governor and no one to govern! The play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out! No; let us rather await the two prime conditions for any Territory—the area and the people. Let us await a just and honorable abrogation of the treaty contract with the present occupants.

We have beheld the Indian sullenly retreating before the car of progress, pausing ever and anon to dispute for a resting-place. But a short time since the East was driving him to the West, but now the West is turning him backward again. He is between two hostile forces. Formerly he was encouraged by the policy of our civilization to "go West." The game was abundant, the buffalo, the elk, deer, bear, and beaver roaming undisturbed where now exist large cities, fruitful orchards, and waving fields of grain. The treaties often stipulated, as in that made by General Jackson with the Cherokees, "that the United States shall give to all the poor warriors who may remove to the western side of the Mississippi River one rifle-gun and ammunition, one blanket, and one brass kettle, or in lieu of the brass kettle a beaver-trap." These are no longer of much use, and now we supply him with the plow, the ax, and the hoe. Times have changed and with them conditions. The Indian hero of Cooper has passed away. Deerslayer, Leatherstocking, and the Last of the Mohicans all gone! Wherever he gazes he beholds the scriptural injunction that man should eat his bread in the sweat of his brow. He at last realizes that he is to be no exception.

This truth is also realized by our own Government. A different policy must soon prevail. The Indian must exist by his own industrial pursuit. He must take his land in severalty, cultivate and improve it. He must become directly amenable to the law, and answer for its violation just as any white man does now. By our system of reservation and training schools and the industrial experience now offered the present generation of Indians will soon be enabled to cast off the lines of their present wardship and enter successfully on the new era.

We have but to be patient a brief time. With many the period has already arrived, and in some instances reservations should be disbanded, in others they should be contracted and the lands restored to the public domain for settlement by those seeking homes. The bead and the blanket, the tattoo and the wigwam, annuities and inexcusable idleness should all disappear and give place to the newer and better order of things. But whatever we do let it be done with deliberation, with wisdom, prudence, and justice. We are in this duty as the guardian is to the ward. Inflexible good faith is required and should be demanded.

We are a great and powerful nation, we possess a high order of civilization, we are a magnanimous people, and just, as well as merciful, and we can not suffer the reproach of a broken faith and a dishonored covenant with a dependent people. We owe it to ourselves, we owe it to our posterity that our nation's honor should be preserved inviolate with the weak as well as the strong.

Mr. HILL. I move that the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. WELLBORN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. CULBERSON reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 7217) to provide for the organization of the Territory of Oklahoma, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

And then, on motion of Mr. HILL (at 10 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.), the House adjourned.

PETITIONS, ETC.

The following petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk, under the rule, and referred as follows:

By Mr. BAYNE: Petition of Edward Schendel, late of Company B, Ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Reserve Corps, for arrears of pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BEACH: Petition of members of Waterbury Post, Grand Army of the Republic, of Wurtsborough, N. Y., in favor of the Senate bill to pension disabled soldiers—to the same committee.

By Mr. BOUTELLE: Memorial of members of Hampden Grange, No. 270, Patrons of Husbandry, of Hampden, Me., in favor of the bill taxing the sale of imitation butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BRUMM: Petition of Fred. Linkenhoof and 49 others; of John Dougherty and 46 others; of Samuel Major and 65 others; of Thomas McAvery and 50 others; of John Roe and 25 others, and of Joshua Richards and 26 others, asking for the passage of the pension bill as recommended by the pension committee of the Grand Army of the Republic—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURLEIGH: Petition of a number of citizens of Putnam, N. Y., praying Congress to impose a revenue tax on all forms of adulterated butter of not less than 10 cents a pound—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. BUTTERWORTH: Petition of Joseph F. Larkin and others, praying for the redemption of the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

Also, memorial of R. W. Wise and others, of Cincinnati, Ohio, protesting against the obstructing the navigation of the Ohio River—to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. J. E. CAMPBELL: Petition of T. F. Lucas, John O. Humphrey, and others, citizens of Cleveland, Ohio, asking for better legal protection of young girls in the District of Columbia—to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. J. M. CAMPBELL: Petition of Harrison Post, No. 231, Grand Army of the Republic, of Pennsylvania, asking the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLLINS: Petition of Thomas F. Leahy, for an invalid pension—to the same committee.

By Mr. COMPTON: Petition of F. R. Veitch, Lizzie V. Boyle, and others, heirs of John Veitch, of Prince George County, Maryland, asking that their war claims be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. GEDDES: Petition of J. N. Mitchell and 42 others, members of Plymouth Post, No. 431, Grand Army of the Republic, Department of Ohio, for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. GIFFORD: Petition of citizens of Dakota, praying for the division of the Territory upon the seventh standard parallel—to the Committee on Territories.

By Mr. HARRIS: Papers relating to the claim of Josiah Chambers, of Carroll County, Georgia—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. HAYNES: Petition of Mary Jane Magoon, for a pension—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, evidence to support bill granting an increase of pension to Stephen D. Smith—to the same committee.

By Mr. HEWITT: Petition of Charles A. Kron, late of Company I, Seventh United States Cavalry, for relief—to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. HOLMES: Petition of John Donebar and 23 others, citizens of Story County, Iowa, praying for the passage of the bill taxing all imitations of butter—to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LAWLER: Resolution of officers of Assembly No. 3710, Knights of Labor, of Danville, Ill., protesting against the crushing out of a legitimate industry of the country by the passage of the bill putting an internal-revenue tax upon oleomargarine—to the same committee.

By Mr. McCREARY: Papers relating to the claim of Pearce Noland, of Shelby County, Kentucky, and of John H. McGaughey, of Warren County, Mississippi—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. MILLIKEN: Petition of J. F. Coffin and others, and of James H. Lord and others, for a tax on oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of James O. Bradbury and others, that a pension be granted to George Henderson—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PERKINS: Petition of N. M. Miller and 70 others, citizens of Mound Valley, Kans., and members of the Grand Army of the Republic, asking for the passage of Senate bill 1886, relating to pensions—to the same committee.

By Mr. RIGGS: Petition of G. E. Fletcher, for taxation of oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

Also, petition of E. E. B. Sawyer and others, of Camp Point, Ill., for pension legislation—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. ROCKWELL: Petition of H. H. Wellington and others, of Adams and Pittsfield, Mass., praying for the immediate passage of a bill for the redemption of the trade-dollar—to the Committee on Coinage, Weights, and Measures.

By Mr. ST. MARTIN: Petition of Louisa Loeb and others, heirs of Mary Heine, asking that their war claim be referred to the Court of Claims—to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. SKINNER: Papers relating to the claim of Israel S. Davis, of Micajah Hardesty, of Mary and Frances Morton and Martha Oglesby, of David W. Morton, of Joseph R. Franklin, and of Jacob Utley, of Carteret County; of Thomas D. Harris and of James C. Ballance, of Hyde County; of Josiah L. Bell, of Newport; of A. O. Dey, administrator of J. S. Dey, of Currituck County; of Joseph J. Jordan, of Hertford County; of James H. Hyatt, of Perquimans County; and of William Parker, of Harnett County, North Carolina—to the same committee.

By Mr. SPRINGER: Petition of citizens of Buffalo, Ill., for the passage of Senate bill 1886—to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STORM: Petition of Trades Assembly of Western Pennsylvania, against taxing oleomargarine—to the Committee on Agriculture.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, June 4, 1886.

Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. J. G. BUTLER, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I present the petitions of Amos M. Thayer, judge of the circuit court of Saint Louis, Mo.; of Austin Adams, judge of the supreme court of Iowa; of L. E. Wales, United States judge, and J. C. Patterson, United States district attorney, of Delaware; of E. M. Bartlett, United States district attorney, and George B. Lake, late chief-justice of Nebraska; of M. I. Townsend, United States district attorney of Northern New York; of George F. Danforth, of New York; of R. S. Tuthill, United States attorney of Southern Illinois; of Moulton, Johnson & Ryan, and of Samuel F. Miller, a judge of the Supreme Court of the United States, all praying for a code of procedure. All these petitions are identical in form and in print, and are being circulated by somebody who evidently takes a deep interest in the subject. I move that they be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I also present a petition of 48 citizens of Barre, Vt., praying for the imposition of a revenue tax on spurious butter; also a petition of Albert McClellan and 55 other citizens of Cambridge, Vt., praying for similar legislation; also a petition of S. M. Safford and 56 other citizens of Cambridge, Vt., praying for the same legislation. I move the reference of the petitions to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. CULLOM. I present a telegram, in the nature of a memorial, and which is quite lengthy, from Nathan Bennett, president of the Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers, of Joliet, Ill., remonstrating against the passage of the proposed legislation in relation to oleomargarine. I move the reference of the memorial to the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. EVARTS presented the petition of Elizabeth B. Voorhies, M. B. Binninger, and 57 other citizens of New York, praying for legislation providing better protection to young girls in the District of Columbia; which was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

Mr. MCPHERSON presented the petition of J. R. Haskell, of New York city, praying for an investigation in regard to the failure to carry out the clause in the fortification act of March 3, 1885, making an appropriation for the purchase or manufacture of a multicharge gun and casting the same, &c.; which was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. HARRIS, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5509) for the relief of Saint Patrick's church in the city of Washington, D. C., reported it without amendment, and submitted a report thereon.

Mr. SPOONER, from the Committee on the District of Columbia, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1882) to repeal parts of an act relating to tax on the business of real-estate agents in the District of Columbia, approved June 20, 1872, reported it with amendments.

Mr. CONGER, from the Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 5862) providing for the establishment of certain light-houses, reported it with amendments.

He also, from the same committee, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7627) providing for the construction of a light-house supply steamer for the Atlantic and Gulf coasts, and for other puposes, reported it with amendments.

INDIAN TERRITORY INVESTIGATION.

Mr. DAWES. The Committee on Indian Affairs were instructed on the 11th of June, 1884, the 3d of December, 1884, and in February, 1885, to pursue certain investigations recited in the resolutions of those dates here in Washington, and also in the Indian Territory. They have attended to that duty, have taken a large amount of testimony, and a report has been prepared covering the matters investigated at that time.

This report was prepared by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], a member of the committee who is necessarily absent from the Senate. I ask unanimous consent to make the report in his name and that the report and the evidence and the accompanying documents may be printed.

I wish to say also that another branch of the investigation ordered by the Senate in Dakota and Montana Territories was pursued by a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON] was chairman, and that at a subsequent time he will make report as to that; but the report I now submit can be made in the name of the Senator from Alabama, and I should like to have it printed with the accompanying evidence.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Massachusetts, in behalf of the Senator from Alabama [Mr. MORGAN], makes a report, which will be printed.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Mr. SHERMAN introduced a bill (S. 2597) granting a pension to Joseph E. Kiel; which was read twice by its title, and, with the accompanying papers, referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. BLAIR introduced a bill (S. 2598) granting a pension to James Noyes; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

Mr. EDMUNDS introduced a bill (S. 2599) granting a pension to Emily C. Stannard; which was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENTS TO APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Mr. CULLOM submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the river and harbor appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HOAR submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the sundry civil appropriation bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Library, and ordered to be printed.

SUSPENSION OF PUBLIC-LAND LAWS.

Mr. INGALLS submitted the following resolution; which was read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, directed to inform the Senate whether the Commissioner of the General Land Office has, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, issued a circular in the following words:

"Circular.

"DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, GENERAL LAND OFFICE,
"Washington, D. C., June 2, 1886.

"To registers and receivers United States land offices:

"GENTLEMEN: The repeal of the 'pre-emption, timber-culture,' and 'desert-land' laws being now the subject of consideration by Congress, all applications to enter lands under said laws are hereby suspended from and after this date until the 1st day of August, 1886, and you are hereby directed to receive no filings or new applications for entry under said laws during said time.

"WM. A. J. SPARKS, Commissioner.

"Approved.

"L. Q. C. LAMAR, Secretary."

And if such circular has been issued, to inform the Senate by what act it is claimed that Congress has delegated to the Commissioner of the General Land Office, or to the Secretary of the Interior, or to those officers acting jointly, the power to suspend by executive order the operation throughout the United States of the pre-emption, the timber-culture, and the desert-land acts, and to deny to citizens of the United States their rights under said statutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there is no objection to the present consideration of the resolution the question is on its adoption.

Mr. BECK. I should like to have it lie over until to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution lies over under the rule, objection being made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. Let it be printed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It will be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Order of Business 869, being the Chinese indemnity bill.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Upon this bill the Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] has the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. As the Senator from Missouri seems to be absent, I ask the Senator from Vermont to yield to me that I may move to proceed to the consideration of the consular and diplomatic appropriation bill. I do not think it will take a great while to dispose of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I think that we should save a great deal of time in all these matters by sticking to one thing until it is done.

Mr. ALLISON. So I agree.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But we have always understood that the Committee on Appropriations when they were ready should have the right to go ahead, and I can not refuse it. I hope my friend will allow the pending bill to be laid aside informally.

Mr. ALLISON. I ask that it be laid aside informally.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Pending the consideration of the Chinese indemnity bill, the Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] asks that it be laid aside informally with a view to proceed to the consideration of an appropriation bill. Is there objection? The Chair hears none.

Mr. BUTLER. Will the Senator from Iowa yield to me for the purpose of an inquiry?

Mr. ALLISON. Certainly.

Mr. BUTLER. I have been informed that while I was absent from the Senate yesterday some understanding was reached in regard to the Calendar, and it was understood that on Monday and Tuesday we would devote ourselves to the cases on the Calendar. I should be glad to be informed if that is true. I have been trying to get the consideration of a bill for a week, and we have been going on in a sort of hop, skip, and jump style, it seems to me, of transacting the public business. I should be very glad indeed to have some time to consider the matter and to get it off my hands. Therefore, I shall be glad to inquire if there was any agreement to that effect.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It was stated yesterday after the doors were closed, after conference on both sides of the Chamber, and it was hoped everybody would agree (I do not say that there was unanimous consent that it should be done, but there was no objection), that Monday and Tuesday we would give to the consideration of the Calendar, under the principles of Rule VIII, not taking up the large subjects but going on with the minor affairs like the one I know my friend from South Carolina wishes to get up.

Mr. BUTLER. The bill that I wish to ask the consideration of will of course lead to some debate; the Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] I believe antagonizes it; but it is a matter of very considerable consequence and I should like to have it considered.

Mr. DAWES. Under the rule, if anybody objects the Senator can move to proceed to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator will be entitled on Monday under that understanding to move the bill out of its order on the Calendar if the Senator wishes to take it up.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It was understood that to-morrow the pension bills on the Calendar should be disposed of.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

Mr. INGALLS. I move that the President of the Senate be empowered to fill the vacancy upon the Committee on the District of Columbia occasioned by the resignation of the Senator from Virginia [Mr. RIDDLEBERGER].

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Kansas? The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE] to fill that vacancy.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments.

Mr. ALLISON. Although there appears to be a great number of amendments to the bill, I will state to Senators that a large number of the amendments are mere amendments of form. The Committee on Appropriations thought it wise to conform the bill to the usual phraseology hitherto adopted in these bills. I therefore ask that the formal reading of the bill may be dispensed with, and that the amendments of the committee may be considered as the reading progresses.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the formal reading will be dispensed with. The Chair hears no objection, and that order will be made.

Mr. EDMUNDS. The Senator proposes the usual course with appropriation bills.

Mr. ALLISON. The usual course.

The Chief Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

The first amendment reported by the Committee on Appropriations was, in line 4, after the word "appropriated," to insert "in full compensation;" so as to read:

That the following sums be, and they are hereby, severally appropriated in full compensation for the diplomatic and consular service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the objects hereinafter expressed, namely:

Mr. ALLISON. The committee recommend the insertion of these words because of a decision which was recently made by the Supreme Court, holding that unless the words are inserted in these bills the statutory compensation must be paid. I think there are perhaps half a dozen instances in the bill where the appropriation is less than the salary provided by the Revised Statutes, and these words were inserted for that reason.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill, and, after proceeding, read lines 34 and 35, in the following words:

Minister resident and consul-general in the Argentine Republic, $7,500.

Mr. VOORHEES. I should like to ask the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations who has the bill in charge a question in connection with the last clause that has been read.

I notice that there is an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Turkey. I notice that there is a minister resident and consul-general to the Argentine Republic. So far as business relations are concerned they are as 10 to 1 on the part of this country with the Argentine Republic to those which we entertain with the Sultan of Turkey and his government. The Argentine Republic send to us an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary. That is his title. We return the compliment with that great country, whose trade is of immense importance to us, by sending an official of inferior rank.

I offered an amendment (what consideration it has had by the committee I know not, but I offered it at the proper time) to send to that country a representative of the same rank that they send to us, not necessarily increasing the pay; but title is a good deal between governments and the representatives of governments.

I know no reason why the American representative should not bear as high rank in the diplomatic world at the Argentine Republic as the representative of that government does here with us. The trade of this country with the Argentine Republic and other South American countries is a great and growing one, one of vast and of increasing importance to this country, and the policy which will control my mind is to cultivate relations with those countries.

I used the Government of Turkey as an illustration. I do not desire, of course, to reduce the rank of the minister to Turkey, but I repeat the query to the Senator having charge of the bill, if it is proper and necessary to have an envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary to Turkey why should not the same rank be given to a mission of much greater importance than that to Constantinople?

I observed a moment ago that I offered an amendment giving the American representative there the rank which the representative of the Argentine Republic bears here. I think comity, national courtesy, propriety, fraternity require this to be done. I did not in that amendment contemplate any increase of the pay of the representative, but I did in that connection also offer an amendment providing that the American representative should have a secretary.

It sounds extremely strange to my ears and is a peculiar fact to my mind that we send a representative to a government of that importance without a clerk, a secretary, or a human being to assist him in his duties, without a human being to write a letter or a dispatch or act as his clerk. We provide clerks for ourselves here, we provide clerks for our committees, and Senators who are not chairmen of committees during the session have clerks for themselves personally. I voted for it and I believe in it, because the more assistance we have the better work we can do for those who send us here. While we are doing this, I am at a loss to know how a Senator can justify the sending of an American representative to an important country, where he has important duties to transact, without a clerk, a secretary, a scribe, or the slightest assistance.

I could, if I had known this bill was coming up, have furnished some statistics as to the trade with that country. It would be gratifying to me to do so. It is gratifying to me to know the immense South American trade we have, and I think that we should be building up and caring for the rank and importance of our missions down there in connection with the prosperity of this country in fostering our relations and the trade and commerce which naturally belong to us.

I repeat I offered these amendments; and I do not know what became of them. I throw out these observations to be instructed rather than to instruct anybody.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, the Committee on Appropriations considered all the amendments proposed by the Senator from Indiana. There were, I think, three other, certainly two other, suggestions for advance in the rank of diplomatic officers, but the committee did not believe that it was wise to increase the rank of any of them, inasmuch as the rank that they now hold has been held for many years. It is true that last year, under peculiar circumstances, the rank of minister to Turkey was increased and the compensation also increased. The House of Representatives having considered this question, and having failed to increase rank, our committee did not feel authorized to increase the rank of this minister, especially as if that were done it would require similar action with reference to two or three other missions.

Now, as to the clerk suggested by the Senator from Indiana, I have no doubt that it would be a great convenience to our minister at the Argentine Republic to have a clerk, and it certainly would be a great convenience to all these officers; but if we give one of them a clerk we must give clerks to all, and for many years they have been enabled to get on without this additional service and the committee did not feel at this time that it could reasonably suggest a large increase, or any considerable increase in the appropriations for this purpose. Therefore the amendments, although considered carefully by the committee, were not acted upon favorably.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to state that an amendment of the kind referred to by the Senator from Indiana was sent to the Committee on Foreign Relations, where properly such a matter should be considered as it is not a matter of appropriation. It is a matter of the dignity and propriety and arrangement of all these places. And the Committee on Foreign Relations, I think I am justified in saying without violating any propriety in regard to committees, thought it right before it took any action either way to get the judgment of the President of the United States, through the Secretary of State, but practically of course the judgment of the State Department, as to the necessity of this and half a dozen other analogous things; and we have accordingly sent to the Secretary of State for information which has not yet been received.

I submit to my friend from Indiana whether it would be wise and right to undertake to change these orderly arrangements in respect of grade, &c., without having the opinions—not that we are to be bound by them—the views of the Executive through his Secretary of State. I suggest therefore to let this bill go as it is now and on a separate bill, or next year we can adjust it if we do not get the information before it is too late this year.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed. There is no amendment pending.

Mr. CONGER. I wish to make a remark, though I make no motion. I find in regard to this and some other cases these items in the bill:

Minister resident and consul-general in the Argentine Republic, $7,500.
Ministers resident and consuls-general in Liberia, Switzerland, Denmark, Portugal, Siam, Persia, Corea, Hayti, and Bolivia, at $5,000 each.

There are added in many instances to the duties of a minister the duties of consul-general, and he is the only consul-general in the particular republic or government referred to. In all cases where there are consuls-general alone, not having the duties of ministers to perform, there are clerks provided for. I call the attention of the gentleman having charge of this bill, the Senator from Iowa, to this. I say that in several places where there are ministers resident and consuls-general, as in the Argentine Republic, Liberia, Switzerland, Denmark, Portugal, Siam, Persia, Corea, Hayti, and Bolivia, in addition to the duties of minister they are made consuls-general in those countries. There are consuls-general and consuls independent of ministers in many other places. To all consuls-general who have no duties as minister to perform there are clerks assigned at varying salaries. I can not understand exactly why when there are added to the duties of the minister resident the duties of consul-general for a whole nation, a republic or whatever the government may be, the latter duties being often the most important, there should not be a clerk at least provided for the combined offices. There is no secretary, no clerk, no interpreter, nothing of the kind, where the double duties of minister and consul-general are imposed upon one man; and yet I find in this bill clerks are provided for many small consulates:

For allowance for clerks at consulates, $50,320, the sum to be allowed at each consulate not to exceed the rate herein specified, as follows:
Consul at Liverpool, $2,000.
Consul-general at Havana, $1,600.
Consul-general at Shanghai, $1,200.
Consuls-general at London, Paris, and Rio de Janeiro, at $1,600 each, $4,800.

Mr. BUTLER. From what page of the bill does the Senator read?

Mr. CONGER. From page 23.

Consuls-general at Berlin, Frankfort, Vienna, Montreal, and Kanagawa, and consuls at Hamburg, Bremen, Manchester, Lyons, Hong-Kong, Havre, Crefeld, and Chemnitz, at $1,200 each, $15,600.

Now, the idea that the little interior town of Chemnitz, where the consul heretofore has received a salary of $1,500, increased here to $2,000, should have a clerk to that consul with a salary of $1,200, and no secretary or clerk to ministers resident and consuls-general where they are the only consul-general in the kingdom or republic or whatever it may be, I can not understand.

Consuls at Bradford, Birmingham, and Marseilles, at $960 each, $2,880.
Consuls-general at Calcutta, Port au Prince, and Melbourne, and consuls at Leipsic, Sheffield, Sonneberg, Dresden, Antwerp, Nuremburg, Tunstall, Bordeaux, Colon, Singapore, Glasgow, and Panama, at $800 each, $12,000.
Consuls at Belfast, Barmen, Leith, Dundee, and Victoria, and the consuls-general at Matamoras and Halifax, at $640 each, $4,480.
Consul-general at Mexico and Berne, and consuls at Malaga, Naples, Genoa, Stuttgart, Florence, Mannheim—

Little towns away up in the mountains of Germany, far removed from any seaport or any particular commercial relations—

Prague, Zurich, Beirut, and Demerara, at $480 each, $5,760.

There must be some inconsistency in this arrangement of clerks to consuls.

Mr. VOORHEES. From what page is the Senator reading?

Mr. CONGER. I am reading now from page 24. Pages 23 and 24 provide for consular clerks. There must be some inconsistency in allowing clerks to the consuls at these little places named in this bill at twelve hundred and fifteen hundred dollars when the salary of the consul is $2,000, and allowing no secretary or clerk and no provision for expenses to ministers resident and consuls-general where they have to perform the duties of consul-general in some of these nations where we are trying to-day, as the Senator from Indiana remarked, to introduce new commercial relations, and where the duties of the consul-general comprise a whole country.

I do not make any motion in regard to this matter. Heretofore there has been a round sum appropriated to provide clerks somewhat in the discretion of the Secretary of State for the different consulates, without naming all of them. I suppose the committee desired to name the places where clerks should be allowed and their salaries, which is very well, and in that arrangement undoubtedly did not have their attention called to the fact that many of the places where consular clerks are authorized by this bill are of very slight importance, little interior places in the mountains and in the valleys of Germany, some of them, and other places where is no seaport to make commercial relations.

I make no criticism upon it, but I call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the fact that there is some inconsistency in the bill, and I think, considering the desire that all have to extend commercial relations especially in the South American republics, that where there is a minister and consul-general there should be some provision for aid and assistance in the complicated duties which the consul-general (no matter what the duties of the minister may be) ought to perform in the making of reports and in gathering information. Here are several countries where the consul-general is also minister resident, having the duplicate duties to perform, and he has no clerk or assistant. It is very important if we desire to extend trade with those countries and even to have reports showing what avenues of trade may be opened to our people, what kind of commerce and exchange may be established there, that these consuls-general, to say nothing of the ministers, should have some assistance in making the inquiries and in the correspondence, and in preparing reports for the benefit of American manufacturers and merchants and people.

Some years ago I called the attention of the then Secretary of State and especially the then Assistant Secretary of State, Mr. Seward, to the fact that I was receiving letters frequently from constituents of mine making inquiries in regard to the commerce, and the manufactures, and the chances for sale of products of different kinds raised in the State of Michigan, and I think the letters which I received at that time and the inquiries which I brought to the attention of the State Department had some effect, and I myself had the pleasure of joining somewhat in preparing that noted circular which was sent abroad to all the consuls of the United States to make the reports which have been made from that time to this and which have been very valuable to the producers and manufacturers of the United States in enabling them to see at a glance in these reports to what countries of the earth their products might possibly be sent with advantage. I think no other source has increased so much the knowledge of our own manufacturers and producers in the United States as to the wants of different peoples of the world and the places where their particular manufacture and production might be sent with profit as the reports of consuls stating the demands for different productions and for different manufactures, the prices, the places to which they might be sent. These reports have conveyed that kind of general information which each enterprising business man could look over and see where he might be able in the particular line of industry in which he was engaged to avail himself of that information and enter into correspondence more definite in regard to sales and markets for his products.

I think I am safe in saying that in the regions of the world less known than those with which we have heretofore had constant commercial intercourse the amount of sales and marketing of our productions both of manufacture and from the soil of all kinds have been more than doubled within the last six or seven years by reason of the information contained in the consular reports which are summarized and condensed monthly and spread abroad from the State Department through members of Congress and through the Department itself to the people in the several States. I know myself of many instances in which new markets have been found for manufactures and productions even from my own interior State.

I speak of these things because I think there was an evident oversight by the committee in providing for ministers resident and consuls-general where there is no other consul-general in the country to which they are sent, without some means to write and correspond and travel perhaps by their clerks or by other assistants in some way to find out what markets may be opened to our people. The great object of our people to-day is to find where the markets of the world may be secured for our productions, and I venture to say that our commercial agents can be no better employed than in looking up such matters. I may say in this connection that I do not think it advisable, I do not think it is wise to connect a minister with diplomatic relations, where one is necessary, with the merely and purely commercial relations, the business relations of a consul-general. To some extent they are incompatible; to some extent they infringe upon each other. The minister has to sustain peculiar diplomatic relations to the government to which he is sent, and it may be a delicate duty to be inquiring in regard to markets and productions and rivalries. It may bring him as a minister in wrong relations with the government, while as consul-general having his associations and his inquiries with the manufacturing, the producing, and purchasing people of that country, the consul-general would have duties to perform very important, more important than all these ministerial relations in almost every country on the globe with our people.

Why they are put together, why duties which are sometimes running in contradictory lines, the diplomatic and the commercial relations, should be united in one person, I have never been able to understand. I do not believe it is a wise arrangement. I could wish that the committee might have examined that subject and separated the two. There is no reason why a minister resident residing at the seat of government, wherever that may be, very frequently remote from the commercial towns, the manufacturing towns, from the seaport, confined to the particular locality of a capital, should be charged with duties that require his observation and his labor, and if he is of any service to the people of the United States he should conduct an arduous, constant, uninterrupted inquiry of the condition of that country in relation to our commerce and our productions. Why these duties should be joined in fact, I do not know; one or the other is sacrificed necessarily by locality, by propinquity to the business which they have or ought to have in their charge.

I will take this occasion to say a word more. To my mind, to-day the great demand in the condition of the American people is for agents—intelligent, bright, enterprising men—in every country on this globe to see what kinds of products American manufacturers and American producers can find a market there for. In this great teeming country of ours, with its industries and its wealth and its productions, while business is in a state of stagnation here at home, and while thousands of men are either idle or dissatisfied for want of full employment, I think the wise thing for this Government to do is to look over the face of the world and see where the productions of the industries of our people may find a market, so that the cry, whether true or false, of overproduction which leads to a lack of demand and sale of our productions may be obviated, that industries may be encouraged, that there may not be overproduction, because we can find markets all over the world for one or another of these productions which fill and glut our own market.

Sir, I am glad of the attention which has been given to the consular system and its direction in the years of the recent past, and continued, I am happy to say, now by the present Secretary of State and that Department. The tendency which has been given to consular appointments and consular duties and consular industry in the direction to which I have alluded is the most hopeful thing for the laboring man of the United States in the shop, in the factory, on the farm. The prospect which that opens for markets for our diversified industries is the most hopeful thing in the present somewhat gloomy state of affairs in our own country. The markets throughout the world, the new markets, the unoccupied markets for the ten thousand manufactures and productions of the soil and of the factory which may be found by a bright, active, intelligent consular force will open new fields of enterprise, new fields of industry to the mechanics and manufacturers and laborers in farm and field and shop and factory throughout the United States; and I would without parsimony give to that service all the encouragement which can be given to it by a reasonable and fair appropriation and by proper and earnest instruction to the consular service of the United States to make it what it is intended to be, the agent of our commerce, the watchman to look out for our industries in every place in the world where its members are stationed.

I speak of this with some little feeling because my attention for some years has been called to it, commencing with the preparation of the circulars for consular reports, which I have watched with a great deal of earnestness from the time they commenced until now. I have tried to follow the effect of that in the different countries as far as I have been able to do; but with the limited means I have had at my disposal I have seen the advantages to us of markets abroad secured through consular methods and consular efforts. I may say here that I think members of Congress do not appreciate and never have appreciated the value of the statistics gathered by our consuls and published by the State Department in their monthly reports, and distributed twenty to each member for circulation in his district to those who may desire that class of information. Among our manufacturers, among our people, these reports are sought for as soon as they are brought to their knowledge, and I have watched the effect of them in creating new markets. Sir, I have looked with pleasure upon the shipment of wagons manufactured in my State to many of the islands of the Pacific in large numbers, and bringing remunerative prices, manufactured at different places in Michigan and, as my friend from Indiana knows, at South Bend in his State. I have gathered together from San Francisco and from the agents of the lines of steamers running to the Pacific islands the invoices of the item of wagons sent from South Bend, Indiana, and from Jackson, Michigan, to islands of which we think only as if their people were cannibals, the Feejee Islands, the Society Islands, and to Australia, and to New Zealand, and to other places. I have seen with very great gratification that the products of industries going on around me in my own State were sent to those far islands of the sea, furnishing a market almost equal some years to the home market for these same productions.

I have delayed the Senate in commenting on some things which have interested me very much, and I have only alluded to one or two of the things. I could, even from memory, go on and enumerate by fifties, if not by hundreds, different items of manufacture and of production that have found a market in the distant and almost unknown islands of the ocean, as well as in other places on the continents, through the information and the knowledge gained in the first instance through the reports of our consuls, and caused by following clews that have led to the opening of the markets of these countries to my own people and to your people, sir.

I make these remarks to call the attention of the committee to the lack of assistance to that class at least of consuls-general who are charged with the double duty of ministers or diplomats, which is an important thing with the South American republics especially, and the entirely different and sometimes complicated duties of consuls. I am sorry to find that so many of them have not a clerk of any kind to assist them in opening these new regions to our commerce and to our productions and furnishing markets to our people. This fact strikes me somewhat with surprise, and I am very glad the Senator from Indiana has called attention to one of these cases. I ask the attention of the Senate to the many cases where consuls-general and ministers have not even an assistant as a clerk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

Mr. ALLISON. Before the reading of the bill proceeds, I think I ought to say a word in response to the suggestions made by the Senator from Michigan.

The Committee on Appropriations does not have charge of the regulation of our diplomatic and consular service. It is our business to recommend to the Senate appropriations for the public service in this regard as we find it; and if the Senator will examine the statutes on this subject he will find no authority for clerks at the several places named by him, although I admit if we thought proper to provide for clerks at these several missions it would be perhaps within our province to do so.

There is in this bill a large number of clerks provided for for the various consulates throughout Europe and South America. Where clerks are provided for in this bill, they are estimated for by the Department; and in the cases named by the Senator from Michigan there is no estimate and no suggestion coming from the head of the Department of State asking us to make provision for clerk-hire.

The Secretary of State appeared before the committee and made many suggestions to the committee. Some of these suggestions are incorporated in this bill, and many others are not incorporated in the bill. He desired a great many things; but he did not even suggest to the committee that at the places named by the Senator from Michigan there was any need of clerk-hire. If we are to enter on the business of providing clerks for all the ministers-resident and consuls-general, without regard to the business done by these ministers or consuls-general, we must necessarily very largely increase the appropriations for this service.

I agree with the Senator from Michigan that for the last few years our appropriations for the consular and diplomatic service have been rather too rigid. I think a little expansion for this service would be healthy for the commerce of our country as well as for its diplomatic service. But we did not feel, situated as we are now as a Senate committee, that it was our duty to enlarge very much this consular and diplomatic appropriation bill in the face of the fact that in the other House this bill was presented by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, which is supposed to know more in detail the needs of the service than we possibly can. It is presented to the Senate after full consultation with the Secretary of State, and in the respects wherein the bill has been criticised by the Senator from Michigan we had no suggestion whatever on the subject.

I think I ought to say in reference to our consuls that while in theory it is a beautiful idea to have our consuls actively engaged in enlarging and developing our intercourse, as a rule I am sorry to say that they are, to say the least, very lax in that regard, and as far as my observation and experience go the consuls do very little to develop the commerce of our country; but they are under our laws necessary and we have made provision for consuls, I believe, wherever the Secretary of State has deemed it wise to make such provision, and we have provided them with clerical force in every instance where the Secretary of State has deemed it necessary to make such provision.

So, while I agree perhaps that we might enlarge somewhat our diplomatic service by separating the consular service entirely from the diplomatic service, I think that at this time it is not wise for us to enter upon this subject, especially as only four or five years ago two or three suggestions were made by the then Secretary of State for the consolidation of missions with the position of consul-general.

Mr. BUTLER. May I inquire of the Senator from Iowa, who has evidently given this subject much consideration, if he can account for the difference which I see all through this bill in the style or name or rank of the various representatives of this Government in foreign countries?

I think there is great force in what fell from the Senator from Michigan in regard to the duties of ministers resident and consuls-general. One is diplomatic and the other is commercial. I see on page 3, line 42:

Minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, $3,500.

Immediately following, in line 44, is:

Agent and consul-general at Cairo, $5,000:

And immediately following that, line 45:

Chargé d'affaires to Paraguay and Uruguay, $5,000.

I should like to be informed by the Senator from Iowa, if he can do so, why that distinction? Why do we have a minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, a chargé d'affaires to Uruguay and Paraguay, and an agent and consul-general at Cairo? I agree entirely with the Senator from Indiana if these governments are of sufficient importance to have a representative of the United States Government to them, our representative ought to go there with a rank at least equal to that of the representative of that Government to this. For instance, at Paraguay and Uruguay we have a chargé d'affaires. What is that? Is that diplomatic or consular or both? Five thousand dollars he gets, and the minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece gets $6,500.

Of course I appreciate the difficulties suggested by the Senator from Iowa which are encountered by the Committee on Appropriations, but I trust that the Committee on Foreign Relations will take this matter into consideration and give us something like a uniform system for the diplomatic and consular service of this Government.

Mr. ALLISON. Regarding the suggestion first made by the Senator from South Carolina as to the item "minister resident and consul-general to Roumania, Servia, and Greece," I will say that is a new item. That is to say, it is an item inserted within the last three or four years. We had a consul-general accredited to Roumania, Servia, and Greece, and two or three years ago we raised his rank to that of minister resident, adding to the duties of consul-general diplomatic functions. A consul-general has no diplomatic functions. Although our relations with Roumania and Servia are not very intimate, we thought it wise to have there a diplomatic officer to keep the State Department informed with reference to our diplomatic relations with that region, whatever they are.

Mr. BUTLER. I understand that, but as was suggested by the Senator from Michigan, the duties of the two, minister resident and consul-general, seem to be inconsistent, and sometimes run across each other. The minister resident is purely a diplomatic officer to conduct international questions between the two countries. The duties of the consul-general, on the other hand, are purely commercial, having nothing whatever to do with diplomatic questions, as I understand. It strikes me as being extremely awkward to unite the two.

Of course, I understand very well that the Committee on Appropriations can not correct that difficulty. I merely make the suggestion somewhat in the line of what was said by the Senator from Michigan, in order to induce either the State Department or the Committee on Foreign Relations of this body to take cognizance of the question, and give us a more symmetrical and uniform system.

Mr. ALLISON. I will say to the Senator from South Carolina that this provision uniting consular and diplomatic functions is a new provision inserted some five or six years ago, in fact at the urgent instance of the House of Representatives when they sought to economize in the foreign service. It was at that time first provided that a minister resident should be a consul-general at certain points and places where it was supposed that one man could perform both functions. Although it appears to be inconsistent to have the minister resident to Roumania and Servia also consul-general, I think that one person exercising the diligence that we exercise and laboring the hours that we labor here could possibly perform all the diplomatic service required there and also could supervise all the consuls in Roumania and Servia, especially as we do not have a single one there. The business of a consul-general is to supervise the consuls, and therefore I think that this officer in the instances named by the Senator can very well perform both functions.

Now, as to the consul-general at Cairo, we have never had a diplomatic officer there except as an agent.

Mr. BUTLER. A commercial agent?

Mr. ALLISON. No, sir; he is denominated and has been, I think, for twenty years in our consular and diplomatic appropriation bills as an agent. That gives him diplomatic authority. He is also a consul-general, having charge of the trade relations with Egypt. He is an agent.

Mr. BUTLER. An agent of what? Of this Government?

Mr. ALLISON. Agent of this Government to perform diplomatic functions in Cairo. He is not a commercial agent.

Mr. CONGER. I suppose, Egypt being in some sort a quasi province of Turkey, we could not have a separate minister resident there any more than we could in Canada, but we have a ministerial agent named in that way.

Mr. BUTLER. Is he subordinate to the consul-general to Turkey or the minister to Turkey?

Mr. CONGER. He performs whatever ministerial duties are to be performed at Cairo.

Mr. ALLISON. He exercises the functions of a diplomatic agent there. Whenever matters concerning our diplomacy come up, he is the proper officer to act.

Mr. BUTLER. How about the chargés d'affaires to Uruguay and Paraguay? What is a chargé d'affaires?

Mr. ALLISON. That was an economical experiment by the House of Representatives four or five years ago, whereby the appropriation was reduced from $7,500 to $5,000, and it has stood in that way from that time to this. The Committee on Appropriations did not see proper to change it.

Mr. HALE. He was formerly minister resident, but was razeed by the House.

Mr. BUTLER. I think we had better raise it back again.

Mr. CONGER. In my comments on this bill I had supposed that all these changes, at least all the minor ones, had been made and were customarily made in an appropriation bill and not by a separate bill making legislation on these subjects.

Mr. ALLISON. That is true.

Mr. CONGER. My remarks were in reference to the fact that the practice had been and would probably continue to be that the changes in these different officers, their grades and the divisions of them, by custom, or at least consent, had been made in the appropriation bill and not in other regular legislation.

Mr. ALLISON. I quite agree that the Senator is right. We may, if we see proper, initiate a provision here looking to the employment of clerks at every one of these places.

There is a clerk allowed, I will say, to the consul-general at Berne; but I do not believe that there is a sufficient amount of work required of these several officers to create a necessity for a clerk, and I think if such clerk-hire was necessary the Secretary of State would have discovered it and would have put in his estimates an estimate for clerk-hire at these places.

Mr. BECK. I do not desire unnecessarily to delay the passage of this bill, but sometime or other during its progress it may be as well to say that there is a measure pending at the other end of the Capitol, a copy of which I have, seeking to reorganize the consular service and place it in something like working shape. It is not now the law, however, though it may become so. I hope it will, as it seems to be an improvement on the present system in many regards.

As this bill came to the Senate Committee on Appropriations from the Committee on Foreign Relations of the other House, which is now seeking to change the present diplomatic and consular system, while there are very many important changes which I think ought to be made, the Committee on Appropriations did not feel at liberty to make them, especially as there are no recommendations from the head of the Department asking us to make such radical changes as I would like to see. I agree that we ought to adhere to the House bill substantially. Doubtless the Secretary of State felt that we could not make changes such as he desired on an appropriation bill, and therefore withheld recommendations he would otherwise have made.

The Senator from Michigan stated very justly and very strongly some marked advances in the work of our consuls. I was glad to hear him say that he felt encouraged by the efforts made in the last five or six years by our consuls to obtain information necessary to aid in extending the commerce of this country; yet there are very many things in the consular service, as the Senator from Michigan and the Committee on Commerce will find when they come to look into it, which need to be radically changed before it will be of much real practical value in aiding our revenue officers.

Our consuls are our agents in promoting our commerce and in assisting us in the collection of our revenue, by giving such information as will enable our custom-house officers in New York and elsewhere to see to it that we are not defrauded by false invoices and undervaluations. They are paid two dollars and a half, I believe, for signing their names to every affidavit of the importer to the truth of the statements he makes in regard to each invoice. The presumption is that they act in good faith and with proper caution, yet the facts do not sustain the presumption.

A subcommittee of the Committee on Finance went to New York under the order of the Senate and investigated, among other things, the action of our consuls. I have before me an illustration furnished by the testimony, which shows how little consular certificates are worth under the present system. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. ALLISON] is the chairman of that subcommittee. Almost the first thing the committee did was to go to the appraiser's office and ascertain how invoices were verified, and this was about the first thing handed to us as we entered the office:

I read from the printed statement:

In the invoice division Mr. McMullen presented the chief of division, Mr. H. F. Bowers, who exhibited to the committee certain invoices and papers which he explained, one by one, as being improperly certified, as follows:

In this case [exhibiting a paper] the consul at Brunswick, in Germany, certifies to an invoice dated at Hanover, which is in his jurisdiction, that the goods came from Barmen. There are two invoices from Barmen, and no certificate from the consul there; and one from Zittau, in Saxony. There is no consul there, but there is one at Dresden, near there.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. That is not under the jurisdiction of the consul at Brunswick?
A. No, sir. Here is one from Waldkirchen, in Saxony.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. Is that near Brunswick?
A. No, sir; it is near to Leipsic. Here is one from Forbach, in Baden; here one from Linden, near to Hanover; here another from Barmen; now one from Hanover, an invoice of 14,071 marks, being the total amount consolidated. It is certified to by the consul at Brunswick, William C. Fox.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. And it has no other consular certificate upon it?
A. No, sir.
Q. What value do you attach to a certificate of that sort on invoices coming from cities outside of the consul's jurisdiction, and where there is a consul who should certify, but does not?
A. We can not attach any importance to it, because the consul who certifies can not know anything about it. He can not know anything about goods not produced in his own district."

* * * * * * *

Q. Now, in reference to that consolidated invoice coming from Hanover, outside the jurisdiction of the consul who certifies, what do you do with that invoice?
A. It goes back again from us to the collector.

By the CHAIRMAN:

Q. But you pay no attention to the certification?
A. The appraiser can not pay any attention to it.

By Mr. BECK:

Q. Do you treat it as an invoice?
A. Of course, the consul certifies that it is so; for which the collector is bound to take it, of course.
Q. The collector is not bound to take the invoice that has no goods with it?
A. No, sir; the only point with me is to show you of how little value they are; how much importance the examiner attaches to it I can not tell you, but I think there is no importance to be attached, because the goods are not produced in that consular district at all.
Q. And so far as the United States is concerned, it might as well have no official certification at all as to have one like that?
A. That is the way I look at it. And here the appraisement may as well apply the same as to goods which have no invoice at all.

And so it was all through the history we obtained from the custom-house officers. No faith could be placed in consular certificates.

I have read that portion of the testimony for the purpose of showing that until we have some reorganization of the consular system, some change whereby we can make the service of our consuls available for commercial purposes, we might as well, in many instances, have none. That was the testimony of all the leading officials in the great custom-houses of New York and Boston. As I have just read, ten or twelve different invoices were all certified by one consul, all certified by the consul at Brunswick, who is himself, if I recollect aright, an unsalaried consul who lives by fees, there being regular consuls with fixed salaries living at four or five of the places from which the goods in that invoice came. They were all avoided; and the certificate alone was presented of the consul at Brunswick, an unsalaried officer, living upon his fees, and who, by the way, collects $4,663.86 of fees, and is allowed a compensation of $2,500, $255.83 for rent and clerk-hire, and $118.10 for contingent expenses. That man whose pay depends upon his fees is the man who was selected by all these shippers to certify their invoices of goods, nine-tenths of which came from places outside of his consular jurisdiction.

We were advised by well-informed men, and when our report is made it will show that whenever merchants who are sending goods to New York on consignment to their own agents desire to value them as low as possible, if they find that we had a vigilant officer or consul at the place that officer is boycotted; he is not recognized; he is not spoken to; he is tabooed; while some other officials, may be like the consul at Brunswick, who will certify to anything, is the officer who gets the fees and gives such certificates as the importer wants, without knowing or caring whether they are true or false.

For one I do not feel like extending the present consular system. I will provide for it as it is, hoping that it may be remodeled. The Committee on Appropriations having had this bill sent to them that was specially considered by the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House, which took five months to consider it, and sent it to us without any changes of the old condition of things, we did not think we could change it. Perhaps the House committee could not in this bill under the rules that we have jointly agreed should prevail, that no new legislation should be inserted in appropriation bills. As they have prepared another bill correcting many of these evils, and as they sent us this bill as it is, and as we were not advised by the State Department that the suggestions of increasing the rank of the ministers now being considered, or adding clerks to those who hold the office of minister resident and consul-general were approved, we simply took up other matters which were deemed important, and we have made quite considerable increases in other regards, as the Senate will see when we come to them.

For example, as to the money for the secret-service fund, if you may call it so, whereby the Secretary of State can carry on negotiations in regard to the troubles we may have with Canada, Central America, or any other country, we had added considerably to the House bill, and wherever it is necessary to extend our commerce, in Corea, Japan, and elsewhere, we have felt that we ought to strengthen the hands of the Secretary. That we have done, and I think done properly.

That is about all I care to say at present, because while in many regards our consular system is working well in regard to reports and information, I do not think that consular aid in the collection of revenues will be valuable while they are responsible only to the State Department. All their most important services are rendered to the Treasury Department, and unless we make a change in some form to improve that service and impose penalties for neglect of duty we will not get satisfactory results under divided authority of two Departments and no real responsibility to either. I recollect when the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] was appointed Secretary of State—I believe he was the first to organize and put in shape the system of consular reports—that we expected great results, and we have in the shape of reports obtained very useful information, and in that regard very salutary results; but in aid of our officers collecting our revenue and the safeguards against fraud we have not up to this time received anything like as much help as we ought. I called the attention of the Committee on Commerce on yesterday, and I hope they will look at it, to this state of things, which needs revision. On page 27 of the report of the Fifth Auditor will be found a large number of unsalaried commercial agents none of whom came before the Senate for confirmation. They are appointed I do not know how, kept there I do not know how, with pay and allowances such as the Department sees fit to give them. Take the first one on the list, Baracoa de Cuba; the amount collected at that agency in fees is put down at $1,361.50, and the compensation of the agent is $2,500. The pay for services to vessels, &c., is $1,138.50, and the contingent expenses $20—$3,658.50 paid to that unsalaried agent in regard to whose appointment we have no sort of authority, when he only collects $1,361.50 in fees.

If we cut classified consuls down to $2,000, $1,500, and $1,000, why should we have a commercial agent receiving that much money at the hands of the State Department and paid $2,500 salary with all sorts of other allowances, merely because he is called by another name, and the Senate has nothing to say about his fitness.

Again, on the same page, take Elberfeld; there is a case where the agent collected $3,740.50 in fees, and he receives a compensation of $2,500. Take Mayence; there the agent collected $3,741.50 in fees, and $2,500 is paid him as compensation, and the fees accruing to the Government amounted to $646.30, and for rent and clerk-hire he was allowed $595.20.

So at Port Stanley and St. Thomas, $3,312 was received in fees, $2,500 paid the agent as compensation, so that $812 accrued to the Government from the fees. So at a number of other places.

I may as well add that after hearing the Secretary of State and seeing that perhaps we could not reach what was desired in this bill, and knowing that something ought to be done in regard to bringing this class of officers under our control, the best the committee at present thought they could do was to insert this provision:

And in the estimates for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1888, there shall be estimated for specifically, under classified consulates, all consulates and commercial agencies where the fees collected or compensation allowed for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1886, exceeds $1,000.

So that in the next Book of Estimates the Secretary may take them in hand, and we can see whether we can not bring them under our authority. I do not think the Committee on Commerce are quite prepared to advise us how to do it. I do not know that the Committee on Foreign Relations are, but perhaps a bill may be framed by some committee even before we adjourn that may be a step in the right direction. I have not examined the House bill with sufficient care to say how far it goes in that direction.

Mr. CONGER. The difficulties which have confronted the Committee on Appropriations have also frequently come to the consideration of the Committee on Commerce in their branch of the subject, and I have no doubt have troubled the Committee on Foreign Relations very much.

For several years in the other House some of these evils to which the Senator from Kentucky has alluded were met and discussed by the Committee on Commerce of the House, and amendments and suggestions were made in different bills to try and remedy some of the very evils to which the Senator from Kentucky has alluded.

For a great many years I have been firmly of the opinion that our laws in regard to the transportation of goods from the port of entry to an interior port without examination at the port of entry and without appraisal and the settlement and payment of the duties there, but that being left to some other port to which they may under the law be taken on a consular certificate, have been a fruitful source of danger to the revenues of the country and have been a fruitful cause of the procuring of certificates away from the principal consular offices at minor consulates throughout the world.

Our law here at home permits an invoice of goods coming to New York or Boston or Portland, intended for Chicago or intended to pass across the continent to San Francisco, to be entered on a consular certificate in New York or in Boston, and there, without examination, without appraisement, without the payment of duties, to be forwarded by virtue of that consular certificate, such as the Senator from Kentucky has described and read about, to Cincinnati or Chicago, or, if intended for New Orleans, to New Orleans, or to any other port of entry in the United States, there to have the goods appraised, there to have the goods examined and the cases opened, and unless there is something to indicate some opening of the packages or tampering with the packages in the original port of entry the custom-house officers there must send them right on, it may be across the continent to San Francisco or to Puget Sound or to Portland, or to New Orleans or to Detroit or Chicago or any other place.

If there is anything to indicate that the invoices do not correspond with the contents of the packages, the officer at the original ports of entry may open them, may examine them to see whether they contain the goods mentioned in the invoices; but our law provides and directs and authorizes the entry at the port of New Orleans, New York, Boston, Baltimore, anywhere, if the packages mentioned in an invoice appear to be unopened, if there is nothing to lead to suspicion that the contents are not properly mentioned in the invoices, and the forwarding of the goods to the place of destination, to these other ports, interior or otherwise, without examination and without payment of duties.

That being the law here, very naturally anybody who wishes to take any advantage of undervaluation would have a consular certificate from a consular agent or a consul who had never seen the packages and contents, but merely certified to them, and coming here they will go through to interior points, to Sault de St. Marie, to any place where under the law they can be sent, and there an appraiser entirely unfamiliar with the goods would fix the appraisal and arrange the duties.

I have felt for years, and have publicly expressed my opinion, that in our own country was one of the best opportunities and most fertile sources of the undervaluation and loss to the Treasury of duties by underappraisement and undervaluation; but whatever I may have stated as the result of an investigation related more particularly to invoices coming from Canada through the port where I live. Whatever I may have said or attempted in the other House (and the occasion has not arisen where I have had opportunity to do it in this) has been passed along in the general system. No correction of evils, no correction of what I believe to be the possibility and the strong probability of abuse of that system has been made.

The very testimony read by the Senator from Kentucky and the remarks he made before the Committee on Commerce within the last few days in regard to some of these things, will show Senators how the law which we have in regard to forwarding the invoices of goods from the port of entry, without appraisal and without the payment of duties, to some interior and remote port where the officials are not familiar with the kinds of goods, will lead men in other countries, in Europe or wherever, to go away from the consuls at the ports of shipment and to take certificates from a consular agent far removed from the markets and from the ability to judge and examine as to the value of the goods and get those certificates in that way. There is no kind of question that all through Europe the shippers to this country do find their official certificate from men remote from market for that very object and for that very reason.

I had occasion in studying this subject and in following up some of my investigations in Canada to find that instead of having consular certificates from Montreal, from Toronto, from Hamilton, we had consular certificates from some point in the interior of Canada, where goods would be shipped by rail and there the consular certificate attached by a consular agent, not by the consul in the place from which the goods were originally intended to be shipped to the United States. I have pursued that inquiry and have gone to different places in Canada to make personal observation that I might while I was in the other House fortify myself with some information to lead to a change of the law. But unfortunately my efforts were not seconded, and the law remains the same.

There is another trouble about this which the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] in his experience in the State Department can very well appreciate. By a kind of necessity, perhaps, our agents abroad, whether ministerial or commercial, seem to have their appointment and their responsibility to the State Department. The State Department, except incidentally and collaterally, is not the special guardian of the individual commercial transactions of our country abroad. It has that in view on the general scale, but the duties of consuls abroad are almost entirely connected with the Treasury Department, with our sailing, with our invoices, with our estimates of value. There is no responsibility of a consul abroad to the head of the Department to which his duties relate. There is no responsibility of a consul abroad to the Treasury Department, where his official certificates are to be taken by the Treasury Department in many of its transactions under the law as proof and the only proof. There seems to be an incongruity which I have no doubt the Senator from New York has felt in his experience of the appointment and control of mere commercial agents to perform duties connected more especially with the Treasury Department than any other, that these officials should be responsible to the Department of State only and have no official relation with and no official responsibility to the Treasury Department, with whom their duties are more intimately connected and to whom as the head and as the source of their authority they ought by the system of commercial relations and consular duties to have the responsibility.

Perhaps in our system there could be no way devised by which our Treasury Department could have control and direction of our appointees in a foreign country. I can myself see the difficulties which might arise, and I suppose our fathers selected what seemed to them the better way, that they would class all the agents of the Government abroad as connected with our foreign relations and as of necessity coming under the State Department, having charge of all our foreign relations which could exist, and their responsibility to that Department and their duty under the supervision of that Department must be kept up, although the efficiency and activity of the consular service is confined almost entirely to the Treasury Department.

What the remedy may be for that I do not know; but if a bill be introduced reorganizing and regulating the consular service, that great body which may be so beneficial in all our commercial relations abroad, I trust we shall have the benefit of the experience and observation of my friend from New York and of my friend the President of this body, on account of his relations to the Treasury Department, in so organizing and reorganizing the commercial service, the consular service of the United States, that there should be some responsibility, some direction, even if it were to come through the State Department to the Treasury Department, which will make it more efficient and more valuable, and remove some of the evils to which the Senator from Kentucky alluded, and which I have seen and known of and opposed for years in the other House, that we may have a system more adapted to our circumstances and to the wants of our people.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I think this discussion will be of great benefit to the consular service as well as to the commercial interests of this country, and I am very glad that it has transpired.

Doubtless the regulation of the consular service is very necessary, and I think the suggestions made by the Senator from Michigan are very profitable ones. The fact that this service is intimately connected with two Departments of the Government has heretofore prevented a definite regulation of it. The State Department and the Treasury Department are the two great Departments of the Government with which this service is intimately connected, and I am sure the Senate will greatly benefit from the experience of the Senator from New York [Mr. EVARTS] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN], who have been in the State Department and the Treasury Department respectively, from their presence and advice here.

I wish, however, to suggest a difference of opinion with the Senator from Michigan in regard to one point to which he alluded. The Senator from Michigan seems to be of opinion that our laws which permit the transportation of imported goods to the interior of our country for appraisement have not operated beneficially, and that they have produced evils in respect to the appraisement of goods.

Mr. CONGER. Will the Senator from Minnesota allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. MCMILLAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. CONGER. My objection is not at all to what you call the immediate transportation of goods. In the law relating to the interior transportation of goods Congress defines the place from which and the place to which all the goods shall go. It is supposed that in fixing places under the special provision for the immediate transportation of goods to interior points the proper facilities for appraisal are afforded. But what I refer to is an entirely distinct and different thing, which existed long before we had the act for the immediate transportation of goods to the interior. It exists now, and is entirely independent of that. Under the law goods arriving at one point under a consular certificate, by virtue of that consular certificate may be taken to any place not provided for in the immediate transportation act. I assisted in the formation of the other law, and while each place from which and to which the goods may go is specified in the law or else they can not be taken under that law, and where there is no proper appraisal provided for, it is also provided for in the law. I agree with the Senator as to the value of that law, but my point is an entirely different thing, where a consular certificate will take goods from the original port of entry through the country to any other port of entry in the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. What law is that, I should like to ask the Senator from Michigan?

Mr. CONGER. I can not turn to it, but I will find it for the Senator. It is a law by which under a consular certificate goods which have no appearance of being tampered with may by virtue of the consular certificate itself have immediate transportation to the designated place in the United States mentioned in the invoice.

Mr. ALLISON. That is under the immediate-transportation act?

Mr. CONGER. No, sir; not at all. It was passed before the immediate-transportation act, and continues now.

Mr. ALLISON. I should be glad to have the Senator show it to me.

Mr. CONGER. The immediate-transportation act I assisted in forming and modifying, and I approve of it; but by the consular-certificate law, if in Europe a man desires to consign his goods to Marquette, Grand Haven, Chicago, Racine, or to any place where there is a port of entry——

Mr. ALLISON. And pass them through Canada?

Mr. CONGER. I do not mean through Canada. He may pass them through the United States; he may pass them through Canada under the provisions of another law; if sent from New Orleans to Saint Paul, or what used to be the port of entry of Saint Paul. I ask the Senator from Minnesota to excuse me for taking his time.

Mr. MCMILLAN. Certainly.

Mr. CONGER. You might send from New York, or New Orleans, or Baltimore an invoice of goods under a consular certificate without appraisal and without the payment of duties to what used to be the port of entry of Minnesota, Pembina, a place away up on our northern frontier, which was a port of entry. You could send under a consular certificate, and can now, to any port of entry in the United States, without examination, without appraisal, and without payment of duties, by virtue of the consular certificate, any packages of goods, any invoice of goods, unless the collector at the port where they are first landed has reason to suppose either the packages have been tampered with or that the goods do not correspond with the invoice. The duty is paid at the place of delivery and the appraisal is paid at the place of delivery. The trouble with me is that without an appraisal such as we have at the interior ports of entry under the immediate-transportation act, with persons there who have no perfect knowledge of the class of goods, the appraisal is made and the duties settled at the remote port of entry.

Mr. MCMILLAN. I am glad to know that I misunderstood the Senator from Michigan in the remarks he submitted before I took the floor. I was somewhat surprised at the expression as I understood it, because I was aware that the Senator had concurred with me always in respect to the importation of goods to interior ports under our existing law.

While I am on the floor I desire to express my entire approbation of the existing system. Its benefits are so great that the interests of the country now forbid any change in this respect. The points of distribution of goods in the interior of our country are established and they are essential to the interests of commerce. To say that we shall not be permitted to import foreign goods into the large inland cities of the country and have the benefits of the direct shipment of goods would interfere with the commercial transactions of the country to such an extent that it would produce great derangement.

Mr. HOAR. The experience of the seaboard ports does not show that such importations are free from fraud.

Mr. MCMILLAN. No; the seaboard ports are, as I learn, the places where the evils exist. All the complaints in regard to underappraisement and to frauds of various kinds come not from interior ports but from the great ports of the Atlantic coast, where the importations are principally made. I have heard no complaint whatever of undervaluation or of any frauds in the appraisement of goods or in the importation of them to the inland cities of the country.

Mr. DAWES. In connection with what has just been said I desire to state to the Senator from Minnesota and the Senator from Michigan that the recent action of the Executive renders it necessary for us to review this whole system and to determine whether hereafter all importations shall be concentrated at the ports of the seaboard, or whether we shall be permitted to enjoy the beneficial results that certainly flow from transmitting the goods to the points of delivery indicated in recent statutes.

I wish to take this opportunity to express my great surprise at the objections which have been raised to the system which has received the commendation of those two Senators, on the part of the Executive, growing out of the fact that he or any one else should conceive that there was better chance for honest administration at these great seaboard points, where is concentrated necessarily such an immense amount and infinite variety of importation and examination, that there is more safety there and better safeguards against frauds than there would be in the interior at points where there would be small deliveries of imported goods. I am glad to know that in due time we shall have the co-operation not only of those Senators, but I am confident of the entire Senate, in a review of the reasons given by the President for an attempt on his part to put an end to this policy.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The hour of 2 o'clock having arrived the unfinished business, being Senate bill 2225, is before the Senate.

Mr. ALLISON. Before we pass from this question I desire to say one word upon the suggestion made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. CONGER]. I think he entirely misapprehends the causes which lead to undervaluations. I am sure that if he will examine into the question carefully he will see that the undervaluations do not originate in any sense from the fact that goods are transported from one section of our own country to another, nor will he find that these consular certificates are issued by one consul rather than another or that it is in any way connected with our tariff system in our own country.

The truth is that these consular certificates are made without personal examination of the goods at any time. The consul does not make a personal examination. He simply overhauls the invoices, and is supposed to be familiar with the character of goods manufactured in the locality, and from his general knowledge of the situation is supposed to be able to certify as to the correctness of the invoices.

Now I want to call attention to the statement made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK] on that subject wherein it appears that the consul at Brunswick certified to various invoices coming from other towns and cities in Germany. I believe that that whole system of certification originates from a scramble between feed consuls as to whether they shall certify and the regular salaried consuls appointed to make verifications as to which shall do so. Take this very case of Brunswick. Here are four or five consuls in the immediate neighborhood of Brunswick, at least three, who are provided for in this bill, with regular compensation, salaries; and yet the merchants instead of going to our regular consuls who have salaries fixed go to the consul at Brunswick. We have a consul at Barmen provided for in this bill. He has been provided for for many years at a fixed salary; and yet the Department of State has established a consulate at Elberfeld within 2 or 3 miles of the consul at Barmen. In fact they are really in one manufacturing town, and the consul at Elberfeld, as shown by the Fifth Auditor's report, receives a compensation through fees of $3,740.50 and the consul at Barmen is provided for in this bill at $1,500 salary. Can anybody give me a reason why the consul at Elberfeld, 3 miles from the Barmen consulate, receives $3,740? It is because he is active and vigilant with the merchants and manufacturers in saying, "Bring your invoices to me and I will certify them and receive the fees." The consul at Barmen has a regular fixed salary.

The trouble about these consular certificates arises from the inattention of our consuls and from the scramble for fees which originates at these feed consulates; and it is because of this that the Committee on Appropriations have now for the second time introduced into an appropriation bill a requisition on the Department of State that they shall draw the commercial agencies and feed consulates into the classifications provided for in the statute in order that there shall not be this scramble at the little manufacturing towns in Germany and other countries for the certification of invoices merely for the sake of procuring fees. This abuse—because it is an abuse—has been going on for some two or three years.

In 1882 we made a provision for drawing in the feed consulates; and the then Secretary of State, Mr. Frelinghuysen, made a long report on the subject proposing an absolute revision of our entire consular system, which, I think, would be a wise thing to do; but until that is done it is the duty, I think, of the Department of State to estimate specifically for whatever consulates they desire for the consular service in order that they may be put in the classified system of the consular service and turn over the fees they receive regularly to the Treasury, because there is a great inducement for a consul, if he can find a good location either in Switzerland or Germany, where the fees amount to six, seven, or eight thousand dollars a year, to leave his consulate entirely out of the classified service. It is true he ought to receive $2,500; but now he receives an allowance practically at his own discretion for clerk-hire and rent and all the surroundings which he thinks necessary for the carrying on of the office. So it is with St. Galle, in Switzerland, where laces are manufactured. The consul there is a feed consul, receives some seven or eight thousand dollars per annum in the shape of fees, and he is not drawn into the classified service at all. That is all the committee meant by suggesting the amendment referred to.

I did not rise particularly to discuss that amendment, but for the purpose of removing the misapprehension which seems to be in the mind of the Senator from Michigan that it is because of our internal system of transportation that these difficulties arise abroad with reference to the classification of invoices. I do not think that has anything to do with the present system of certifying invoices abroad.

Mr. CONGER. I do not know that the Senator from Iowa exactly understood what I said. It was that by virtue of our laws, not the immediate transportation act, a consular certificate gives special authority to pass goods through the original port of entry without examination, without appraisal, and without the settlement of the duties, to a remote interior port of entry, an equal port of entry in law, and have the examination and the appraisement and the payment of the duties there. I say the law does that, and takes the goods away from places where appraisers exist, for these smaller places have no appraisers, the collector himself being the appraiser. I allege that that is an inducement to men abroad to ship goods from Europe to these smaller and more remote places, perhaps not the very places they would otherwise have sent them.

I do not say it is for the purposes of fraud; but I do know that shipments are made to ports far remote from the original port of entry, but in the general direction where the goods are finally to be used, consigned to a place where they are not intended to be sold, and where there is no market for them. There is some object in using a consular certificate for that purpose to get goods there. I said merely that that being the object at this end of the journey, if there was no intention of undervaluation and of fraud in the consignor of the goods he would very naturally have his invoice certified to, if he had undervalued them at home, by somebody not familiar either with appraisals or valuations, as there would be in the larger towns or the place where the goods were made. Whatever gentlemen may say about it that fact exists, that from Canada and from Europe consular certificates are signed by men away from the very places of manufacture and where the knowledge of the value is not as great as at the places where they should naturally be certified from.

The Senator says, and says very truly, that under our present lax system the consul does not examine each package and its contents, but he certifies that he does. He certifies to the contents and value of package 1 and package 2. The invoice gives the contents, the invoice gives the value, and the consul certifies to it, and that is the authority through which and by which the goods pass from New York off to Natchez, that being a port of entry, the only port of entry on the Mississippi or Ohio Rivers, the others being ports of delivery. Natchez having been the southernmost point of the United States before the acquisition of Louisiana, it was made our southern port of entry, and that district of Natchez, unique in itself, unlike every other point from New Orleans to Pittsburgh or Saint Paul, is a port of entry, a customs district by itself, while all the other great cities on the Mississippi and Ohio, like Cincinnati and all those other places, are mere ports of delivery in the customs district of New Orleans.

By virtue of the power and force of a consular certificate goods can be sent to Natchez. They can not be sent to Cincinnati by virtue of that, because that is a port of delivery only, and they have to be appraised at some other port before they get there. They can be sent to the little ports on the lakes that are ports of entry and can be sent across the continent to Puget Sound, to Port Townsend, or to Portland, or to San Francisco. I do not say that either of these things induces fraud. They may all be honest, but I say if there is a disposition to undervalue and make a false invoice they would naturally go and get the certificate of a consular agent remote from the main marts of shipment in the old countries, and they do it, and evils arise in that way, as an investigation of this matter more full and more complete will show.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The unfinished business will be laid before the Senate.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. CLARK, its Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills; in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

A bill (H. R. 8087) for the relief of John J. Coughlin; and

A bill (H. R. 8328) defining butter, also imposing a tax upon and regulating the manufacture, sale, importation, and exportation of oleomargarine.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the following enrolled bills; and they were thereupon signed by the President pro tempore:

A bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers;

A bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C.;

A bill (S. 226) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand;

A bill (S. 973) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah P. McKean, of Marion, Linn County, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1584) for the relief of Cornelia R. Schenck; and

A bill (S. 2223) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. De Krafft.

TAXATION OF RAILROAD-GRANT LANDS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore appointed Mr. PLUMB, Mr. VAN WYCK, and Mr. WALTHALL the conferees on the part of the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 5874) to alter and amend the act entitled "An act to aid in the construction of a railroad and telegraph line from the Missouri River to the Pacific Ocean, and to secure to the Government the use of the same for postal, military, and other purposes," approved July 1, 1862, and also to alter and amend the act of Congress approved July 2, 1864, in amendment of said first-named act.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 8087) for the relief of John J. Coughlin was read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Claims.

INDEMNITY TO CHINESE SUBJECTS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2225) to indemnify certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Missouri [Mr. COCKRELL] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. ALLISON. I do not wish to interfere with the Senator from Missouri, nor will I interfere with a vote on this Chinese indemnity bill if it can be had in a reasonable time this afternoon. I only want to say that I desire to finish this appropriation bill to-day if possible.

Mr. COCKRELL. Mr. President, Senate bill 2225, reported favorably from the Committee on Foreign Relations, is entitled "A bill to indemnify certain subjects"—I call attention to the language—"certain subjects of the Chinese Empire for losses sustained by the violence of a mob at Rock Springs, in the Territory of Wyoming, in September, 1885.

The bill provides—

That the President of the United States shall ascertain the actual loss and damage inflicted upon the person and property of Chinese subjects by the violence of a mob of lawless and riotous persons at and near Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, on or about the 2d day of September, 1885.

And it authorizes him to detail officers and have a report made, and these officers—

Shall report the estimate of the damages sustained by each person—

That is, each Chinese subject—and the same shall be examined by the Secretary of State; and thereupon the President shall award to each person—

Each Chinese subject—

so injured the sum that he shall consider to be just in view of the evidence and report so presented to him.

Then the second section provides—

That the aggregate amount so awarded by the President, not exceeding $150,000, shall be paid by the Secretary of the Treasury, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the envoy extraordinary and minister plenipotentiary for China at Washington, in full satisfaction and discharge of the injuries to person and property inflicted upon subjects of the Chinese Empire.

This is not a bill proposing an indemnity to the Chinese Government for any indignity, offense, or injury committed upon it by the United States Government, or by any officer, civil or military, representing the United States authority. It is simply a bill to provide for the indemnity of private Chinese subjects who were upon the soil of the United States, and who suffered injury at the hands of a mob.

The bill proposes to take out of the Treasury, out of the funds contributed by the labor, the sweat, and the toil of the people of the United States, a given sum and hand it over to the representative of the Chinese Empire, to be paid to these Chinese subjects or citizens residing temporarily upon our soil and supposed to have been injured.

Now what are the facts upon which this action is proposed to be based? In order to ascertain all the facts we must first consider the parties to this transaction, this mob, then second the place at which it occurred, then third how and why the parties were there, and then what caused the mob. In order to get at all the facts we must consider these various points.

The first question then is, Who were the parties composing this mob and upon whom did they use mob violence? I read from House Executive Document No. 102, Forty-ninth Congress, first session, "The Chinese Question." I read from the testimony of James H. Dickey on page 15. He says:

The nationality of the men was Welsh, Cornishmen, and Swedes, and from other foreign countries. Don't know of any Americans being engaged in the trouble or attack.

I read from the President's message, pages 1 and 2 of the same document:

And it is but just to say that they are traceable to the lawlessness of men not citizens of the United States engaged in competition with Chinese laborers.

* * * * * * *

This outrage upon law and treaty engagements was committed by a lawless mob. None of the aggressors, happily for the national good fame, appear by the reports to have been citizens of the United States. They were aliens, engaged in that remote district as mining laborers, who became excited against the Chinese laborers, as it would seem, because of their refusal to join them in a strike to secure higher wages.

I quote now from the Chinese consul, Frederick A. Bee, of San Francisco, page 12 of this document:

It may be of interest to your excellency to know that not one of these murdering fiends was a native of this country, many of them not residents of the United States one year, and but a small number naturalized citizens. Such were the facts I learned from undoubted authority. As an instance, his excellency Governor Warren, governor of the Territory of Wyoming, was waited upon by a committee of miners who, among other demands made upon him, said that under no circumstances would they permit the Chinese to labor in the coal mines of the Territory. When asked by the governor if they made these demands as citizens, they all had to admit that they were not citizens, and never had been naturalized as such.

I now read from A. C. Beckwith, whose testimony was taken by the Chinese officials, on page 16 of this pamphlet:

There are but two nationalities working as laborers in these mines—European and Chinese.

I quote further from an interview with Hon. E. P. Alexander, M. A. Hanna, and James W. Savage, Government directors of the Union Pacific Railway, who visited there immediately after this occurrence. On page 26, they were asked this question:

Is that true that most of the attacking party of miners were aliens?

Quite true. We found upon investigation that there was not an American-born citizen among them. Their nationalities were English, Welsh, Scotch, Irish, and Scandinavian, their numbers predominating in the order named.

I quote now from Secretary Bayard's letter as contained in this same document on page 63:

On neither side, among assailants or assailed, was there any representative of the Government of China or of the United States or of the Territory of Wyoming. There was, therefore, as there could be, no official insult or wrong. Whatever occurred was between private individuals wholly devoid of official character. It was, moreover, absolutely without national character. The domestic element of an ordinary civil disturbance was wanting. The assailants, equally with the assailed, were strangers in our land. In strict truth, the hospitality of a friendly country, no less than the rights of peaceable sojourners therein, may be said to have been outraged by a body of aliens, who, being permitted by the generosity of our laws to enter our borders and roam unchecked and at will throughout its jurisdiction, freely and profitably selecting their places of abode and finding occupation therein, have abused the privileges thus accorded to them and committed gross breaches of the public peace, suddenly and doubtless with the knowledge that nowhere within summons could any police organization be found in sufficient force to stay their criminal hands.

Mr. President, the parties engaged in this mob were Chinese and European foreigners; not an American citizen was engaged in it, no man who had sworn allegiance to this country and its institutions. Where at what place did the disturbance occur? I read from Secretary Bayard's letter to the Chinese minister, on pages 62 and 63:

The region in which this outbreak occurred is not within the borders of any State of the United States, but is within the limits of Wyoming Territory. You make the point that this Territory is directly under the control of the Federal Government, and that the acts of the Territorial officers are in that degree those of the United States in the national capacity, not those of a distinct sovereignty. In this you approximately state a broad proposition; but do not accurately give it specific application. By its enabling and organic law the Territory of Wyoming enjoys local self-government, with a full equipment of officials in every branch known to our Republican forms, who are invested with full authority to maintain law and order and administer justice to all inhabitants. This Territorial government contains the usual framework of the other republics which combine to form this Union. It comprises an executive, a legislative, and a judicial branch. In the centers of population this government is as competent to discharge its administrative obligations as is the government of any State, and is responsible in the same way. Recent occurrences at Seattle, in the Territory of Washington, show this. Blood has been shed there lately under the authority of Territorial officials in successful defense and assertion of the right of certain of your countrymen to peaceable and law-observant residence.

The scene of the lamentable occurrences at Rock Springs was, however, remote from any center of population, and was marked by all the customary features of a newly and scantily settled locality. It consisted of a scattered assemblage of dwellings near a railway station and in the vicinity of some coal mines. The population was made up of men of all races, migratory in their habits; some engaged as laborers in mining, while others were employed in furnishing their supplies. Of formal recognized authority there were few representatives, and little or no attempt at organized police. It was, in short, a rude commencement of a community on the outposts of civilization, and, like all such beginnings, largely dependent for stability and order on the congruity of the elements of which it was composed.

To this remote and unprotected region your countrymen voluntarily resorted in large numbers. The attack upon them, as your note truly states, was made suddenly by a lawless band of about one hundred and fifty armed men, who had given no previous intimation of their criminal intent. These men were discontented mining laborers, who had previously sought to induce the Chinese to join with them in a concerted strike for higher wages, and their overtures being rejected, they became angered on that account.

The place was one where no civil authority of the United States practically existed, where there were no civil officers, where there was no police whatever. We have seen the parties and the place. Now how and why were these parties there? How did it happen that subjects of the Celestial Empire and subjects of three or four European nations, coming from the East and the West, met at this isolated place in Wyoming Territory, Rock Springs, and became engaged in coal mining and involved in this dispute? I read from this same executive document, page 15:

STATEMENT OF A. C. BECKWITH.

I am a member of the firm of Beckwith, Quinn & Co. Our business has been carried on at this place, Rock Springs, for ten years. A branch of our firm is and has been engaged in the furnishing of miners for the Union Pacific Railroad. We have furnished all nationalities, including Chinese. Up to the year 1875 these mines had been worked exclusively by white men.

Mark the time—"Up to the year 1875 these mines had been worked exclusively by white," or European miners—

At that time a strike took place by the miners. We—

Who are "we?" Their firm, the masters of these imported hirelings—

We then decided to employ a portion of the force, at least by experiment, comprising Chinese. We obtained about four hundred and set them to work, paying them the same wages we paid white men, which we have adhered to up to this time, a period of ten years. * * *

We as a firm have not brought into these mines any more Chinese the past year than years previous, and those who have been brought here this year were only to fill vacancies.

In the year 1885 they were still importing them.

Now, Mr. President, these parties are gathered together by a corporation or a subordinate power of that corporation as hirelings, as slaves, as serfs, and they are taken there and placed in those mines, first the Europeans, then the Chinese to displace them, and the Chinese and their government knew the object for which they were going there; they knew the object for which they were imported to Rock Springs. It was to supplant and drive out the other miners; they knew the incidents of that; they knew the probable result; and yet they go there because they are mere hirelings, and will sell themselves for wages.

We have ascertained the facts, the parties, the place, and how these parties got there. We see who they are. On the one hand they were Europeans from four or five different nations who have come here not to become citizens of the United States, not to become a part and parcel of this great country and people. On the other hand are Chinese brought from China to supplant these identical Europeans and drive them out of the mines. Because as laborers, hirelings, practically slaves, they are more docile, less resentful, more easily controllable, they were taken there, knowing the place to which they were going, the place almost outside the jurisdiction of civil or criminal authority in the United States. They go there, and they take all their chances and invite the race prejudices and animosities of the laborers they were displacing, and are alone personally and individually responsible for all consequences.

Now, let us get at the true cause which precipitated this mob. The distinguished representative of the Chinese Government has undertaken to suppress apparently or ignore the actual origin, and the distinguished Senators from Ohio and Vermont and New York have each ignored the spark that caused the conflagration. They have failed to get at the actual cause that brought this mob into existence and this terrible dealing with these Chinese. What was it? On page 13 of this document I read from the testimony of Mr. O. C. Smith, postmaster at Rock Springs:

About 9 o'clock in the forenoon on the day mentioned word was brought to me that there was trouble in No. 6 mine between white and Chinese miners. I immediately started to walk there. Half a mile this side of No. 6 mine I found about thirty white miners sitting on the railroad track. About half of them had guns in their hands. I inquired what it meant, and they said there had been a fight in the mine between two white men and some Chinese miners about a room; that the white miners and Chinese had been hurt. I advised them all to go back and go to work, &c.

Now, I read from the testimony of Mr. James H. Dickey, from whom I have quoted before, on page 15:

The first thing that attracted my attention on that day—

The 2d day of September, 1885—was when a Chinaman named Ah Lip came out of the mine and went to Mr. Francis's house, he being a pit boss, and requested him to go into the mine and settle some trouble there. Mr. Francis asked him, "What is the matter?" Lip said, "The white miners want to fight the Chinamen." Mr. Francis went with him to the pit. Mr. Francis told me that Mr. Evans—

A pit boss, I suppose—had marked off four rooms in No. 5 entry, two for Chinese miners, and Isaiah Whitehouse and William Jenkins went to work in two of the rooms, and the first day put in a shot and left it, not going back that day, but did so the next morning, September 2. On this day the Chinamen went to the rooms that had been assigned to them the day before, and fired the shot that Whitehouse had put in the day before. When he went to the room and found the Chinamen at work the difficulty took place, the Chinamen claiming that the pit boss had assigned the room to them. The two white miners beat the Chinamen in a terrible manner. This took place about 8 o'clock a. m. I saw them taking the wounded Chinamen on a buckboard over toward their houses.

About half past 8 o'clock I saw the white miners come out of the mine and go to Rock Springs, about forty-five men all told. No. 6 mine is about half a mile from Chinatown.

I now quote from Ralph Zwicky, pages 16 and 17:

In the forenoon of September 2 our clerk reported from No. 6 mine that a fight had taken place in the mine between white and Chinese miners; that several Chinamen had been seriously hurt, and that the men were all leaving the mines.

On page 17 he says:

The immediate cause of the riot was the occupation of two rooms by Chinese which white miners claimed had been given to them by Foreman Evans and Pit Boss Brookman. As the Chinese would not vacate the rooms a fight ensued, in which many white miners took part. As the statement of the parties connected with the affair is contradictory, and my knowledge is based upon hearsay, I would respectfully refer to the testimony given before the Government directors. My belief, however, is that there was no intention of defrauding white miners or of favoring Chinese, but that there was a misunderstanding of the orders by Evans and Brookman.

A remoter cause of the riot was the importation of Chinese miners during the summer and non-employment of white men coming to town. The reason for this was the coal company feared a strike of white miners, and to prevent this introduced more Chinamen. All white miners belonging to Rock Springs had work at good wages.

The grievances of white miners adduced to have led to the riot are favoritism of the Chinese against white men by pit bosses and officials of the coal company. Of this I have no personal knowledge, except that one boss, McBride, was discharged from the employment of the coal company, it having been proven that he sold rooms. I would again refer to the testimony before the Government directors.

Now, Mr. President, take the press account, on page 23 of this same document. I will not take time to read the whole of it, but it is substantially the same. Now take the white laborers' grievances, found in the report on page 22. They say:

1. They have been robbed of their rights by being turned out of their places in the mine and Chinese put into the same.
2. They have been made to work where Chinese would not work.
3. Their places have been bought by Chinese giving as far as $100 to the mine boss for the same.
4. They have been robbed by false weights being used to weigh their coal.
5. They have been discharged because they refused to vote for Mrs. Tisdel for school superintendent.
6. They have been compelled to buy their goods of Beckwith, Quinn & Co., when they could have procured them cheaper elsewhere.

These are some of the grievances of the foreigners there called "whites." Now, let us see what the Chinese have to say for themselves. On page 32 the Chinese say—Chinese laborers now:

1. The Chinese had been for a long time employed at the same work as the white men. While they knew that the white men entertained ill feelings toward them, the Chinese did not take any precautions to guard against this sudden outbreak, inasmuch as at no time in the past had there been any quarrel or fighting between the races.

Mark, they say this "sudden outbreak."

2. On the 2d day of September, 1885, in coal-pit No. 6, the white men attacked the Chinese. That place being quite a distance from Rock Springs, very few Chinese were there. As we did not think that the trouble would extend to Rock Springs, we did not warn each other to prepare for flight.
3. Most of the Chinese living in Rock Springs worked during the daytime in the different coal mines, and consequently did not hear of the fight at coal-pit No. 6, nor did they know of the armed mob that had assembled in "Whitemen's town." When 12 o'clock came everybody returned home from his place of work to lunch. As yet the mob had not come to attack the Chinese; a great number of the latter were returning to work without any apprehension of danger.
4. About 2 o'clock the mob suddenly—

Mark the language—"suddenly"— made their appearance for the attack. The Chinese thought that they had only assembled to threaten, and that some of the company's officers would come to disperse them.

What is that they thought? That some of the company's officers would come to disperse them, that some of their masters would come to demand obedience of their co-slaves and co-serfs. There was their reliance—not upon the laws and power of the United States or of the Territory of Wyoming, but upon their lords and masters who had imported them there and who doubtless if the truth were known had engaged to protect them. They did not go there under the authority and protection of the United States.

Most of the Chinese, acting upon this view of the matter, did not gather up their money or clothing, and when the mob fired at them they fled precipitately. Those Chinese who were in the workshops, hearing of the riot, stopped work and fled in their working clothes, and did not have time enough to go home to change their clothes or to gather up their money. What they had left at home was either plundered or burned.

5. None of the Chinese had fire-arms or any defensive weapons, nor was there any place that afforded an opportunity for the erection of a barricade that might impede the rioters in their attack. The Chinese were all like a herd of frightened deer that let the huntsmen surround and kill them.
6. All the Chinese had on the 1st of September bought from the company a month's supply of provisions and the implements necessary for the mining of coal. This loss of property was therefore larger than it would be later in the month.

There is their grievance. Now you have the cause of it. Here are hirelings, serfs, slaves of this corporation and its subordinate monopoly, brought from Europe, from China, from the East and the West, and put down there in an isolated, distant place beyond the power and authority practically of the police and civil and criminal officers of the United States, the company to take care of them. The Chinese looked to the company for protection, not asking for any police officers, not asking for any soldiers to be stationed there, asking no protection of the United States, but looking simply and solely to their masters who had employed them for protection. They get into a quarrel, into a contention, in a mine, the fault of one of their subordinate bosses, a pit boss having assigned to Chinamen and Europeans the same rooms in mine No. 6. They get into a fight there. Nobody was apprehending any riot. No notice or warning was given to the Territorial authorities, no notice or warning of any kind was given to the United States authorities, none to the officials of any kind, none even to the company. The Chinese say they thought the company's officers would come and disperse these other fellows. They got into this fight. They left the mines, and a mob was the result, and damage was done; and the distinguished Senators from Ohio and Vermont and New York ask the tax-paying people of the United States to come up and put down the money to pay damages that these serfs and hirelings sustained at the hands of their brother serfs and hirelings.

We have the facts. Where is the law that creates any liability? Upon what principle of international law can any liability be imposed upon the tax-payers of the United States? I challenge the gifted and distinguished Senator from New York in charge of the bill to quote a solitary writer on international law to show liability on the part of the United States Government for these acts. I challenge him to quote any authority on this question. It is not in the books; it is not in reason; it is not in common sense; it is not in honesty; it is not in Christianity.

What are the general principles which govern foreigners resident in the United States upon our soil. What are the obligations of the United States to any foreign citizens residing or traveling in the United States? I ask the distinguished Senator from New York in charge of the bill to show what are the obligations of the United States to foreigners traveling in this country. I say, and I ask his criticism of it, that the general principle is this: The Government of the United States is bound to extend to foreigners temporarily residing, transient, engaged in business inside the territorial limits of the United States the same remedies for the redress of wrongs and the enforcement of rights as are extended to our own citizens. I say there is not a writer in the whole line of writers upon international law who will go further than I have stated. If we extend to foreigners residing here and traveling in our country the rights, privileges, and immunities extended to our own citizens we have discharged every obligation of international law and comity, of religion and Christianity.

Have we done that in this case? Has the United States Government extended to these Chinese every right, privilege, and immunity it would extend to its own citizens? That is the question. The burden of proof is upon the claimants. Where is there one particle of evidence that they have adduced to show that the United States Government has not extended to the Chinese every right, every remedy, and every immunity that would be extended to any citizen of the United States? Let us examine that, for I want to be exactly correct. On page 1 of the President's message the President says:

Every effort has been made by this Government to prevent these violent outbreaks, and to aid the representatives of China in their investigation of these outrages; and it is but just to say that they are traceable to the lawlessness of men not citizens of the United States engaged in competition with Chinese laborers.

On page 2 he says:

In the investigation of the Rock Springs outbreak and the ascertainment of the facts on which the Chinese minister's statements rest, the Chinese representatives were aided by the agents of the United States, and the reports submitted having been thus framed and recounting facts within the knowledge of witnesses on both sides, possess an impartial truthfulness which could not fail to give them great impressiveness."

On page 19 of the same executive document we find that there was a coroner's jury impaneled. It made its reports. They may be criticised and burlesqued; I will deal with them in a few moments. Read Mr. Bee's interview on pages 27 and 28, which seems to have been copied in this document as testimony. In addition to the coroner's jury a grand jury was impaneled, and I will read that first, on page 27:

We have diligently inquired into the occurrence at Rock Springs on the 2d day of September last, and though we have examined a large number of witnesses, no one has been able to testify to a single criminal act committed by any known white person that day.

Now, mark it; here is the machinery of government in full operation, a coroner's jury impaneled and an inquest held. Anybody was at liberty to come and testify before that coroner's jury and give information. It was the duty of the officers and persons in charge of these laborers to give the information. The very next month, on October 7, a grand jury was impaneled. They summoned before them witnesses, and they could not find a single witness to testify to a single criminal act committed by any known white person on that day. The Chinese minister and representatives are disposed to criticise this. They have made charges which they have not offered one particle of evidence to sustain. Mr. Bee in this interview says, on page 28:

To show you what sort of a grand jury that must have been, I will simply state that I myself have nine affidavits of railroad employés, merchants, and superintendents of the mine, who saw every house fired from first to last.

Now, mark you, the agent and representative of the Celestial Empire himself has in his hands the sworn affidavits of competent witnesses to establish certain facts connected with this transaction.

I told United States District Attorney Campbell, who was especially deputized by the Attorney-General to investigate the massacre, that if he would guarantee proper protection I would furnish him Chinese witnesses who could identify every white engaged in the assault. He said he would attend to the matter, and let me know. He then went off to Evanston, and I have never seen or heard from him since. There was no attempt on the part of the prosecuting officers to indict; they did not want any indictments returned, thanks to the reign of terror. You must remember that these Chinese and white miners have been working together for the last eight years, and are a trifle more than familiar with each other's countenances. All the white miners as well as the Chinese were paid off by an American firm, and the head of that concern, as well as two or three clerks, could have identified every one of the rioters.

"Whatever crimes may have been committed," say the jurors, "the perpetrators thereof have not been discovered." Now, to expose the falsity of the statement, let me tell you what took place before the Government railroad directors, M. A. Hanna, of Cleveland, Ohio; E. P. Alexander, of Augusta, Ga., and Judge J. W. Savage, of Iowa. When these gentlemen began their investigations they desired the evidence of Chinese witnesses, and requested me to furnish such witnesses. They assured me that the Chinamen should be protected while giving their testimony, and I then produced the witnesses. The first Chinaman who testified—

Describing him, was asked by Judge Savage—

how he got the cut on his head. The Chinaman said he was struck on the head with a pick-handle and knocked senseless, and after he recovered consciousness he started to run away, and was shot. Judge Savage then said: "Can you recognize the man who struck you on the head?" and the answer was prompt and unhesitating: "Oh, yes; I have known him a long time." "Can you give his name?" was then asked, and the witness then replied: "Isaiah Whitehouse."

Isaiah Whitehouse, the very individual with whom the Chinaman had the fuss down in mine No. 6 over one of the rooms.

"Now," continued Colonel Bee, "this man Whitehouse is an ignorant, bigoted Mormon, and a member of the Legislature."

We here see that the only parties who had the evidence to cause indictments to be found were the authorities of the railroad company or its officials, who knew these parties, and the representatives of the Chinese Government. Where was Colonel Bee when that grand jury was in session? Why did he not go there and present these affidavits before that grand jury and why did he not have witnesses subpœnaed? What steps have the Chinese taken under the civil and criminal laws of the United States to bring these murderers and robbers and thieves and plunderers to justice in the courts of the Territory? Not one step. Oh, no; they throw themselves back upon their reserved rights, as they think, upon the Government of the United States. They resort to the purse of the tax-payers of the United States, thinking it is easier for them to get redress by appealing to the sentimentalism of the distinguished Senator from New York and his confrères, appealing to their liberality, their generosity. No, they have not taken one solitary step. The courts are open to them. Every Chinaman there whose property was destroyed has an adequate remedy in the courts of that Territory, the same remedy he would have were he a native-born citizen of the United States. The courts, with criminal jurisdiction and power to enforce the laws against criminals, murderers, were open and are now open equally to the Chinese as to our own citizens.

We have done all that could be expected of us. This mob was sudden, unexpected. It was not anticipated by the Chinese, and was not anticipated by a solitary living individual who had any power or authority under the laws of the United States or of that Territory. There was no warning and there could be no preventive measures taken. It was sudden and unexpected to everybody. What did our Government do? At once the army was sent there. Officers were sent there. They went to the Chinamen who had been frightened from their work and took them back and put them to work. They immediately suppressed every possible disturbance. Peace reigned supreme from the moment it was possible for the United States to rush soldiers there. There was no police force, there was no United States marshal, there was no sheriff of the county. It was a sparsely settled country. It was impossible for the civil authorities to get together a force to suppress a disturbance of that kind. The United States immediately sent troops there, and did all that any government on the face of the earth would do. It did more than China would have done under the same circumstances.

We have extended to these Chinese for the redress of their grievances and the enforcement of their rights, every right, privilege, and immunity afforded by the United States to our own citizens. What more can we do? What more ought we to do? The Chinese there can pursue their remedies in the courts of the Territory for damages, for redress of grievances. It is the duty of every Chinaman who has any personal knowledge of a felony having been committed upon his own property or person, or upon that of any of his confrères there, his co-slaves, to give information to the proper officers, to have the guilty party arrested, and to have criminal process issued against him. It is his duty to do it. Living under the laws of the United States he must observe them. It is just as much his duty to do it as it is that of any American citizen.

These remedies are open to them, and not only that, but we afford them a right and a privilege which is not accorded to any citizens of the United States or the citizens of any other favored nation. They seem to have been the particular objects of the love and care of the United States Government. They can go into the United States courts for the redress of their grievances and the enforcement of their rights in cases where the citizens of the United States themselves can not go.

What more can the United States do than has been done in this case? The distinguished Senator from Vermont spoke about a year having elapsed and nobody having been brought to punishment. This mob only occurred on the 2d day of last September.

Mr. President, you can point all over this country, a country of law and order, of peace and justice, of right and Christianity—you can point all over this country to mobs. They are almost inseparable from any system of governmental administration. You can point to hundreds of them where no guilty man was ever indicted or brought to punishment, and where no reparation was ever made for the property destroyed. The law was open, the parties injured had their remedies, and never thought of appealing to the United States for redress.

The Senator from Ohio [Mr. SHERMAN] spoke about the mob at Pittsburgh and the State of Pennsylvania being responsible. Suppose it had been Chinese who had been damaged by that mob of American citizens, would they not have had the same rights and remedies against the State of Pennsylvania that the citizens of that State had? Certainly. These Chinese in Wyoming Territory have every right, privilege, and immunity that any citizen of the United States has there, and if the laws of Wyoming provide compensation for property destroyed by mobs they can secure that compensation and reparation. They have the same rights, and they have no more right to come here than any citizen of the United States who suffered from a mob would have a right to come here and ask for reparation.

I will read from the admirable letter of Secretary Bayard to the Chinese minister the portions of it which I have not read. On page 63 he says:

As you are aware, in the States of the Union, and also in the organized Territories and in the District of Columbia, where the Government of the nation has its Federal seat, the conservation of the public peace is committed to the local authorities, and crimes of violence involving the lives and safety of the property of individuals are held to be in violation of the peace, and in derogation of the local laws and jurisdiction. This violation constitutes the criminality which the police of the community seeks to prevent by all rational precautions and which the law is intended to punish.

Violent assaults and homicides in newly-settled countries are very frequent and in proportion as the social elements are incongruous and the organization of police and judiciary is inchoate and imperfect.

The Government of the United States, opening its vast domain so freely to actual settlers, has extended the scope and power of the Constitution and laws over the Territories, by confiding to their local Legislatures and government the duty and power of maintaining order, preserving the public peace, and punishing infractions thereof. In this respect the local authority and responsibility is in practice as self-contained in a Territory as in a State.

Moreover, this local authority and responsibility is applied to and affects all inhabitants alike. Before the law alien and native are equal. Your note, however, intimated rather than argues the existence of special and peculiar responsibility in respect of the Chinese in our midst. By argument and analogy you seek to show that a singular and exceptional obligation rests upon the United States toward Chinamen, correspondent and reciprocal to the contractual obligations of China in respect of citizens of the United States resorting thither.

On page 67, he says:

The Chinese subjects now in the United States are certainly accorded all the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions which pertain to the citizens and subjects of the most favored nation, as is provided in the second article of the treaty.

* * * * * * *

The same laws are administered by the same tribunals to Chinese subjects as to American citizens, save in one respect, wherein the Chinese alien is the more favored, since he has a right of option in selecting either a State or a Federal tribunal for the trial of his rights, which in many cases is denied for residential causes to our own citizens; and he may even at will remove his cause from a State to a Federal court.

He is a highly privileged individual, possessing under our laws and treaty, rights and privileges not enjoyed by the noblest citizen of this country.

Thus, I find in the public press the announcement that Wing Hing, on behalf of himself and others, Chinese subjects, has lately brought suit in the United States circuit court to recover $132,000 from the city of Eureka, Humboldt County, California, for loss of property by the action of a mob in February of last year. A citizen of that State would have been compelled to resort to a State tribunal, without appeal beyond the jurisdiction of the State, whereas the Chinese plaintiff in question can carry his case on appeal to the Supreme Court at Washington, thus divesting his rights from all adverse chance of local prejudice.

I think you will thus recognize, in the same frank spirit as animates your note, that none of the protection intended by the law for our own citizens is withheld from your countrymen, but that, on the contrary, they possess noteworthy advantages in the choice of forum or the removal of their cause, of which many of our citizens are deprived.

The provision of an organized and in some cases privileged forum excludes the idea of direct recourse by the alien to other means of obtaining justice or redress. Your note argues that direct recourse to administrative or executive settlement is open to citizens of the United States in China, and instances are cited to show this. Surely, this rather proves that to the alien in China no such judicial forum is secured as to aliens in the United States.

The extraterritorial tribunals established for their own citizens or subjects by all the powers in treaty relations with China are, in principle and from the reason of the thing, incompetent to adjudicate questions touching the liability of China to aliens.

On page 69 I read:

The doctrine of the non-liability of the United States for the acts of individuals committed in violations of its laws is clear as to acts of its own citizens, and a fortiori in respect of aliens who abuse the privilege accorded them of residence in our midst by breaking the public peace and infringing upon the rights of others, and it has been correctly and authoritatively laid down by my predecessors in office, to whose declarations in that behalf your note refers. To that doctrine the course of this Government furnishes no exception.

On page 70 he says:

That the power of the National Government is promptly and efficiently exercised whenever occasion unhappily arises therefor you have justly acknowledged, and it has been abundantly shown. The conditions under which this power may be applied are not always clear and are sometimes very difficult. Causes growing out of the peculiar characteristics and habits of the Chinese immigrants have induced them to segregate themselves from the rest of the residents and citizens of the United States and to refuse to mingle with the mass of population as do the members of other nationalities. As a consequence, race prejudice has been more excited against them.

No measures can be devised to meet the problem which do not take this state of things into account, nor can they be effective if they do not contemplate the exercise of authority where it is competent to afford protection, for these measures have only for their object to secure to the Chinese the same rights as other foreigners of the most favored nation enjoy, not superior or special rights. For Chinese labor is not alone repugnant to the local communities; from many quarters of the land comes the same cry—the conflict of different alien laborers and the oppression of the weaker by the stronger. There can and should be no discrimination in applying punitive measures to all infractions of law. And so, too, with preventive measures. What will protect a Hungarian or Italian contract laborer in Pennsylvania or a Swedish "non-union" man in Ohio is equally applicable to a Chinaman on the Pacific coast.

We have done everything in the world that could be required of us as a nation, and there has been no neglect on the part of any official of the United States or of the Territory of Wyoming which would make the United States responsible.

Are we liable under treaty stipulations? The Senator from Ohio intimated that there was a liability by reason of treaty stipulations. The Senator from Vermont did the same, and also the Senator from New York, but not quite as broadly as the Senators from Ohio and Vermont, who seemed to think that there was some special obligation upon the United States by virtue of its treaty relations with China.

I have before me all the treaties ever made with China. I shall not take time to read in full the passages to which I call attention. The first treaty was made with China in 1844; an additional treaty was made in 1858; an additional one in 1868; and the last one in 1880. Secretary Bayard in his letter to the Chinese minister gives an epitome of these treaties and the rights and privileges under them. The President in his message communicating this case to Congress says that we have discharged our treaty obligations. What was the treaty of 1844? I have it before me. I have examined its provisions. I say that there is not in the treaty of 1844 even the mention of the right of a Chinaman in the United States. Why was that omitted? Because the citizens of China had the same right under the liberal policy and principles of this great Government to come here that the citizens of any other country had. It was not a treaty for the protection of Chinese citizens in the United States; it was not a treaty for the recognition of the rights of Chinamen.

We had already recognized to them all the rights and privileges accorded to the citizens of any other nation. They needed no protection by treaty. But what was the treaty? It was to give to American citizens rights in China. That, and that alone. They had no rights there; they were aliens and heathens—aliens from the commonwealth of China, heathens to her institutions, without mercy and without hope according to their theory. That treaty gave to citizens of the United States limited rights to reside at the five Chinese ports. That was about all. They could engage in commerce there, and we had the authority to send ministers and consuls there. The mode of paying the tariff duties was pointed out. I now read from Article XVII:

Citizens of the United States residing or sojourning at any of the ports open to foreign commerce shall enjoy all proper accommodation in obtaining houses and places of business, or in hiring sites from the inhabitants on which to construct houses and places of business, and also hospitals, churches, and cemeteries. The local authorities of the two governments shall select in concert the sites for the foregoing objects, having due regard to the feelings of the people in the location thereof.

Here was what? Every American citizen going to China was to have due regard to the feelings and prejudices, the likes and dislikes of that race of people. They could not go and settle where they chose; they did not grant them any such privilege; they could only go where they were permitted to go. Article XIX provides that—

All citizens of the United States in China, peaceably attending to their affairs, being placed on a common footing of amity and good-will with subjects of China, shall receive and enjoy, for themselves and everything appertaining to them, the special protection of the local authorities of government, who shall defend them from all insult or injury of any sort on the part of the Chinese. If their dwellings or property be threatened or attacked by mobs, incendiaries, or other violent or lawless persons, the local officers, on requisition of the consul, will immediately dispatch a military force to disperse the rioters, and will apprehend the guilty individuals, and punish them with the utmost rigor of the law.

There are various other provisions here, but I wish to call the attention of the Senator from New York to a special provision in the twenty-sixth article of that treaty. I have tried to make a distinction between mob violence committed within the territorial limits of the United States by the citizens of one foreign country upon citizens of another foreign country. The Senator from New York, the Senator from Ohio, and the Senator from Vermont, have all said that it made no difference, that we had the same obligations imposed upon us regardless of whether the mob force were citizens of the United States or foreigners passing through the country. In other words, they have stated the doctrine to be, and it would practically be, that if an English lord, with a host of servants, twelve or fifteen in number, should go out into some part of the Western country and there meet a Chinese official of high rank with his escort of servants, and they should get into some little dispute over a game of cards or a bottle of whisky, or some trivial matter, and the Chinese should whip the English and kill them and rob them of their property, we are responsible to the English nation, and if the Englishmen killed the Chinese or destroyed their property we are responsible to the Chinese nation.

I assert that there is no such principle in international law. I assert that there is no such precedent to be found in the recorded annals of civilized nations, and I challenge the production of a solitary one. I say when we furnish to foreigners traveling in this country, not citizens of the country, not coming here for citizenship, the same rights, privileges, and immunities to go into our courts, redress their grievances and enforce their rights as to our own citizens, we have discharged every obligation that can rest upon any civilized Christian nation. I repudiate the doctrine asserted by these distinguished Senators that the tax-payers of the United States can be made responsible for the malicious, tortious, vindictive acts of bands of foreigners traveling upon our soil and coming in collision and doing damage to each other.

Now, let us see what the Chinese thought of this question. I read the twenty-sixth article of the treaty of 1844. The Chinese are one of the oldest nations of people now existing. They have had experience in diplomacy. It has never yet been learned that any nation got the advantage of the Chinese in a treaty. Let us see what they provide in the twenty-sixth article of the treaty:

For injuries done to the citizens or the commerce of the United States by any foreign power the Chinese Government will not hold itself bound to make reparation. But if the merchant vessels of the United States, while within the waters over which the Chinese Government exercises jurisdiction, be plundered by robbers or pirates, then the Chinese local authorities, civil and military, on receiving information thereof, will arrest the said robbers or pirates, and punish them according to law, and will cause all the property which can be recovered to be placed in the hands of the nearest consul, or other officer of the United States, to be by him restored to the true owner. But if, by reason of the extent of territory and numerous population of China, it should, in any case, happen that the robbers can not be apprehended, or the property only in part recovered, then the law will take its course in regard to the local authorities, but the Chinese Government will not make indemnity for the goods lost.

The Chinese were smart enough then to establish what has always been international law upon such a question, and to insert in that treaty an express provision of non-liability for acts precisely like this.

The treaty of 1858 I have before me. So far as the rights of the Chinese are concerned it does not touch them. It makes no provision for the rights of Chinese in the United States; it is only an extension of the rights and privileges granted to American citizens in China. I refer to Articles XI, XII, XXIV, XXV, and XXIX. I come now to the treaty of 1868, and refer to Articles IV, V, VI, VII of that treaty. That is the first treaty that mentioned the right of a Chinaman in the United States. It is the first treaty that grants to Chinese in the United States any rights or privileges whatever. Why? Because they had all rights and privileges before, but there were special things provided for in the treaty of 1868 for Chinese as well as for citizens of the United States.

Now I come to the treaty of 1880. The treaty of 1880 was restrictive. The treaty of 1868 was a partial restriction, but the next treaty, that of 1880, was a restrictive treaty. It took from the Chinese in the United States the privileges and immunities which they had enjoyed with the citizens of all other nations up to that time. It was not a granting of additional privileges to them, and there is not one solitary word in that treaty which makes the United States liable. The only article that the Chinese minister quotes is Article III, which is as follows:

If Chinese laborers, or Chinese of any other class, now either permanently or temporarily residing in the territory of the United States, meet with ill-treatment at the hands of any other persons, the Government of the United States will exert all its power to devise measures for their protection, and to secure to them the same rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions as may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, and to which they are entitled by treaty.

We have extended to them the remedies, and they have the remedies yet. They can go there as the citizen of the most favored nation can go and they can bring their suits in the Territorial courts. They can go as citizens of the United States can not go. They can go as the citizens of no other nation on earth can go. They can bring their suits in the United States courts, and if they bring them in the Territorial courts then they can take them by change to the Federal courts. We have given them more than the treaty contemplates.

There is no treaty obligation; there is no international obligation. Is there any general obligation? The President in his message states the position fully as to the general liability of the United States. He says:

But when he—

Referring to the Chinese minister—

But when he goes further, and, taking as his precedent the action of the Chinese Government in past instances where the lives of American citizens and their property in China have been endangered, argues a reciprocal obligation on the part of the United States to indemnify the Chinese subjects who suffered at Rock Springs, it became necessary to meet his argument and to deny most emphatically the conclusions he seeks to draw as to the existence of such a liability and the right of the Chinese Government to insist upon it.

I refer to what I have already read from the letter of Mr. Bayard on page 69, in which he says that to that doctrine—the doctrine of non-liability of the Government—the course of this Government furnishes no exception.

I shall not stop at the authority of the President of the United States and Secretary Bayard, distinguished and able as they are. There was a day when the distinguished Senator from Vermont would not say "even this conservative administration." There was a day in the history of this country when that distinguished jurist and able Senator, Hon. WILLIAM M. EVARTS, of New York, under a Republican administration, presided at the helm of the old ship of state and guided her destinies and proclaimed the principles that govern this the greatest of all countries. It gives me pleasure to refer to the position and exposition of the law then by that distinguished Secretary of State. I read from executive document, Foreign Relations, page 319:

[Mr. Evarts to Chen Lan Pin.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, December 30, 1880.

* * * * * * *

You express, in your note, the desire that this Government shall extend protection to the Chinese in Denver, and see that the guilty persons are arrested and punished and you add that—

This is a quotation—

"It would seem to be just that the owners of the property wantonly destroyed shall, in some way, be compensated for their losses."

The identical language used in the very adroit note of the present minister to Secretary Bayard.

It affords me—

Says Secretary Evarts—

pleasure to assure you that not only in Denver, but in every other part of the United States, the protection of this Government will always be, as it always has been, freely and fully given to the natives of China resident in the country, in the same manner and to the same extent as it is afforded to our own citizens. As to the arrest and punishment of the guilty persons who composed the mob at Denver I need only remind you that the powers of direct intervention on the part of this Government are limited by the Constitution of the United States.

On page 320, the then Secretary of State, Hon. William M. Evarts says:

It seems superfluous to recall to your attention the fact, but too well attested by history, that on occasions, happily infrequent, often without motive in their inception, and always without reason in their working, lawless persons will band together and make up a force in the character of a mob of sufficient power and numerical strength to defy, for the moment, the denunciations of the law and the power of the local authorities. Such incidents are peculiar to no country. Neither the United States nor China are exempt from such disasters. In the case now under consideration it is seen that the local authorities brought into requisition all the means at their command for the suppression of the mob, and that these means proved so effective that within twenty-four hours regular and lawful authority was re-established, the mob completely subdued, and many of the ringleaders arrested.

Under circumstances of this nature when the Government has put forth every legitimate effort to suppress a mob that threatens or attacks alike the safety and security of its own citizens and the foreign residents within its borders, I know of no principle of national obligation, and there certainly is none arising from treaty stipulation, which renders it incumbent on the Government of the United States to make indemnity to the Chinese residents of Denver, who in common with citizens of the United States, at the time residents in that city, suffered losses from the operations of the mob. Whatever remedies may be afforded to the citizens of Colorado or to the citizens of the United States from other States of the Union resident in Colorado for losses resulting from that occurrence, are equally open to the Chinese residents of Denver who may have suffered from the lawlessness of the mob. This is all that the principles of international law and the usages of national comity demand.

Precisely what I have said. I am gratified to know that every statement I have made in regard to international law and the comity of nations has long since been established and proclaimed and enforced by the distinguished Senator from New York while he was Secretary of State.

This correspondence was not concluded under the administration of which the Senator from New York was the Secretary of State. It was pending when that administration went out of power and it was pending when the "plumed knight," the distinguished statesman, the honorable James G. Blaine, of Maine, came in as Secretary of State as successor to the distinguished Secretary from New York. Here is another distinguished citizen of this country, representing the honor, the power, the dignity, and the glory of this great country as its chief executive officer under the President. Let us see what he says:

[Mr. Blaine to Chen Lan Pin.]

DEPARTMENT OF STATE, Washington, March 25, 1881.

* * * * * * *

I note with satisfaction the expressions of appreciation of the disposition of this Government toward that of China, and the subjects of China resident in the United States, which you so frankly avow. I must express my regret, however, that the views so clearly expressed by my predecessor in regard to the question of liability of this Government to make pecuniary indemnity to the Chinese sufferers by the occurrences at Denver, failed to commend themselves to your enlightened judgment. Concurring, as I do, in the conclusions thus reached by Mr. Evarts, and conceiving the principle upon which they rest to be in consonance with public law and the universal practice of nations, I must insist that that principle is the one by which the obligations of this Government in regard to the incident in question are to be measured. After recounting the efforts put forth by the local authorities for the suppression of the riots (efforts that happily proved successful with only the loss of one life, although the mob numbered thousands), my predecessor thus states the rule:

* * * * * * *

You observe with reference to these views, "that it appears to you that treaties, as well as the Constitution, are the supreme law of this land."

He discusses that. Says Mr. Blaine further on:

You will perceive that neither in this article, nor in any other part of the same treaty, is there any provision reciprocal with this with regard to subjects of China resident in the United States, and the reason for this must at once be obvious to your superior intelligence.

That has been the argument of the Senator from Ohio and the Senator from Vermont, the reciprocal obligations of the United States and China; that because we claimed indemnity of China, therefore China has a right to claim indemnity of the United States. We claimed indemnity of China by reason of treaty stipulations. There are no treaty stipulations with the United States in regard to Chinese citizens except to restrict them. There has never been a treaty agreed to that granted privileges to the Chinese that they did not already enjoy before. The treaties have been restrictive while the treaties on the part of China toward the United States have been to admit our citizens to rights never enjoyed before. Before the treaty of 1844 no American citizen could go to China and transact business there. Before that time any Chinaman could come to the United States and travel at free will and pleasure all over the United States. Mr. Blaine further says:

No treaty stipulations are necessary to enable subjects of China to come to this country, take up their residence here, and pursue any lawful business or calling in common with the citizens or subjects of every country in the world who may choose to make their home in this Republic. The subjects of China, in respect to their rights and security of person and property, are placed under the protection of the laws of the United States in manner and measure equal to that extended to native citizens of this country, and that the Chinese residents of Denver at the time of the unfortunate occurrences now in question were in the enjoyment of this common protection of the law, is shown by the report of the Chinese consul, Mr. Bell, to you, a copy of which accompanies your note.

There is the law laid down, and I say that there can be no question in the world of the non-liability of the United States upon this subject.

I wish now to read from Senator EVARTS, on page 5441 of the RECORD of to-day. As Secretary of State of the United States, he repudiated the idea of liability on the part of the United States either by reason of international law, international comity, or treaty stipulations. What does he say in his speech on yesterday? He says:

This was a violence against the Chinese who were here in the peace of our laws, under our Government, under our Constitution, and under the late relations of almost the extreme of comity and concession which had been accorded by the Chinese Government in accommodating to our occasions the treaty of 1880 in disparity from the Burlingame treaty.

What was granted there? It was a restriction upon the Chinese rights in the United States, and an extension of the rights of citizens of the United States in China.

If it was a crime of imbecility and indifference on the part of authorities there, then those who represented the power of this great Government should themselves have been punished and themselves removed from position. And thus in all relations that prevail between nations we stand as the power responsible for the transaction, not in its origin, but for the transaction as it has been treated, or as it has proceeded since it occurred.

The distinguished Senator undertakes to evade the responsibility and the force of his own very clear exposition of international law by saying that our responsibility was not because of the origin of this mob but because of subsequent events. I have stated all the facts connected with the transaction to show that nothing was done by the United States after the occurrence which can be charged as culpable or negligent—not one solitary thing. The Senator from New York said further on yesterday:

I have now to say but a word about the distinction between the relations between this country and the Western powers, and the relations between this and the Western powers and the Oriental, or, as they are generally called, non-Christian nations. Between Great Britain and ourselves there is what we may call an absolute unity in the habits of government and administration of law; not merely that we have the same common law and the same system of trials of fact and of control of judicial matters; but we have the same habits of feeling, and we know exactly now far and how close may be the excesses that are possible in the administration of justice which will occur to the disgrace of its administration in any community for a moment or under extraordinary circumstances. So with the continental nations; we have the same religion, the same race, the same institutions, the same humanity, the same amenities, and we do not hesitate to understand that when our citizens or their subjects or citizens are in the country of another, we submit them and expect them to be submitted to the ordinary fate that belongs to the administration of affairs as governing and protecting the safety and security of the population.

In our dealings with the Oriental or non-Christian nations, including Turkey, we have never been willing to stand upon those footings. We have never been willing that our citizens, when sojourners in those countries, were to be treated as subject to their laws. Extraterritorial protection of our people in providing tribunals and methods of trial and protection have been insisted upon and are governed by our treaties.

Now when it comes to a question between China and the United States, with this transaction present between them for observation and criticism and judgment of these two nations concerning this identical transaction and in the judgment of all the nations of the world, how are we to meet this situation under this responsibility so direct of this Government, except to deal with it upon the same terms that we have insisted upon from those nations? We in advance have said, "We will claim exemption and extraterritorial jurisdiction for our citizens in their rights and in their trials; we have refused that to you;" and now putting it upon a ground of superiority in our laws, in our humanity, in our cultivation of all Christian and all benevolent relations, we ask you to receive from us the cold answer of diplomacy that all people are safe here and the laws protect, and the laws punish, and the laws redress!

I confess profound astonishment at such utterances from the distinguished Senator, a comparison of the Oriental and Western nations, a comparison of the United States with China and Turkey, a comparison of the United States with England, France, and other nations of Europe where our citizens can travel at will and pleasure with perfect impunity and perfect protection and enjoy the same rights, privileges, and immunities enjoyed by native citizens of the country in which they are traveling. But when it comes to China and Turkey he says it is different. Why is it different? He does not give the reason. It is because they exclude all nations from their territorial limits. Not until recently, even if now, have they come within international comity. Up to 1844 the Chinese nation never admitted the citizens of any foreign country to transact business in it, and it was not entitled to the amenities and privileges of international law.

Every right and privilege enjoyed by the citizens of the United States and citizens of European countries in China has been wrested from that empire by force and treaty. It is not so with the United States. We have held this out as the country of the free, the land of the brave, the palladium of the world's liberties and hopes. Every man has been invited to come here and under his own vine and fig tree worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his conscience and pursue the avocations of life as he chose. The Chinamen came here without any treaty rights, simply as citizens of the world. They erected their Joss temples upon Christian soil, and there with impunity they worshiped their wooden idols and gods. They got no permission from the United States to erect their temples of worship. It is not so with citizens of the United States. They could not go to China and build a Christian church and worship the ever-living God as they chose. They could not go to China and build a residence where they chose. They could not go to China and engage in the business they chose.

They can not go there to-day and travel through China and do business there, because every right that is accorded to an American citizen in China is by virtue of treaty, and because when they violate that treaty we make them pay compensation. Then the principle is to be applied to the United States, and we are to be told that the United States is to be responsible because of the reciprocal obligations existing. There is no reciprocity either in the facts or in the treaties—not one particle, Mr. President.

Why, then, is this case here? If there is no obligation according to international law, if there is no obligation by treaty stipulation, if there is no general liability on the part of the United States, why is this case here at all? It has been attempted to make the impression that the President of the United States and the Secretary of State have recommended it. I shall read from the message of the President upon this question. The President distinctly disavows any obligation by international law or treaty stipulations. I shall first read from Secretary Bayard and then from the President. Secretary Bayard also disavows any obligation of international law by treaty stipulations or by reciprocal obligations, but he says on page 71:

Yet I am frank to say that the circumstances of the case now under consideration contain features which I am disposed to believe may induce the President to recommend to the Congress, not as under obligation of treaty or principle of international law, but solely from a sentiment of generosity and pity—to an innocent and unfortunate body of men, subjects of a friendly power, who, being peaceably employed within our jurisdiction, were so shockingly outraged; that in view of the gross and shameful failure of the police authorities at Rock Springs, in Wyoming Territory, to keep the peace, or even to attempt to keep the peace, or to make proper efforts to uphold the law, or punish the criminals, or make compensation for the loss of property pillaged or destroyed, it may reasonably be a subject for the benevolent consideration of Congress whether with the distinct understanding that no precedent is thereby created, or liability for want of proper enforcement of police jurisdiction in the Territories, they will not, ex gratia, grant pecuniary relief to the sufferers in the case now before us to the extent of the value of the property of which they were so outrageously deprived, to the grave discredit of republican institutions.

"Generosity and pity"—

The distinguished Secretary being importuned and reimportuned by the Chinese authorities, just as they importuned and reimportuned Secretary Evarts and Secretary Blaine, said, "I will see if the President will not submit it to the compassion and the generosity and the pity of Congress." The President transmitted the case to Congress and said:

I draw the attention of the Congress to the latter part of the note of the Secretary of State of February 18, 1886, in reply to the Chinese minister's representations, and to invite especial consideration of the cogent reasons by which he reaches the conclusion that, whilst the United States Government is under no obligation, whether by the express terms of its treaties with China or the principles of international law, to indemnify these Chinese subjects for losses caused by such means and under the admitted circumstances, yet that in view of the palpable and discreditable failure of the authorities of Wyoming Territory to bring to justice the guilty parties or to assure to the sufferers an impartial forum in which to seek and obtain compensation for the losses which those subjects have incurred by lack of police protection; and considering further the entire absence of provocation or contribution on the part of the victims, the Executive may be induced to bring the matter to the benevolent consideration of the Congress, in order that that body, in its high discretion, may direct the bounty of the Government in aid of innocent and peaceful strangers whose maltreatment has brought discredit upon the country; with the distinct understanding that such action is in no wise to be held as a precedent, is wholly gratuitous, and is resorted to in a spirit of pure generosity toward those who are otherwise helpless.

In other words, this case is before Congress because the President and the Secretary of State importuned, denied any obligation and submitted it to Congress for its compassionate consideration. The distinguished representative of the Celestial Empire has made an appeal which has won the heart and affection of the distinguished Senator from Ohio, our distinguished presiding officer. In remarks made by him the other day he asked me to read the wondrously strong and touching appeal of that able and distinguished representative of the Chinese people, and he talked about his quoting the Divine command, "Do unto others as you would have others do unto you."

Mr. President, I am willing to apply that principle. I am willing to apply it in this case. If we have American citizens upon Chinese soil and they there meet English citizens under the same rights and privileges of American citizens and those English citizens depredate upon American citizens and destroy their property I would never sanction the United States asking compensation of China. The Senator from New York would not ask it. The Senator from Ohio, even though the tenderness of his heart was touched by the appeal of the Chinese minister, would not ask it. The persuasive eloquence of the Chinese minister would then be turned in a different direction. No American would think of asking compensation of the Chinese Empire for the malicious, vindictive, tortious acts of English citizens residing there under the friendly protection of the Chinese flag upon American citizens residing there likewise under the friendly protection of the Chinese flag.

I am willing to extend to the Chinese in this case everything that international law and international comity, everything that treaty stipulations, everything that honor, everything that justice, that equity, that Christianity and our holy religion will justify; but I can not and will not consent that the Chinese Government shall put its hands into the pockets of the tax-payers of the United States and take out $150,000 and place it in the hands of those Chinamen who went to Rock Springs as slaves, and serfs, as hirelings, knowing that it was an exposed place, knowing that the jurisdiction and authority of the laws of the United States were weak there, and knowing that they were to displace and drive out white laborers who were engaged in the mines, and drive them out of occupation. I shall not consent to pay for the depredations committed upon them by other hirelings of the same company not citizens of the United States; and even if they were citizens of the United States the United States would not be responsible. And, as I said before, there is no principle of international law, there is no principle of treaty stipulation, there is no principle of our Christianity, there is no principle of justice or equity that will require this burden to be imposed upon the people of the United States, and therefore I am opposed to the passage of this bill.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and read the third time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Shall the bill pass?

Mr. COCKRELL. Let us have the yeas and nays on that.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROWN (when Mr. COLQUITT'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM]. I do not know how he would vote if he were present.

Mr. JONES, of Arkansas (when his name was called). I am paired on all questions with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON]. I do not know how he would vote, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. CONGER (when Mr. PALMER'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. PALMER] is paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. VANCE]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER]. I do not know how he would vote.

Mr. MCMILLAN (when Mr. SABIN'S name was called). My colleague [Mr. SABIN] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. KENNA]. If my colleague were here, he would vote "yea."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. SAWYER], but I am informed by his colleague that, if present, he would vote "yea." I will therefore vote "yea."

Mr. VANCE (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. PALMER], but as his colleague has announced that he would vote "yea," I will vote "yea."

Mr. WALTHALL (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. HAWLEY].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. CULLOM. I am paired with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. COLQUITT]. I am not informed how he would vote. If I were at liberty to vote, I should vote "yea."

Mr. GORMAN. I am paired generally with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FRYE], but I am advised by his colleague that he would vote "yea" on the passage of this bill. Therefore I vote "yea."

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON]. I am not advised how he would vote if present. I should vote "nay."

Mr. CHACE. I am paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. GRAY]. If he were present, I should vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 30, nays 10; as follows:

YEAS—30.

Allison,	Fair,	Morrill,	Stanford,

So the bill was passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. ALLISON. I move that the Senate resume the consideration of the appropriation bill which was partially considered this morning.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Iowa.

The motion was agreed to; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 6392) making appropriations for the diplomatic and consular service of the Government for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will be proceeded with.

The Chief Clerk resumed the reading of the bill. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Schedule A, salaries of ministers," in line 48, to increase the appropriation for salaries of "chargés d'affaires ad interim and diplomatic officers abroad" from $15,000 to $20,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "salaries, interpreters to legations," in line 88, to increase the appropriation for salary of "interpreter to the legation and consulate-general in Bangkok, Siam," from $500 to $800.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "contingent expenses, foreign missions," in line 97, after the word "guards," to strike out "and Arabic clerk at the consulate at Tangiers;" so as to make the clause read:

For the purpose of enabling the President to provide, at the public expense, all such stationery, blanks, record and other books, seals, presses, flags, and signs as he shall think necessary for the several legations in the transaction of their business, and also for rent, postage, telegrams, furniture, messenger service, clerk-hire, compensation of cavasses, guards, dragomans, and porters, including compensation of interpreter, guards, and the compensation of dispatch-agents at London, New York, and San Francisco, and for traveling and miscellaneous expenses of legations, and for printing in the Department of State, $105,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, in the appropriations for "miscellaneous expenses of legations," after line 109, to insert:

For rent of legation buildings in Tokio, Japan, for the year ending March 15, 1887, $3,400.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 112, to insert:

For purchase of building and grounds for legation at Seoul, Corea, and repairs upon the same, $5,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 131 to line 135 inclusive, as follows:

To meet the necessary expenses attendant upon the execution of the neutrality act, to be expended under the direction of the President, pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $15,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

And to insert in lieu thereof:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. EVARTS. The Secretary has read the latter clause as a substitute for the former, but it is not so regarded by the committee reporting it. This is really a striking out of this clause providing for maintaining neutrality and substituting no provision for carrying it out. If the Secretary will read the next clause, perhaps that will be evident.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I wish to suggest to the committee that under existing conditions of affairs all around it might be well to leave the clause at the foot of page 6 to stand and to add the clause at the top of page 7, which seems to be proposed to take its place.

Mr. ALLISON. In response to the suggestion made by the Senator from New York, I will say that the committee intended the paragraph as amended to cover both the special provision in respect to the enforcement of the neutrality acts and the additional provision which is found in the bill of last year, giving the Secretary of State a fund to meet unforeseen emergencies. Then we placed the whole of this provision under the requirements of section 291 of the Revised Statutes. If the Committee on Foreign Relations think it better to leave the first paragraph stand and add the other I do not know that I should personally object, though I have no authority from the Committee on Appropriations to yield to the suggestion.

Mr. BECK. My understanding is that the language now used is the language that was thought by the State Department to cover everything.

Mr. EDMUNDS. It will certainly not cover the neutrality act in the sense in which the clause stands at the foot of page 6, and in which it has always stood; and I am bound to say, with the information I have about the state of affairs, that I should be glad to give to the discretion of the President of the United States the $15,000 under the neutrality provision at the foot of page 6, and also give him exactly what the Committee on Appropriations has recommended at the top of page 7. A motion to strike out and insert is not divisible, I believe, but if there is any way of dividing the question——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It may be done by unanimous consent.

Mr. BECK. The Senator will observe that in the law for the current fiscal year there is no provision as to the neutrality act, and we have simply added the words to make it more comprehensive.

Mr. EDMUNDS. But at the foot of page 6 there is a provision for expenses in enforcing the neutrality act which the committee propose to strike out, which I do not think, in view of all the circumstances existing, ought to be done, while I entirely agree that the committee is correct in recommending what is at the top of page 7.

Mr. ALLISON. For myself I am perfectly willing to let the paragraph of the House bill stand as it is, and to add the paragraph presented by the committee.

Mr. EDMUNDS. I ask unanimous consent that that matter may be divided and that we take the question, first, on striking out the paragraph at the foot of page 6.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Vermont asks the unanimous consent of the Senate that the amendment may be divided, so as to take the vote, first, on striking out the clause from line 131 to line 135 inclusive, at the bottom of page 6. If there is no objection, that suggestion will be considered as agreed to. The question then is, first, on the motion to strike out the words at the foot of page 6.

The motion was rejected.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question now is on the insertion of the words in Italics at the top of page 7, as follows:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirements of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. Before the question is put on that I should like to have read section 291 of the Revised Statutes, so that I may know what I am voting on when I am asked to appropriate $50,000.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The section of the Revised Statutes referred to will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

SEC. 291. Whenever any sum of money has been or shall be issued, from the Treasury, for the purposes of intercourse or treaty with foreign nations, in pursuance of any law, the President is authorized to cause the same to be duly settled annually with the proper accounting officers of the Treasury, by causing the same to be accounted for, specifically, if the expenditure may, in his judgment, be made public; and by making or causing the Secretary of State to make a certificate of the amount of such expenditure as he may think it advisable not to specify; and every such certificate shall be deemed a sufficient voucher for the sum therein expressed to have been expended.

Mr. RIDDLEBERGER. I know that this comes from the sanctum sanctorum of the Committee on Appropriations:

To enable the President to meet unforeseen emergencies arising in the diplomatic and consular service, and to extend the commercial and other interests of the United States, to be expended pursuant to the requirement of section 291 of the Revised Statutes, $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary.

Now, sir, I should like to know if there be any reason why these italics should be put into this bill. It is easy to vote away $50,000. Section 291 does not provide in the way that this does. We are enlarging every year, doing these things year by year, seeming not to think of the possibility that it requires taxation to meet this kind of expenditure. Why should we say that an appropriation of $50,000 is made to enable the President to meet unforseen emergencies? We sometimes have what are called deficiency bills, and they hardly hold the Departments or even the Executive in check. I can not vote for this, because I think it is unjust to the tax-payers of this country.

The amendment was agreed to.

The reading of the bill was resumed and continued to the end of the following clause from lines 153 to 161:

Contribution to the maintenance of the international bureau of weights and measures for the year ending June 30, 1887, in conformity with the terms of the convention of May 24, 1875, the same, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to be paid, under the direction of the Secretary of State, to said bureau on its certificate of apportionment, $2,270.

Mr. CONGER. I ask the Senator from Iowa what the object of that appropriation is, "international bureau of weights and measures?"

Mr. ALLISON. There is an international bureau of weights and measures which meets once a year under a convention made in 1875, and each nation under that treaty is under obligation to contribute a portion annually to the expense.

Mr. CONGER. What is the object of that convention?

Mr. ALLISON. The object of it is to regulate weights and measures from time to time.

Mr. CONGER. Where?

Mr. ALLISON. Everywhere; to establish an international system of weights and measures, and to test weights and measures from time to time. It is a treaty obligation.

Mr. CONGER. If I understand it, this is a bureau the main object of which is to introduce into this country the metrical system of weights and measures, and to do away, as far as they can work it along, with the old English measures and the measures of the common people of the United States.

Mr. ALLISON. So far from that being the object, it is a very greatly controverted question now whether the English system of weights and measures is not the best, and I think the weight of authority is rather in favor of our present system. The object is to readjust the measures from time to time and make them in harmony, whether the metrical system shall be adopted by the nations or the system in vogue in this country now.

Mr. CONGER. The result of it is to pay out the money of the people of the United States, so far as I understand it, to make the United States a party to the bureau or convention or congress represented from the different nations in which the French metric system has a preponderance of representatives, and to aid that insidious, persistent, and attacking force in the United States which enters almost every bill where there is an opportunity and provides for unknown weights and unknown measures by name as the measures and the weights of the people of the United States. It has crept in in one form and another until running through our bills and our laws now, inadvertently and without much thought on the part of legislators I apprehend, but not without having caused some considerable alarm to people who desire the old weights, the old measures, the old inch, the foot, and the rod, and the rood, and all the forms which our ancestors have been accustomed to and which have become a part of the common language of the country, are provisions for changing over to grammes and meters and kilometers and all that innumerable system of outlandish and Frenchified and heathenish names which a certain body of people in the United States have been attempting from the time when John Quincy Adams made his celebrated report upon the propriety of preserving to an English-speaking people, as far as might be, in our laws the weights and the measures and the names of those weights and measures with which our people had been familiar in the Old World for a thousand years and in this country since the establishment of society here.

In one form or another there are continually efforts made by those who are insidiously attempting to ingraft upon our language and upon our laws some of these Frenchified names and notions with which our people, thank God, are as yet unfamiliar; and I venture to say that there are not five Senators here, with all their diversified acquirements and knowledge both of language and of measures, who can understand and explain without time to refer to the tables and to the dictionaries the meaning of words which are now in our laws. Somebody may know what a gramme is. [Laughter.] I see with what avidity some of my friends seize upon the word of corresponding sound which has reference more to the throat than to the measure. [Laughter.]

In bills which have been introduced during this session in the other House and which have received attention here there is that sly, insidious attempt to ingraft into our laws these foreign terms, foreign to our language, foreign to our knowledge, foreign to the customs and habits of thought of our people. There have been times when there has crept into the laws the authority of this Government to different Departments of it to use entire the names of the metric weights and measures. I believe to-day a part of the business of this Government is carried on by the use of terms in weights and measures which not one out of nine hundred and ninety-nine of the people of the United States understand when they read the laws or read the accounts. Our medicines, our drugs are bought, mixed, and compounded by English-speaking Americans, and the accounts are made out and rendered in a language which without particular study no Senator would understand unless by the aid of an interpreter.

Our laws have been thus doctored with through the assistance of a society instituted in this country for the purpose of fastening upon our people the metrical system of France, a system adopted in the days of the revolution, a system adopted when they made ten days a week and the Goddess of Reason the presiding genius over the nation in place of all religion and in place of all respect for the commonly received doctrines of our fathers. These terms have from time to time, against the reports of the best men, the best statesmen, the most efficient accountants, been ingrafted into the laws of the United States so as to permit at least a substitution for English weights and measures of the metrical system or the system of some other people.

In our laws to-day, so far have our lawmakers forgotten the necessity and propriety of adhering to our own methods of denomination of weights, of measures, of coins, of money, that our consuls abroad and our ministers in foreign countries are required not to send invoices of amounts of value, or amounts of weight, or amounts of measure in the language of the people of the United States to our collectors, our appraisers, and our naval officers, to those who have to look over these invoices and these accounts, but our law has been so tortured and mangled as to compel our own officers in foreign countries sending the lists and the values and the amounts as to require them to send them in the language of the country from which the goods are sent. It permits—and I have a feeling of thankfulness for some kind friend of American institutions and the American language who secured this much—it permits in brackets or in parentheses (which may be left out without obscuring the sense) the corresponding value of weight or measure in our own language.

The utter absurdity of such a provision of law as that would be apparent to any one who looked at the invoices and the values coming to us from Japan and China and Corea and Madagascar, from the Hovans in the islands, from the Fiji land, from all over this great, round globe, a law that would compel information intended for our officers at the ports of entry to come to us in a foreign language. That is in the statutes; that is in the law. There has gradually crept in the compulsory use of these foreign terms of weights and measures and money denominations in our own dealings.

It is not any new question that has sprung up. The subject was referred years ago, more than half a century ago, to the most enlightened and intelligent and educated statesmen of the time, to a committee to consider; and making the report for that committee, John Quincy Adams reported to the Congress that the use of these foreign terms was not only distasteful to an English-speaking people, but that it would tend and did tend to create confusion and trouble in the minds of all who spoke only the English language in trying to learn to understand the hundreds of strange terms which would thus be incorporated into our literature and into our law.

I can not see exactly what the object of this bureau is, for I plead ignorance in regard to it; but I do say its existence for any useful purpose to the people of the United States is problematical, and I do say that the friends of that bureau, as I understand, have been with the preponderance of the nations favoring the metric system who compose this convention, and the course of the representatives there has been directly in opposition to the tastes, the habits, the interests, the convenience of the American people; and I think it is time to stop such an appropriation, treaty or no treaty. I think it is time to stop giving any force to an effort which is being made, not by our own people in the first instance, to ingraft upon our customs and habits of thought and literature and law a system of weights and measures unknown to our people, distasteful to them, which it would take years and years of anxious, assiduous study by all the good people throughout this country to teach themselves by schooling and by tuition to understand.

I can find in the statutes of the United States words expressing the idea of weights and measures, which I venture to say there are not ten Senators in this body who would understand without referring to a table of weights and measures and without knowing the language from whence it came and without knowing the fractional equivalants in our own terms. This attempt has been going on for fifty years. It has never met with a great deal of success. Somebody in favor of that system has worked it up insidiously, getting into our laws for the last twenty-five years here and there some little use of such phrases. Somebody at some time has had influence enough with those who ought to have stood by the language and the institutions and the weights and the measures of the English-speaking people of America and not have carelessly permitted to be incorporated into our laws and permitted to be used in public transactions of the Government and in the mode of keeping accounts. These foreign terms are used to-day—why, I do not know—as if the plain old Anglo-Saxon was not good enough for our officials. The metric system is used, as I understand, in the medical accounts of the Navy and of the Army to-day. How are the people to read these reports and read these accounts and read these prescriptions? Is it to secrete from them a knowledge of what these agents of theirs are doing? What is the object of all this rigmarole and forgetting the staunch, honest, plain old Anglo-Saxon language in our accounts with measures and with weights and with denominations as good as the world has ever seen, and convenient because we all understand them?

I object to this appropriation. I want an opportunity, at least for myself, to vote against it, because, although the Senator reporting this bill says it is a treaty arrangement, although he says that of late there is beginning to be a kind of tendency which may possibly result in the use of our own language, and in the use of our own names of weights and measures, and of the weights and measures themselves, I do not want to admit or to encourage even the possibility of any other result being obtained.

One can hardly imagine the confusion, the utter confusion to the American people if by the result of that Congress or that bureau it should be decided to recommend the metrical system or any other system or a combination of systems to the American people, and Congress should adopt that report and incorporate it into the law, and by one sweep of legislation compel the sixty million people of the United States to read all these things in an unknown tongue and to spend years in acquiring the knowledge of the names of the every-day transactions of life. If that is the object, as I understand it to be, of this bureau, or if it had that in the beginning for its object, to come to some system by which English speaking people can agree to the names and peculiarities of the weights and measures of the Latin nations or of any other nations, or if it means in any way to invade the domain of the old Anglo Saxon nomenclature, then I oppose it, and then I venture to say there is not a Senator here voting in the face of his constituents for the American people but what will oppose such a measure as that.

If I am mistaken in the object of this, if I am mistaken in the tendency of it, if I am mistaken in the danger that there may be that it will further the introduction of this system and make it more than a mere permission in our laws where it already stands permitted to the different Departments of the Government and where it is already required that our consuls abroad and our officials abroad shall, in certifying to the invoices and to the values and to the weights and to the measures of goods that come here, report them in the denominations and currency and weights and measures of whatever country they come from, permitting them to inclose in brackets, for the information of the uneducated, what would be the equivalent in our own language, making that secondary, then I think every Senator should vote against anything that would lead to or encourage such a measure.

The chairman of the Committee on Appropriations is an Anglo-Saxon to some extent I believe—a mixture of that at least—speaking that language, claiming no particular affiliation with the unknown languages or knowledge of the unknown languages of all the various nations and tribes and peoples of the world. Unless he can here show that this has no such object, and has not had, I want to vote against this clause.

My learned friend from New York [Mr. EVARTS], brimming over with knowledge of all languages and of all tongues and endowed with the spirit of prophecy, sitting before me here, who, if he can not speak the unknown tongues, can interpret them; and if he can not prophesy can at least foretell—he was in position when these things were working around in some kind of a migratory way to overthrow the good old Anglo-Saxon language and custom of weights and measures of the country, and he ought to know what the object is, for he perhaps inaugurated it, perhaps he has furthered it. I feel a delicacy in asking him to explain anything unworthy of the American people or of our State Department in inaugurating or furthering such an object, but how the Senator from the far-off State of Iowa, a State that did not even go to the English language for its name, and of all things did not go to France for its name, but took a name aboriginal, indigenous to the country—how he, educated at the same alma mater where I got the little knowledge I acquired in my early days, should permit this kind of thing to creep in surprises me. And how the other representative of that committee, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BECK], although, as he has remarked sometimes, not native born, is yet as staunch an American as lives in the land, and comes here with all his old Scotch prejudices and prepossessions for the language of his country, with no special partiality for the flummeries and attachments of the Italians and the Spanish and the French—how he should permit this thing to come in year after year in this appropriation bill I can not understand.

Sir, there are some things in the mental peculiarities of my colleagues on this floor that permit them to pass over matters which are of great import, which are of vast importance to this English-speaking nation, to this American nation and the American race and the American language; and they pass here year after year without calling the attention of their fellows to them, and make appropriation after appropriation to destroy our language and destroy its use and to modify it and to change it. Why, sir, they can not imagine, they do not seem to understand if they have thought of it at all, how it is possible for them to permit anything of that kind when from day to day they rise in their places and talk of the glory of the American race, the new race founded here upon a hemisphere which Providence itself had preserved from the earliest days of the settlement of the world by man for the especial purpose of having (with the exception of a few Indians which the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. DAWES] is especially appointed to take care of as they pass away from the vision of mankind and disappear from their residence upon the earth) here the grandest race ever known in human history.

How men who extol and glorify the American race as a race founded upon a new world, the aggregate of the best of all races, at the head of it the Anglo-Saxon, the old Teutonic, the Scotch, the Irish, English, gathered in here the best elements of all the best people, with the best language, with the best measures, with the best weights, with the best nomenclature—how they can permit and could have permitted that kind of thing to creep into the laws that I have alluded to I can not understand. I mean these old Senators, who were here long before I dreamed of ever having the honor of joining the illustrious throng. And is it left to me from the wilds of Michigan to come here, uneducated, unsophisticated, to call the attention of these life-long statesmen to the inconsistencies which they have permitted to creep into our laws and to the appropriations of money they have made to further these inconsistencies and give strength and vitality to those who are sapping the institutions and the language of our country?

Sir, the people of the United States expect a direct reply from the Senator from Iowa who has permitted these things in this law, but has permitted in other appropriation acts these names of unknown things to creep in, and I assure him in their name that a straightforward, direct, honest reply will be received by the people of the United States with a gratification which arises very seldom in the discharge by the Senator of his duty on this floor. And, sir, if I might not be considered personal, I would venture to say that there will be an anxiety among a great many people of the United States when they read this discussion to hear what the learned and distinguished and the polyglot statesman from New York has to say about this measure, inaugurated, if I remember aright, while he was at the head of the State Department, while he controlled with his magnificent intellect the destinies of the United States in its foreign relations; and if by good fortune it shall be made to appear that the system was not inaugurated under his administration, how happy it will make his numerous friends throughout the country to have a prompt and explicit denial of any agency in this matter.

And sir, I might, except that I am liable to be called to order for personal allusions, extend that invitation to the distinguished gentleman who presides over this distinguished body at this moment, and ask him to explain whether through the recommendations of the Department over which he presided so long and so well there crept into the system of customs laws and duties the very provision to which I have alluded which requires reports from our own officers abroad to be made in foreign and unknown tongues, whether he unfortunately participated in and has a responsibility in regard to those invasions of our law? I do not ask a reply from the Chair, but there are many Senators who would occupy that seat for a few moments until the Senator from Ohio himself should have an opportunity to repudiate any connection with or any control over such matters.

Turning from the distinguished gentlemen to whom I have alluded, I say to my fellow-Senators upon this floor—and I may extend the list before I close my remarks of those to whom I would make personal appeals—that in the dim, distant future which spreads itself before the eye of many an ambitious man (and I apply that as well to the Senator from Iowa as to others) there is a cloud and a veil which must be removed from between a candidate for the Presidency and the people of the United States, or he had better retire from the struggle beforehand and without a nomination. I am not an alarmist. [Laughter.] I do not desire to threaten or to awake fear and excitement in the breast of ambitious friends of mine on this side or on the other side of the Chamber, for in the inscrutable decrees and manifestations and designs of Providence I have lived long enough to know that when I address my fellow-Senators upon the subject to which I have alluded and the probabilities of the future, on the vista down which they look, seeing through the openings, through the shadows, and through the obscurities, and through the gloom, and through the brightness, and through the hope, there are so many men who have vistas and who look down to a particular abode known in our country as the White House that I never know, when I am talking upon such a subject as that, whether I appeal to the united and universal feelings of my colleagues or only to three or four or five or ten of that glorious number. [Laughter.]

But with no such thoughts or aspirations for myself, with the kindness and benevolence and gentleness of nature which is attributed to me by all my fellows [laughter], I feel that perhaps on this occasion I should depart from the line of my duty if I did not throw out to all this generous and kindly warning on the subject of introducing into the body-politic and language and laws of the American people the flummeries and the frivolities and the idealities and the theories which have distinguished another bright, glorious, luminous people, but who are captivated and led away by new notions and new designs which hitherto have not found a footing and foothold and home in the honest, sturdy, self-reliant Anglo-Saxon nature or language or laws.

Mr. ALLISON rose.

Mr. CONGER. I have not got through.

Mr. ALLISON. I beg pardon.

Mr. CONGER. If my word of warning shall have any good effect—and I was wondering which of the gentlemen to whom I have been permitted so kindly personally to refer would arise first to the denial of sympathy with these measures; the denial has not come from the place where I expected it would; and I think we may gauge somewhat the hopes and expectations of our fellows by the zeal with which they rush to explain themselves on this question. The Senator from Iowa rises hastily and I will not delay him long.

Mr. EVARTS rose.

Mr. CONGER. The Senator from New York has risen, and he will have his opportunity; but I will not by yielding the floor to one express a political preference between gentlemen whom I admire alike [laughter], except that there is a little warmer personal friendly feeling for the Senator from Iowa from a long intercourse with him in the other House, which might perhaps make me a little kinder to him, and as he rose first, although he did not get the floor, I should be unwilling even to let the Senator from New York take advantage of my courtesy to shut out the Senator from Iowa who is to be the pride of this great Republic in the future.

Mr. EVARTS. Will the Senator yield for a moment to a few remarks on my part?

Mr. CONGER. I am almost through, and then I will yield the floor. It might be taking too much advantage of the presiding officer to yield to anybody until he can call somebody to the chair and have a chance of rising himself on this interesting occasion. [Laughter.]

Now, Mr. President, I have said but little on this question. I did not propose to say more than a word or two, and I will confine myself to that purpose. I merely wished to throw out a word of warning to my colleagues here who hope to have particular relations in future to the American people, as well as to the Senators at large in whose breasts there may spring up noble aspirations for the future, unknown to their fellows as yet, not to vote this money to further a cause repugnant to the American people which if avowed—and I will venture the Senator from Iowa will deny that it has any such relation to the subject-matter I have discussed—which if avowed as a means of introducing to all the sixty million people of the United States these new weights and new measures and new nomenclature would condemn utterly beyond recovery all the dear delightful hopes and aspirations which may grow and swell in the breast of any citizen of these United States toward that high political preferment which may honestly and properly be the object of any Senator here.

Mr. ALLISON. Mr. President, this appropriation is made in pursuance of a treaty agreed to by nearly all the civilized nations of the world in May, 1875, which established an international bureau of weights and measures. The objects of that bureau are fully set forth in the sixth article of the treaty. I will not take the time of the Senate to read the objects of this international bureau unless some Senator desires it. I will state, however, that none of the objects suggested by the Senator from Michigan are included in this treaty. This international bureau has no possible power to suggest any system of weights and measures for any country. Its object is the verification of existing weights and measures, whether those measures be yard-sticks or meters, or whatever they are.

We have since 1875, as this treaty required us to do, made an annual appropriation for our portion of the expense; and I do not think it is necessary to go into any further explanation of the subject.

Mr. EVARTS. Mr. President, there is undoubtedly an inconvenience in speaking on known subjects in unknown terms, but there is also an inconvenience in speaking in known terms on unknown subjects; and it is I think in this view that we must criticise the observations of the learned, distinguished, and accomplished Senator from Michigan.

The object of this assent, establishing the bureau, given by the principal powers having relations with one another, is to provide, among other things and principally, for a verification of the measures and weights of the articles constituting the interchange of commerce, and it is between nations who speak different tongues and have different weights and measures.

We have a relation with all the powers who have joined in this convention. They understand their own tongues and their own weights and their own measures, and the Senator from Michigan holds it not only a birthright of every nation to foster that knowledge, but it is a clear duty never to suffer identity of measure and of weight and of language to be invaded. If, then, all of these nations thus interchanging commodities, and with tariffs and prices in commerce all of which are to be made between buyer and seller a common medium for their interchange and their payments somehow or other, there must be an establishment by which either each single nation shall furnish the standards to guide its custom-house and its merchant, or there must be a common agreement established between all these commercial nations.

Now, these nations, some twelve or fourteen in number, have established a bureau at Paris that shall have the standard or prototype as it is called of these weights and measures, and with which and thus by common standard to be communicated to each nation, and each is to know what the particular language conveys in the meaning of weight and measure, and in the interchange of commodities needs to be verified for the purposes of the custom-house and for the purposes of commerce. In that view this arrangement has been made.

Incidentally, the Senator from Michigan introduces what he regards as really the culmination of absurdity, that we should provide in our laws that every trading community having intercourse through our custom-house shall express in the invoices the weights and measures and the language of its own country. Why is that? Because each exporter understands his own language, knows his own weights, and knows his own measures; and if he is not allowed to hide himself under a plea of ignorance of the language that he uses in his invoice, we can verify the accuracy of his statements, and we can find out whether he has undervalued the duties and whether he has done it with fraudulent purpose. How readily if our regulations would permit it, how gladly would foreign exporters be allowed to convert their weights and measures into our weights and measures and into our language their statements, so that when they were brought up by the custom-house officers and the verifications showed an undervaluation they could protect themselves by saying that they had been misled by a misunderstanding of weights and measures and language.

Therefore instead of its being an absurdity in the requirements in the invoices to insist that each merchant should make himself responsible for his own weights, his own measures, and his own language, it is a necessary provision to protect us against undervaluations. We could not get along at all without it. That is the object of what the learned Senator regards as the absurdity, and the most absurd of all.

Now, this convention, which seems to have been ratified by exchange of ratifications in 1878 and was then made public, will last for twelve years, and then it may be renounced by any one of these powers by a year's notice. I am not aware, certainly I was not aware during the time that these payments were made year by year, I had no evidence that there was any extravagance in the expenses or that the permanence or usefulness of the contrivance was questioned. But there is an easy way out of it if it is held either to be at variance with our love of our mother tongue or with our own customs in weights and measures; and that is by an announcement that at the termination of the twelve years, which we can make in 1888, we take the proper measures through the announcement of this Government that we retire from it. In the mean time it seems proper that we should appropriate our share of the expense of this international arrangement intended for the equal benefit of all the nations and quite as much for ours.

Mr. CONGER. Mr. President, I will read from this convention to show what part the United States will have in it.

I read the names:

Done at Paris, May 20, 1875—

I read the names of the representatives:

[L. S.] E. B. WASHBURNE.
[L. S.] APPONYI.
[L. S.] BERGENS.
[L. S.] VISCOUNT DE ITAJUBA.
[L. S.] M. BALCARCE.
[L. S.] MOLTKE-HOITFELDT—

If I fail in the pronunciation of any of these words, it is from a little imperfect knowledge of the language of the main body of the representatives in the convention—

[L. S.] FRAN'SE DE RIVERO.
JOSÉ DE SILVA MENDES [SEAL].
[L. S.] O'KONNEFF,
For BARON ADELSWÄRD (prevented).
[L. S.] H. AKERMAN.
[L. S.] KERN.
[L. S.] E. ACOSTA.

Nineteen or twenty—I have not verified the exact number—nineteen or twenty agreed to the league establishing this bureau, mostly ministers of the countries which they represented. These are names of foreigners, Germans, Italians, Spaniards, and some unknown names here. I was pained by the unkind hit of the Senator from New York, brought up in the metropolis of the world's greatness, with Columbia College in sight, and the University of New York standing but a little way off, with summer visits and winter visits to the collegiate institutions of New England, surrounded by diplomats from all the known parts of the world, with every opportunity which could be granted to this great man to learn all languages, to be informed upon all subjects; and in reply to a plain, straightforward, Anglo-Saxon appeal that I made, he says "prove to me that an unknown tongue arises from ignorance." The Lord knows that I have regretted with sorrow and with tears that condition of ignorance of myself all through a painful life; but, oh, if I had had the advantages that the Senator from New York has had it would not become me to say how I might have availed myself of those precious privileges. [Laughter.]

Now I have read the names of this body to which we are to send here a contribution of—how many thousand is it, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. ALLISON. Over $2,000.

Mr. CONGER. Two thousand two hundred and seventy dollars, I believe, we are to send to mingle with these people of unknown languages and unknown countries. We are to send to join them, at an expense of $2,270, somebody who does not know their language nor their measures nor their weights. But I can not dwell upon such an unimportant matter as that.

Let me call the attention of Senators to a matter which the Senator from Iowa unfortunately for himself—I say it in view of the dimness which comes over some prospects in the future—failed to mention. I find article 7 provides this, as to what this bureau shall do:

It shall be its duty to discuss and initiate measures necessary for the dissemination and improvement of the metrical system.

Why could not the Senator say so? I wish the Senator had told us this. I will read it again:

It shall be its duty to discuss—

That is the duty of this bureau—

Discuss and initiate measures necessary for the dissemination and improvement of the metrical system—

I asked if it had any relation to that. The Senator unfortunately said "no"— and to pass upon such new fundamental metrological determinations as may have been made during the time when it was not in session. It shall receive the report of the international committee concerning the work that has been accomplished, and shall replace one-half of the international committee by secret ballot.

The voting in the general conference shall be by states; each state shall be entitled to one vote.

We send our man among the nineteen or twenty of these men, all belonging to the Latin nations, all in favor of the metrical system—we send our man there, whosoever he may be, the illustrious Washburne, or whoever, with his one vote, by a secret vote, to represent us in that system of Latin nations.

I find another little matter here about the establishment of this commission, and its objects, &c.

37. The international commission desires to notify to the several governments interested the great utility of founding an international bureau of weights and measures, upon the following bases:

* * * * * * *

4. The establishment shall be subordinate to the international metric commission, and be placed under the supervision of the permanent committee, who shall appoint the director.

I am trying to go through this, but all over this document I have before me there are phrases and paragraphs showing the object, but I read this resolution:

Resolved, That this society has received with gratification the intelligence of the ratification of a convention between the leading powers of the civilized world establishing an international bureau of weights and measures, for the purpose of perpetuating forever without change the basic units of the metric system of weights and measures, and the distribution of authenticated copies of the prototype standards of that system, as well as for the exact comparison of standards of all descriptions and the determination of their relations to those of the metric system.

This is brimful, bursting out all over with the efforts that are being made by the bureau and by friends of the metrical system to disseminate it, and by secret votes and otherwise give it control, and to vote each by states, each republic or government having one vote, and in all these ways to which I have alluded to disseminate and extend the international metric system. So, sir, what I feared from the reading of that bill is verified and more than verified by the treaty and the history of the institution. I ask for a vote. I move to strike out that paragraph.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion is not now in order, except by unanimous consent.

Mr. CONGER. The bill was being read by paragraphs.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the question will be put now, but according to the order of the Senate the bill was to be read through and the amendments of the Committee on Appropriations to be first acted on.

Mr. ALLISON. If the Senator from Michigan desires a vote on this particular clause or paragraph at this time I will not interpose objection; but I give notice that hereafter I will object to introducing amendments until the committee amendments are disposed of.

Mr. CONGER. I should like a vote by yeas and nays, if the Senate is willing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If there be no objection the question will be put on the motion of the Senator from Michigan to strike out the clause referred to.

Mr. CONGER. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered; and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOAR (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. HARRIS]. He asked me to pair with him on all questions in regard to which I thought he and I should be likely to differ. I do not think we should be likely to differ on this question, and therefore I will vote.

Mr. KENNA (when his name was called). I am paired with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN]. My colleague [Mr. CAMDEN] is paired with the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. PLATT].

Mr. WALTHALL (when Mr. RANSOM'S name was called). The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. RANSOM] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. MILLER].

The roll-call was concluded.

Mr. BERRY. My colleague [Mr. JONES, of Arkansas] is paired with the Senator from Indiana [Mr. HARRISON].

Mr. BLACKBURN. I am paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. MANDERSON].

Mr. SAULSBURY. I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. GRAY] is paired with the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. CHACE].

Mr. BROWN. My colleague [Mr. COLQUITT] is paired with the Senator from Illinois [Mr. CULLOM] on all political questions. I do not consider this a political question, however, and as I believe my colleague would vote if here as the Senator from Illinois would, I consent that the Senator from Illinois may vote without considering the pair.

Mr. KENNA. I understand that the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. SABIN], with whom I am paired, would vote "nay" if he were here, and therefore I vote "nay."

The result was announced—yea 1, nays 42; as follows:

YEA—1.

Conger.

NAYS—42.

Aldrich,	Cullom,	Ingalls,	Saulsbury,
Allison,	Dawes,	Jones of Nevada,	Sherman,
Beck,	Edmunds,	Kenna,	Stanford,
Berry,	Eustis,	McMillan,	Teller,
Blair,	Evarts,	Mahone,	Vest,
Bowen,	Fair,	Maxey,	Walthall,
Brown,	George,	Mitchell of Oreg.,	Whitthorne,
Call,	Hale,	Morrill,	Wilson of Iowa,
Chace,	Hawley,	Payne,	Wilson of Md.
Cockrell,	Hearst,	Plumb,
Coke,	Hoar,	Pugh,

ABSENT—33.

Blackburn,	Gray,	Miller,	Sawyer,
Butler,	Hampton,	Mitchell of Pa.,	Sewell,
Camden,	Harris,	Morgan,	Spooner,
Cameron,	Harrison,	Palmer,	Vance,
Colquitt,	Jones of Arkansas,	Pike,	Van Wyck,
Dolph,	Jones of Florida,	Platt,	Voorhees.
Frye,	Logan,	Ransom,
Gibson,	McPherson,	Riddleberger,
Gorman,	Manderson,	Sabin,

So the motion to strike out was not agreed to.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The reading of the bill will proceed.

The reading of the bill was resumed. The next amendment of the Committee on Appropriations was, under the head of "Schedule B, salaries, consuls-general," in line 175, to increase the appropriation for salary of "consul-general at Halifax" from $3,000 to $3,500.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, after line 182, to insert:

For salaries of consuls, vice-consuls, and commercial agents, $333,500, namely.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was to strike out from line 188 to 191, inclusive, as follows:

Consuls at Foo-Chow, Hankow, Canton, Amoy, Tien-Tsin, and Chin-Kiang, China, at $3,500 each, $21,000.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

CLASS II.—At $3,500 per annum:

China:

Foo-Chow; Hankow; Canton; Amoy; Tien-Tsin; Chin-Kiang.

Mr. BECK. I rise for the purpose of suggesting that we treat as one amendment all that portion of the bill from line 188 down to line 524, as it is simply making the text correspond to existing law.

Mr. ALLISON. I think we can get along rapidly in that way, but I do not think it is possible to finish this bill to-night; and if it be agreeable to Senators I will now move that the Senate adjourn.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Iowa moves that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 30 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, June 5, 1886, at 12 o'clock m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, June 4, 1886.

The House met at 11 o'clock a. m. Prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. W. H. MILBURN, D. D.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

STEAM OYSTER-BOAT J. P. THOMAS.

The SPEAKER laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting correspondence and recommending an item in the defficiency bill refunding to Thomas Thomas, master of the steam oyster-boat J. P. Thomas, the remitted portion of a fine; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

ARMAMENT OF FORTIFICATIONS.

The SPEAKER also laid before the House a letter from the acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a communication from the Secretary of War recommending that $50,000 of the amount appropriated by act of March 3, 1886, for armament of fortifications for 1884, be reappropriated and made available for construction of guns; which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations, and ordered to be printed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. MAYBURY, until Monday, on account of important business.

To Mr. BAYNE, for to-day and to-morrow, on account of important business.

To Mr. MURPHY, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, for ten days, on account of important business.

To Mr. HEISTAND, for the remainder of this week.

To Mr. DAVIDSON, of Florida, indefinitely, on account of the sickness of a member of his family.

To Mr. SADLER, indefinitely, on account of sickness.

To Mr. MILLARD, for ten days, on account of important business.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

Mr. NEECE, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found duly enrolled bills of the following titles; when the Speaker signed the same, namely:

A bill (S. 226) granting a pension to Margaret D. Marchand;

A bill (S. 183) for the relief of Thomas S. Hopkins, late of Company C, Sixteenth Maine Volunteers;

A bill (S. 973) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Sarah P. McKean, of Marion, Lynn County, Iowa;

A bill (S. 1584) for the relief of Cornelia R. Schenck;

A bill (S. 2223) granting a pension to Elizabeth S. De Krafft; and

A bill (S. 200) to authorize the purchase of the Aqueduct Bridge, or the construction of a bridge across the Potomac River at or near Georgetown, D. C.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS, ARKANSAS.

Mr. EZRA. B. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I desire to submit a report from the Committee on the Judiciary. I ask unanimous consent to concur in the Senate amendment to the bill (H. R. 5910) to detach the counties of Howard, Little River, and Sevier from the western and add them to the eastern district of Arkansas.

The SPEAKER. The Senate amendment will be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

After line 17, insert the following section:

"SEC. 3. All crimes and offenses hereafter committed within said western district shall be prosecuted, tried, and determined in the same manner and with the same effect as if this act had not been passed."

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR. The committee recommend concurrence in the Senate amendment.

The amendment was concurred in.

Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR moved to reconsider the vote by which the amendment of the Senate was concurred in; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

JOHN J. COUGHLIN.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to discharge the Committee of the Whole House on the Private Calendar from the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 8087) for the relief of John J. Coughlin and put the same upon its passage.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, directed to pay John J. Coughlin the sum of $631.13, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, said sum being difference of pay from laborer, at $1.25 per day, to skilled laborer at $4 per day, for two hundred and twenty-nine and one-half days, in arranging, cataloguing, and classifying bound volumes of newspapers in the Library of Congress.

Mr. RANDALL. Let the report be read.

Mr. LORE. I think I can make a brief statement which will obviate the necessity of reading the report.

Mr. RANDALL. Reserving the right to object, I shall be glad to hear the gentleman.

Mr. LORE. Mr. Speaker, John J. Coughlin was employed by the architect of this building at a salary of $1.25 per day, and was assigned to duty under the Librarian of Congress and employed in a work requiring very intelligent labor and skill in cataloguing and arranging newspaper-files and documents published in the several States and Territories of the United States, and in England, France, Spain, Portugal, Belgium, Switzerland, Cuba, Russia, China, and other countries—a collection of rare historic value. He was employed in arranging, preparing, and distributing them for proper reference. There were a number of persons engaged in the same business, all of whom were paid, except this man, at the rate of $4 a day. It required much skill in this arrangement, and knowledge of language, and care, which the committee think, in view of the services rendered, ought to be paid for. This man is now in the employ of the House, and is the only one of the whole number employed who was not paid.

This only adds $2.75 a day for the time that he was employed in this service to his ordinary compensation, and the aggregate amount covered by the bill is $631.33 for nearly a year's work. I repeat, it required great skill, considerable knowledge of languages, and carefulness in arranging the works.

I have here a letter from the Librarian of Congress showing the value of this service; and I wish to add that this is a unanimous report from the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, and ordered to be engrossed for a third reading; and being engrossed, was accordingly read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LORE moved to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. BOUTELLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to introduce a bill for reference.

Mr. BEACH. I shall object; it will keep until Monday.

APPROPRIATION TO JEFFERSONVILLE (IND.) LEVEE.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I call up now for present consideration the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service in relation to certain charges against employés of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. I wish, in view of the fact that the Committee on Appropriations is desirous of proceeding with the legislative bill, to inquire of the gentleman if he will be able to indicate how much time will probably be occupied with the consideration of the report to which he refers?

Mr. COX. I do not know myself, but I should not think that a very great deal of time will be required.

Mr. RANDALL. Will it take an hour, two hours, or three hours?

Mr. COX. I think two hours will answer very well.

Mr. HOLMAN. As soon as this subject is disposed of I will ask the consent of the House to take up the legislative appropriation bill, as it is important that bill should be disposed of at the earliest possible date, that it may become a law before the 1st July.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Luthur F. Warder, first assistant doorkeeper of the House, is charged with very grave offenses. The Committee on Civil Service Reform have unanimously reported that he is guilty of these charges. He himself claims that he is not guilty. His friends are confident that he is not guilty. I earnestly ask in his behalf that this session may not be closed without his having a hearing; and I ask that that hearing may be accorded now.

Mr. COX. I fully concur in the gentleman's suggestion.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the resolution reported by the Select Committee on the Civil Service Reform.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That L. F. Warder be dismissed from the service of this House.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I did not understand the gentleman to say when he proposes to call the previous question on this resolution.

Mr. COX. I should think two hours would be sufficient for debate.

Mr. GIBSON, of West Virginia. I submit when the character of a man, however humble, whether an employé of this House or not, is involved, the matter should not be driven through this House. He should at least have sufficient time to defend himself. That is given to any man that is charged with the smallest offense in a court. I hope the gentleman will not undertake to rush this case through.

Mr. COX. We have no disposition to do that.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. I think we ought to have the report in this case read.

The SPEAKER. The reading of the report would be in the nature of debate. Any gentleman who gets the floor can have the report read as occupying a portion of his time.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. The gentleman from North Carolina yields to me for a moment to offer the substitute which I send to the desk for the resolution reported by the committee.

The Clerk read the proposed substitute, as follows:

That the evidence in this case does not sustain the charges.

Resolved, That it is improper for any officer or employé of this House to seek to influence legislation either directly or indirectly, and that the action of Luther F. Warder (as the agent of the city of Jeffersonville, Ind., at a time when said Warder was an employé of this House), in procuring the services of an attorney for the purpose of influencing legislation, is disapproved by the House.

Mr. COX. I ask that the report be read.

The report was read, as follows:

The Select Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to whom was referred the resolution directing an inquiry into the charges against certain officers of the House of Representatives, in connection with the appropriation of $50,000 by the Forty-eighth Congress to what is known as the Jeffersonville (Ind.) levee, beg leave to report as follows:

That your committee met on the 2d day of April, 1886, and proceeded to discharge the duties imposed upon them by the House by its resolution adopted on the 16th of March last, which reads as follows:

"Whereas there is pending in the Forty-eighth Congress a bill containing, among other matters, an appropriation of $50,000 for a certain improvement of the Ohio River at or near Jeffersonville, Ind., known as the Jeffersonville levee appropriation; and

"Whereas it is charged by a reputable citizen of Indiana that during the pendency of said measure a person or persons, then officers of the House of Representatives, exacted, collected, and accepted from a person or persons interested in the success of the said appropriation a large sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, or some committee thereof, or Members or Senators in their official action thereon; and

"Whereas it is also charged that the person or persons so exacting, collecting, and accepting said sum of money for the purpose aforesaid are officers and employés of this House: Therefore,

"Be it resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the truth of said charges and report the facts to this House; and to enable the said committee to thoroughly investigate said charges, it is hereby authorized to send for persons and papers; and a sum sufficient to defray the necessary expenses of this inquiry is hereby appropriated out of the contingent fund of the House."

That they have examined twenty witnesses, whose testimony is herewith sent. That the facts extracted from this evidence appear to be as follows:

The city of Jeffersonville, Ind., took action on the 6th day of February, 1884, looking to its protection against overflows in times of freshets in the Ohio River. The council passed a resolution in favor of the passage by Congress of a bill with this object in view, and on the 12th day of February, 1884, appointed a committee, consisting of Messrs. Jonas G. Howard, William H. Fogg, and A. O. Clark, to go to Washington city to urge upon Congress the improvement of levees at that city. This committee visited Washington and returned about the 3d day of March.

Prior to this time the House Committee on Rivers and Harbors had completed its work, and the visiting committee was informed by Mr. WILLIS, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, that they would have to make their effort to secure an appropriation in the Senate.

The visiting committee then interviewed Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON, and these gentlemen immediately took steps to secure an appropriation, the former by the introduction of an amendment designed to be offered to the river and harbor bill when it should come from the House, and the latter by the introduction of a resolution calling upon the Secretary of War for necessary information respecting the desired improvement. The action of this visiting committee and that of Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON were the really influential factors in obtaining the legislation which secured the appropriation for the levee at Jeffersonville.

The result of the passage of the resolution of Senator HARRISON was a report by the local engineer, Colonel Merrill, dated April 19, 1884, which was transmitted by the Secretary of War to the Senate on the 12th day of May, 1884.

On the 22d day of April, 1884, three days after the date of Colonel Merrill's report, the council of the city of Jeffersonville appointed a committee, consisting of the same persons included in the original committee, to visit Washington, in the interest of an appropriation. Messrs. Howard and Fogg declined to come and Mr. Simeon Goldback was substituted, and he and Mr. Clark came to Washington the latter part of April and remained about two weeks.

This committee did but little, and in fact there was but little for them to do, because the matter was in the care of Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON; but as it appears by the evidence introduced in behalf of Messrs. Warder and Stealey, the last visiting committee left matters in their charge, they being citizens of Jeffersonville, and then and now employés of the House of Representatives.

Upon the return of this second committee to Jeffersonville, in the early part of May, by the instructions of the levy committee of the city council, Mr. A. O. Shuler, secretary, wrote to Mr. L. F. Warder, asking his advice as to the propriety of sending another committee to Washington. Shortly thereafter Mr. Warder wrote to the parties interested at Jeffersonville that he had secured the services of an attorney, influential friend, or competent person, there being a conflict of evidence as to which term was used, to attend to this matter, and had made a contract with him by which the said person was to be paid $250 cash and $1,000 additional in the event of the success of the measure; and he stated further in his communications that it was utterly useless to send committees to Washington, but that the $250 should be forwarded to Mr. O. O. Stealey, which was done by Mr. Shuler.

From the time of these communications, in the early part of May, up to the time when the river and harbor bill had finally passed the Senate, the evidence fails to disclose anything that Mr. Warder did, except to speak perhaps occasionally to Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON and frequently to Mr. Stealey about the appropriation.

Mr. Warder testifies that in these conversations with Mr. Stealey he informed him that he purposed, and afterward had, employed a Mr. Hill as an attorney to look after the appropriation. He said nothing whatever, according to his own testimony, to either Senators VOORHEES or HARRISON, to Mr. Stockslager, his Representative, who took great interest in the matter, or to any other person excepting Mr. Stealey, prior to the adjournment of Congress, of this employment of Hill.

Mr. Warder claims in his testimony that he referred to Mr. Hill when he wrote the communication to Shuler asking for money; but, as heretofore stated, he did not name him in that communication.

Mr. Warder went upon the witness-stand before your committee in his own defense, and, when asked why and how he came to employ Hill, stated:

"Now, I want to state here the reason, or one of the reasons, why I employed Mr. Hill. I had become acquainted with him around the House. I saw him frequently about the House there, often before Congress met, and that he was associating around with members of Congress, and we got up a talking acquaintance. It was just on the eve of a political national contest, and through and about it I became acquainted with him and found him to be the best-posted man on the subject of levees that I had talked with in Congress or out of Congress. That was another reason that induced me to employ this man. I did employ him on a contingent fee, with the understanding that I should pay him $250. If the appropriation failed, that to be the end of it. If the appropriation was a success and we obtained it, he was to have $1,000 contingent fee. To make the matter short, we obtained the appropriation. I paid him the $1,000. That ended our connection; and, gentlemen, that is, without going into specific details, about my explanation of the matter."

The foregoing is the voluntary statement of Mr. Warder in regard to the employment of Hill. Upon cross-examination he stated:

"Q. Did you say that Mr. Hill was a lawyer?

"A. I understood him to be an attorney-at-law.

"Q. Well, do you know whether he is a lawyer or not?

"A. Yes, sir; I might say I know he is a lawyer.

"Q. Is he engaged in any other business?

"A. Not that I know of. The reason I might say I know he is a lawyer is that he has or had a lawyer's office. He told me that he was a Washington attorney, and practicing before the Supreme Court of the United States, and I had no right to doubt what he told me.

"Q. Your acquaintance had been about how long before this employment?

"A. A month or two, or three.

"Q. By whom was he first introduced to you?

"A. I don't remember, Mr. BAYNE, that there was any introduction at all, as far as that was concerned.

"Q. How long had you met him before this employment?

"A. Oh, quite frequently. I don't know what he was engaged in, but he seemed to have some business here, as he came to the House quite often.

"Q. Were your meetings with him there?

"A. I met him around my desk, and in the Hall of the House, and in the corridors and lobbies.

"Q. Had he been recommended to you by anybody?

"A. No, sir; I don't remember that he was recommended by anybody.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Did you consult with anybody at all about employing him?

"A. I consulted with Mr. Stealey.

"Q. With anybody else?

"A. No, sir.

"Q. What was Mr. Stealey's advice in reference to his employment?

"A. Mr. Stealey thought I had better employ him.

"Q. Did Mr. Stealey know Mr. Hill?

"A. I do not know whether he did before that time or not.

"Q. Did he know him at all?

"A. I don't know whether he did or not.

"Q. Did you consult with anybody else in reference to it?

"A. I did not.

"Q. Did you mention, in any of the communications which you wrote the people of Jeffersonville, or to the committee who visited Washington, the name of Mr. Hill as the party whom you had employed?

"A. I did not see any of the committees that visited Washington until after Congress adjourned.

"Q. When did you mention the fact outside of Mr. Stealey that Mr. Hill had been employed?

"A. Well, when I went home after the adjournment of Congress I spoke with several parties.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Who introduced you to him?

"A. No one that I remember.

"Q. You just struck up an acquaintance with him?

"A. Yes, sir; a casual acquaintance.

"Q. Did you inquire into his standing, reliability, capacity, or anything of that sort previous to this employment?

"A. No, sir; because upon my own judgment of his capacity I was satisfied upon that score.

"Q. Did you post yourself as to whether he had any influence in connection with any matter before Congress, or likely to be?

"A. I did not. I believe he told me he had connection with some matters, but I forget what they were, but it was in a legal way. I believe he said this, that he was paid a $2,500 fee for writing a brief that did not take him three days."

Now, it is in evidence that Mr. Warder was at one time mayor of the city of Jeffersonville; at another time he had taken an active part in promoting legislation by the State of Indiana for the removal of the county site to Jeffersonville, and, in his own language, "was in it up to my (his) ears for three years." He had been an officer of the House of Representatives since the first Monday in December, 1883. He therefore had considerable experience in public affairs. In addition to this, he exhibited as a witness the characteristics and traits of an intelligent man of the world.

The person, Mr. E. N. Hill, whom he alleges he employed as an attorney, has been discreditably connected with a number of public affairs. Mr. Warder did not put him on the witness-stand, although advised and defended by able and learned counsel, but the committee did.

He testified that he was employed by Warder; that he received $250 at one time and $1,000 at another; that he put the money in his pocket; that he kept no bank account; that he gave receipts, which were produced in evidence; but he declined to state what he did with the money, except to say generally that he used it as he needed it. He was asked if he was an attorney, and he answered that he was licensed by the Supreme Court of the United States, but had never practiced in that court; he was asked if he had practiced in the courts of the District of Columbia; he replied he never had; he was asked in what courts he did practice, and he replied in the Court of Claims and before the Departments, but when questioned as to cases he had or was interested in, he failed to indicate more than two or three.

Your committee find, further, that the manner of Mr. Hill upon the witness-stand, together with the character of his evidence and his antecedents, are such that they are disposed to place but little credence in any statements made by him which are not fully corroborated by extraneous circumstances, and that he is hardly the man whom an intelligent person would employ to conduct or manage an important business affair.

According to his own testimony and also that of Mr. Warder, Hill rendered no effective service whatever in securing the appropriation for Jeffersonville. He appeared before no committee, importuned no Congressman or Senator, did absolutely nothing except to advise Mr. Warder to make the fight in the Senate, and that the appropriation should be asked in aid of navigation and protection to Government property and not to protect the city of Jeffersonville from inundations. Action had been pending in the Senate for two and a half months prior to the alleged employment of Hill, as has been shown, and all measures proposed looked to the protection of Government property. This was particularly shown by the bill introduced by Mr. Stockslager on April 4, 1884, five weeks prior to the alleged employment of Hill.

In the face of these facts Mr. Warder testifies that he paid Hill $250 as a retainer and $1,000 after the approval of the bill by the President. This $1,000, it appears, was sent from Jeffersonville in response to the following dispatch sent by Warder:

WASHINGTON, D. C., July 2, 1884—9.45 a. m.

Mr. A. O. SHULER, Jeff.:

We expect to adjourn Saturday. Send draft to me at once, so that I will not be detained here. It is all right; but I will not pay until the bill is signed.

L. F. WARDER.

And, according to the testimony of Warder and Hill, was paid to the latter on the 6th of July, 1884.

In this connection it is proper to state that throughout this investigation on the part of the committee, and notwithstanding the fact that several parties from Jeffersonville friendly to Mr. Warder, who stated that they had talked with him on the subject both at Jeffersonville after the appropriation had been secured and in Washington after they had reached here under a subpœna from the committee, were placed on the stand and questioned closely with a view of ascertaining the name of the attorney or influential party who had been employed by Warder, the committee were unable to ascertain it, and it was not until Mr. Warder had been called to the witness-stand by his counsel to testify in his own behalf that the name of the party so employed was divulged.

The alleged employment of such a man as Hill, under the circumstances described, and the payment to him of so large a fee for so trivial a service is to the minds of your committee a doubtful and improbable transaction; but in any event the fact that Mr. Warder suggested that money should be raised, coupled with the fact that he received it under the pretense of securing legislation, is, they think, quite sufficient to justify decisive action on the part of the House of Representatives.

Such conduct on the part of an officer of the House is productive of scandal and reproach, and leads to erroneous impressions regarding the character and integrity of those charged with the legislation of the country.

While the testimony established that no part of the $1,250 paid by the people of Jeffersonville was used or attempted to be used in corruptly influencing any member of either branch of the Forty-eighth Congress, your committee wish to put the most emphatic condemnation upon the practice of an employé of Congress having anything to do with the reception and payment of money the consideration of which is the promotion of legislation. In this view of the case the conduct of Mr. Warder in connection with the affair, even if honest and straightforward, deserves unqualified disapproval.

In view of all the facts in the case, your committee find that L. F. Warder, then and now an employé of the House of Representatives, did receive the sum of $1,250 from certain persons interested in the success of the Jeffersonville (Ind.) levee appropriation, pending in the Forty-eighth Congress, upon the pretense of influencing Congress in connection therewith, and they recommend that L. F. Warder be dismissed from the service of this House.

The only other employé of the House of Representatives in any way connected with the charge under investigation is Mr. O. O. Stealey. It appears that Mr. Stealey was cognizant of the employment of Hill, and loaned Mr. Warder the sum of $250 for that alleged purpose, which sum was repaid Mr. Stealey by the citizens of Jeffersonville. While Mr. Stealey did this, however, he explains his connection with the transaction as follows:

"Q. Mr. Stealey, please tell the committee what connection you had with procuring this levee appropriation for Jeffersonville, when you first undertook it, and all about it.

"A. I am a citizen and tax-payer of Jeffersonville; all my interests are there, and my family lives there. They had floods there in 1883 and in 1884, which destroyed the town pretty much, and I was asked by friends to assist here in Washington in securing this appropriation, which I did. I went to Senator HARRISON frequently, and I went to Senator VOORHEES, and to members of the House, and did all that man could do for his town in that respect.

* * * * * * *

"Q. Something was said about you having paid out $250.

"A. I loaned Mr. Warder $250.

"Q. What was that for?

"A. He told me at the time that he wanted to or had employed an attorney. I asked him who the man was, and he said it was Hill. I then asked him what he knew about the man and was he a good man, and he said, "I think so; I talked to him, and he seems to have a good idea of legislation." I then asked him where the money was to come from, and he answered, "Prominent tax-payers want this done, and I am authorized by Mr. Goldbach to employ an attorney, or some man to watch this bill."

"Q. Did you tell him you could not give it much attention?

"A. I told him so distinctly and positively. I was away a good deal of the time; I was two weeks in Chicago, and from the latter part of May until the 3d of June I was away from Washington, and from the latter part of June until the middle of July I was not here. And during that time no letter was written and no dispatch sent by me, and I had no communication whatever in any manner connected with the money or the employment of an attorney except with Mr. Warder, and that was to let him have $250, which Mr. Shuler sent me a draft for in about six weeks. That ended my connection here with the whole business, except my personal efforts among members of the House and Senators."

Now, though in the opinion of your committee it is improper for any officer or employé of the House of Representatives to undertake, by his own efforts or those of his agents, to influence legislation in Congress, yet, so far as the present inquiry is concerned, your committee find that O. O. Stealey did not exact, collect, or accept from any person any sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, or any committee thereof, or any member or Senator, in connection with the Jeffersonville levee appropriation, and except the impropriety of an employé being concerned in any attempt to secure such an appropriation said Stealey was not connected therewith.

All of which is respectfully submitted.

[Resolution to accompany report.]

Resolved, That L. F. Warder be dismissed from the service of the House.

Mr. COX. It was with profound regret I saw this House require the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to investigate the charges against certain of its employés, which were preferred by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE]. I knew they might with more propriety be investigated by a special committee created for that purpose; but I had no election in the matter, neither had the committee. It is always disagreeable to our natural impulses to be connected with any investigation which may result in disclosures damaging to our fellowmen. It is always unpleasant to be placed in the position of a censor upon the transactions of our fellows. It is doubly so when the investigation may lead to the conviction of those with whom we are brought in daily association.

Mr. Warder was an employé of the Forty-eighth and is of the Forty-ninth Congress, of which I have been and am a member. In addition to this, he was and is a member of the political family to which I belong. At the inception of these proceedings (as the charges proceeded from the other side of the House, from one with whom I am not in political affiliation), my natural bias was in favor of the accused, for I feared that a political element might be the cause of their origination. At all events, it would have given me the greatest pleasure after making the investigation to be enabled to report to this House that the charges were not sustained and were indeed without foundation. I am frank in admitting that such was my natural and original bias.

I wish to call to the attention of the House in connection with this unanimous report of the committee, a fact which, in my opinion, is entitled to great weight, in considering the verdict it has to render. That is as to the composition of the committee. It is composed of nine members of the bar, six of whom are Democrats, three Republicans, and the remainder are intelligent and fair-minded laymen. Every one knows the analytical and inquisitorial character of a lawyer's mind. He is accustomed to examine witnesses and weigh their testimony both in his Chamber and at the bar. He is disposed to decide for himself. His thoughts and his conclusions are his own.

He exercises an independence of thought not easily controlled by others. He watches closely not only what a witness says, but his manner and bearing, and searches for the motive that may prompt his answer. Hence it is unusual to find nine members of the profession concurring in any given proposition. Therefore, when the facts and circumstances have been of such a character as to command a unanimous indorsement as to the guilt of the accused, this House should hesitate, when debarred from the advantages we have enjoyed of investigating the truth of the accusation, to set our unanimous verdict aside. Especially is this true when this verdict has been strengthened and supported by the concurrent opinion of the intelligent and impartial laymen who co-operated in this investigation.

The committee gave to this case a full, fair, impartial, and exhaustive investigation. It was engaged in the examination of witnesses for over one month's time, and from the care given to the case and the freedom from party spirit manifested by all, I feel warranted in saying it would have been the pleasure of the entire committee to have reported in favor of Mr. Warder if it could have consistently done so. As it was, he was given the benefit of his own statement in the report, in order that he and his friends and this House might see that there was no disposition to deal harshly with him. The committee, however, does not claim for itself infallibility, and recognizes the fact that it is the duty of this House in reviewing its action to determine for itself whether it is satisfied with the action of its committee.

The committee has no feeling in the matter. It feels that it has honestly, laboriously, and faithfully discharged its duty to the House and to the accused. That is what it aimed to do; that is what it has done. It does not claim to have a higher sense of honor as to what is due to this House than others. If its standard has been high, it does not propose to lower it. The danger is in the other direction. It is for you, gentlemen of the House, to say whether you shall entertain the same view of this matter that the committee does. Whatever may be your conclusion they will feel that you have been impelled by the same motives that prompted them in coming to their decision.

The substitute offered by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] proposes that you shall find that the testimony does not sustain the charges preferred by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE], while the committee say it does. Who are the best judges of testimony? The party who has seen the witness testify, noted his hesitation, overzeal, confusion, manner, and bearing, or the person who examines the testimony only after committed to type and laid before him? The law authorities say that he who stands face to face to the witness is the best judge. And this opinion is founded on experience and common sense. While on this subject, I will briefly invite your attention to an eminent authority and see what he has to say in regard to the weight of testimony. Says Mr. Starkie, in his work upon evidence:

No definite degrees of probability can in practice be assigned to the testimony of witnesses. Their credibility usually depends upon special circumstances attending each particular case, upon their connection with the party and the subject-matter of litigation, their previous character, the manner of delivering their evidence, and many other circumstances, by a careful consideration of which the value of their testimony is usually so well ascertained as to leave no room for mere numerical comparison.

The mistake of the gentlemen on the other side is, that they propose that you shall take the testimony as reported to this House, and without the adventitious aids enjoyed by the committee you shall say its conclusion is erroneous; whereas courts of law when reviewing law and facts are always reluctant to set aside a verdict of a jury when it has any evidence upon which to form its verdict. Not so when it has no evidence, or is contrary to the evidence. In this case it is insisted that within the one hundred and twenty-six pages of testimony submitted for your consideration, there is abundant evidence to justify the finding of the committee, and we are confident you will not only be slow but absolutely refuse to consent to the misleading substitute offered by my friend.

Turning from that subject, I find laid upon the desks of members what appears to me to be a very peculiar brief from the counsel on the part of the defense. It is, I say, a rather peculiar document, and, without intentional offense, I will add worthy of the cause these gentlemen are defending. It begins as follows:

Luther F. Warder, of Jeffersonville, Ind., is on trial before you.

We do not differ about that; and I think that the House will concur that he is not only on trial but that the testimony is very damaging against him. It proceeds:

Your grand jury, the Committee on Civil Service Reform, charge him with perjury, subornation of perjury, forgery, and embezzlement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, not even a tyro in the profession of the law should make the mistake of comparing the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service to a grand jury. Why is it done here? To covertly disparage the committee? A grand jury is drawn, sworn, and charged by the court; it is then placed in charge of an officer, who conducts it to a room and stands as sentinel at the door; its investigations are secret; but one side of the case is heard; the defendant is not present either in person or by counsel, and all that is required to entitle it to find an indictment (which is drawn by the State's attorney), is to establish a prima facie case of guilt.

In this case the committee-room doors were thrown open. The defendant appeared with his counsel, learned in the law, to cross-examine witnesses, to interpose objections to improper questions, to avail himself of any defense which might be accorded in any court of justice, and to examine all witnesses testifying in the case. Not only this, but a stenographer was present to prepare the testimony for the use of the committee and the accused.

Whenever mistakes occurred or corrections were desired they were permitted by your committee; therefore this House can readily see that there is not the faintest similarity between a committee of this House charged with an investigation and a grand jury, to which the counsel compares it. So I say that at the very commencement of this defense, misleading comparisons are made in order to break the force of the blow impending over the head of their client. Next it says:

The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service then charged Mr. Warder with perjury, forgery, and embezzlement.

The committee have done no such thing, and the counsel are again mistaken in this assertion. The committee find that L. F. Warder, then and now an employé of this House, did receive the sum of $1,250 from certain persons interested in a levee appropriation pending in the Forty-eighth Congress upon the pretense of influencing Congress in connection therewith, and it recommends his dismissal. No one of ordinary understanding can read the testimony and come to any other conclusion. Even Warder's testimony itself indubitably establishes this fact. This wonderful brief goes on further to say:

We further declare that as lawyers and honest men——

Why did it become necessary to add that latter phrase?

with a keen appreciation of the dignity and honor of this House, we have carefully and closely read all the evidence adduced in this investigation, and we do most solemnly aver and declare that the charges against Mr. Warder are not sustained, and the resolutions reported by the committee are wholly unwarranted and unjustly, cruelly severe.

Not content with appearing before the committee in defense of their client the counsel in their zeal generously propose to give this House the benefit of their unbiased opinion as to the law and the facts. We should rather suppose the House would be inclined to attach more importance to the views of those who stand neutral in this case. Probably the most influential and potential name attached to this wonderful brief is that of ex-Senator McDonald, of Indiana. I must confess to great surprise when I first saw his name affixed to a brief where the attorneys testified as to law and facts.

Therefore when he appeared in Washington before the Committee on Foreign Affairs I was gratified when he informed me he had never seen the brief nor authorized his name to be attached to it. I replied that when I saw his name thus used I was surprised, and could only ascribe it to that good nature which all his friends so fully appreciate. It is true that since that time he has written a letter to the counsel for the accused stating substantially what I have repeated.

It is true that in the exercise of what I conceive to be rather an extraordinary discretion the counsel may have been justified in affixing his name to this brief; for having appeared with them in the defense of Mr. Stealey, and his name being of record as counsel for the accused, they may have been misled, and I therefore cheerfully accept the explanation given by them in the note of disclaimer of ex-Senator McDonald. While the zeal of counsel may sometimes cause them to go a little too far, there is no reason why those who review the case should partake of the ardor of the advocate.

But I must hasten on to other matters.

Mr. Speaker, what would be the natural course of an innocent man when charged with an offense of this kind? I ask members of the House to put it to themselves and inquire what they would have done? Would you not have hastened before the committee so soon as it met and proffered to disclose your whole connection with the case? Yes; you would have gone before the committee, all of whom you had known, with all of whom you had served; you would have relied upon their honor to resolve every reasonable doubt in your behalf. You would have gone upon the witness-stand and made an honest statement of your connection with the transaction. You would have relied upon their sympathy; you would have said, my city was overflowed; it was the home of myself, my family, and my friends; the mistake I made was of the head and not of the heart; deal with me as I am; I desire to throw no impediment in the way of this investigation.

Instead of this, the accused, with his learned counsel, sat silent day by day while the investigation went on. The committee were compelled to bring witnesses at great cost and inconvenience over 700 miles to testify to facts in the full knowledge and possession of the accused. And not until fact after fact had so tightened the chain of circumstantial evidence around him that he felt he could not escape, did he take the stand in order, if possible, to extricate himself from these criminating circumstances. The testimony, bearing, and manner of Mr. Warder upon the stand had much influence on the committee in arriving at its conclusion.

It furthermore saw that some of the principal witnesses summoned by the committee on arriving in the city were promptly taken in hand. Two of them, Shuler and Goldbach, staid at the same house with Warder. These two witnesses staid in the city fully a day before coming before the committee to be examined. They are what is known in the law as reluctant and eager witnesses—reluctant for the side that subpœnaed them, eager for the opposition. This illustrates in part the advantage of meeting witnesses face to face. This committee were not partisans. All they desired to do was to render a just and proper verdict.

While strict party men, they recognized their high obligation to conserve the honor and reputation of the House and the equally imposing duty of doing justice to the accused. Had Warder manifested more promptness in going upon the stand in his own defense his testimony would have had more weight.

Extraordinary efforts have been made to arouse the sympathies of this House in his favor. He is entitled to justice, tempered with mercy, but not sympathy. Who brought this case here but himself? What but his own acts places him on trial to-day? By this reception of money for the alleged purpose of affecting the legislation of this House he affixed suspicion upon himself. Standing at its portals to guard the entrance against lobbyists and those who would improperly secure legislation, he puts himself in the forefront as a lobbyist, and received money to be employed in accomplishing legislation. No special pleading, no technicalities, no false sympathy should be extended to enable him to escape.

There is another matter presented in the brief in this case to which I would here refer, as it is in the line of the whole defense. It displays a disposition to raise misleading issues in order to escape the real issue presented for the consideration of the House. It is alleged that this charge against him "is the child of an appropriate liaison between political prejudices as sire and a deserter from the Southern armies as dam." Suppose that is so, what has that got to do with this case? The only question for this House to consider is, are the charges which have been brought against Warder true?

We have nothing to do with the animus that may have inspired them. Even informers give clews which lead to the most important revelations. The only inquiry we have to determine is whether the charges the committee investigated are true. In this case the tactics of adroit and skillful counsel should not mislead this House. Senator HARRISON'S testimony discloses the fact that the idea of bringing these charges before this House was an afterthought. He stated that, as he was closely connected with the passage of the appropriation for the purpose of the Jeffersonville levee, when he heard that money had been received from the people of Jeffersonville to effect legislation he thought of moving for an investigation in the Senate, but when he ascertained that the money was received by an employé of this House he requested the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE] to originate the matter here.

It is not my purpose to vindicate the gentleman from Indiana. He is abundantly able to take care of himself; but, as an act of justice, I deem it proper to say he has shown no forwardness in this whole investigation. The charges, it will be seen, are general. In fact, I thought too much so. In calling the attention of the gentleman from Indiana to my objection he stated that he had conferred with a distinguished Democrat on this side of the House in relation to that very matter, and they agreed on the form of the resolution; that a lie travels faster than the truth, and he did not wish to smirch the character of any man by naming him in the resolutions before the truth should be known. Therefore, instead of being amenable to the charge preferred by the counsel for the accused, he had shown a tender consideration for his reputation.

Why refer to the witness Glass as being a confederate deserter, who broke his parole, unless to arouse certain sectional resentments? It appears from the evidence that Glass, when eighteen or nineteen years old, enlisted in the confederate army and served until captured in 1863. Then he was paroled and returned home; the cause of the South being desperate he came North, and made his home at Jeffersonville. Being a poor man he became a corn-husker, then a team-driver in the city to which he went, and subsequently was elected mayor for two successive terms.

The first time he moved in this matter was when the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WILLIS], the Democratic chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, having seen in a newspaper that certain employés of this House had received money for the purpose of effecting legislation, naturally felt indignant and wrote to Mr. Glass, who was the mayor, on the subject.

That desire which prompted the gentleman from Kentucky to investigate a matter which was calculated to reflect upon the integrity and the usefulness of this House is such as I trust and believe will inspire the action of its members to-day. The gentleman from Kentucky did not know the name of any of the parties concerned in the transaction; he believed it was a black-mailing operation, and the result has shown that it was a disgraceful transaction. Thus it appears how groundless is the charge in the brief of the counsel for Warder.

The accused is a man of no ordinary intelligence; he is shrewd, quick, and accustomed to deal with men. He saw, no doubt, the weakness of the points in the brief of his counsel and he supplements it with one of his own, in which he appeals to the sympathy of the members of this House. While occupying a position on this floor he has placed document after document on the desks of its members for the purpose of affecting their judgment, and it is needless to refer to his personal importunities.

I wish to call attention to another matter. While the committee were carefully endeavoring to ascertain who was the alleged attorney to whom Mr. Warder said he paid this money, they were unable for some time to do so. Something was to be concealed; there was no openness, no frankness, no candor. Even the men who came here and with whom Mr. Warder associated were asked, as they went upon the stand one after another, to name the attorney to whom this money had been paid, and no one was able to give the name.

But when Mr. Warder was driven to the stand—I use that word with all its import, because he hesitated to go upon the stand even when the testimony was about to close; the committee at one time thought they would have to force him upon the stand—when at last he was driven upon the stand, then for the first time do we hear the name of this attorney who was alleged to have received the $1,250 which was sent from Jeffersonville, Ind. It then turns out that he is one E. N. Hill. I do not blame Mr. Warder for wishing to conceal the name of the man. The committee could not believe that an intelligent man like Mr. Warder, who had been engaged for three years before the Indiana Legislature in regard to public matters, who for eight years was mayor of the town of Jeffersonville, and who upon the stand exhibited great intelligence and shrewdness, should not have known more about Hill than he professed.

So far as Hill is concerned, we find the man was so notorious in his character that you have merely to examine him a short time to discredit everything he says. He is a man, according to his own statement and that of others, who has betrayed every man with whom he has been associated. He acted as agent for Stephen W. Dorsey, and he betrayed him. He was connected with the Pan-Electric Telephone, and he betrayed Hon. Casey Young. He was connected with various unsavory transactions.

And this is the man to whom an employé of the House said he paid $1,250 for the purpose of securing the passage of a bill through this House! Why, sir, this is hard to believe.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will the gentleman allow me to ask him a question?

Mr. COX. Certainly.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Is there any proof showing that Mr. Warder knew at the time the character of this man Hill?

Mr. COX. There is no proof of that fact, but he did not ask any man in this city who Hill was nor tell any one of his employment, and why not?

Mr. ROBERTSON. Did you know anything of Mr. Hill?

Mr. COX. No, sir; but I never would have paid him $1,250 until I had inquired of somebody about what manner of man he was.

Mr. FINDLAY. Would you [Mr. ROBERTSON] have paid a fee to a man of whom you knew nothing?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I do not know what I would have done.

Mr. COX. The gentleman would not have employed a man, as Mr. Warder alleges he did, with his opportunities of knowing, and paid him $1,250 without knowing something of his character. It was easy to inquire about him and to know exactly who he was. I inquired about him after he was on the stand, and I learned he was a man who would borrow 25 cents. There was no difficulty in getting such information.

Mr. MORRISON. Would he pay it back? [Laughter.]

Mr. COX. No, I do not think he would, for according to the testimony he received $5 and never paid it back.

Mr. FINDLAY. As a fee?

Mr. COX. As a fee; and he never paid it back.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I say the singular part was, we find Mr. Warder makes it appear that he was of great service to him. He made the suggestion to him they should not strive for the purpose of protecting a levee, but to protect United States property. That appears to be all he ever did. Yet if you will mark the sequence: Senator HARRISON had referred to the War Department on the 1st of March an inquiry in regard to that very subject, and Mr. Stockslager, the Representative of that district, on the 4th of April introduced a bill embodying that very idea. Yet Hill was not employed till the 13th of May, and Mr. Warder says his suggestion was most valuable. Is not that dodging? Is not that a misrepresentation of the true facts in this case?

From the facts before us we can see the great, deep, abiding interest he had in explaining this matter, and therefore we must make due allowance for his evidence—take it with a grain of salt. But you may leave out Hill, and yet I say the facts found by the committee would justify such a finding as we make, because Warder himself said he received $1,250 and received it for the purpose of influencing legislation. That is what we have found. I say he contributed to the erroneous but too general belief outside of Congress, that it is necessary to use money to influence legislation in this House.

It is for you to say to-day whether you will give the lie to this false impression, or whether in the face of the restrictions thrown around us in regard to lobbyists so that even an ex-member of Congress is not allowed to enter here without stating on his honor he is not engaged in the passage of any bill, and with the fact that the United States Statutes provide a penalty of $5,000 or one year's imprisonment for any employé using money for that purpose—I say it is for you by your action here to-day to say whether you wish to publish to the world that an employé of this House who received $1,250 for the purpose of influencing legislation, is worthy to further occupy the position which, in the opinion of the committee and the country, he has dishonored. If such is your verdict, throw open your doors, invite all the lobbyists throughout the country to come to this council chamber and pay money for the purpose of securing legislation.

Mr. LONG. Do you care to consider the question which will arise whether Stealey and Warder are not both entitled to the same criticism?

Mr. COX. Now, in regard to Mr. Stealey, he never received one cent of money. Mr. Warder received it all, and Mr. Warder says so himself. Mr. Stealey did not employ a counsel. He knew of the employment of counsel, loaned Warder $250 to employ counsel, and in that way agreed to it after it had been done.

The money that Mr. Stealey received from Jeffersonville was but money paid back to him for the purpose of refunding the amount he had loaned to Warder. He got back simply what he had loaned, and nothing in addition to it.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. May I ask the gentleman from North Carolina a question?

Mr. COX. My time is nearly out, but I will yield for a question only.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. I shall occupy but a moment if the gentleman will permit a question.

Mr. COX. Very well.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Was Mr. Stealey an employé of the House at this time?

Mr. COX. He was.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Did he furnish to Warder the $250 that was advanced?

Mr. COX. He did, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Did he know what he was going to do with it?

Mr. COX. He did, sir.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, then, you acquit Stealey, as I understand?

Mr. COX. We say, further than using his influence for purposes of affecting legislation he is "not guilty." The facts do not make him guilty under the resolutions.

Mr. JOHNSTON, of Indiana. Now, if he loaned the money to Warder to be used for that purpose, knowing the purpose for which it was to be used, is he not just as bad as the man who used it?

Mr. COX. We think not, sir. He did not, after it was apparent to every one else that the success of the measure was assured through the influence of Senators VOORHEES and HARRISON, dupe his fellow-citizens of Jeffersonville to send on $1,250 for a needless purpose, as did Warder. We have been fair and even merciful in our recommendations, according to my conception.

The committee find that—

L. F. Warder, then and now an employé of the House of Representatives, did receive the sum of $1,250 from certain persons interested in the success of the Jeffersonville, Ind., levee appropriation, pending in the Forty-eighth Congress, upon the pretense of influencing Congress in connection therewith, and they recommend that L. F. Warder be dismissed from the service of this House.

As to Stealey, the committee find that—

Though it is improper for any officer or employé of the House of Representatives to undertake by his own efforts or those of his agents to influence legislation in Congress, yet, so far as the present inquiry is concerned, the committee find that Stealey did not exact, collect, or accept from any person any sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, and with the exception of the impropriety of an employé being concerned in attempts to secure such an appropriation he was not connected therewith.

I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I respectfully but most earnestly request the attention of the House while I speak in behalf of Luther F. Warder. He has commissioned me to lead in his defense upon this floor.

I painfully realize, Mr. Speaker, the responsibility of my position, and I can say, without affectation of any modesty whatever, that I wish the defense, the main defense, so far as the control and direction of the argument is concerned, had fallen into other hands; that it had devolved upon some one more experienced in legislation than I am.

Mr. Warder is charged with very grave offenses, and let me say at once that if upon the evidence adduced in this case the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service could properly come to the conclusion at which they have arrived, they must have found him guilty not only of the charges embraced in the resolution by which the matter was referred to that committee, but they must have also found him guilty of the offense of embezzlement, guilty of the offense of perjury, and guilty of the offense of subornation of perjury—crimes for which, if he has committed any one of them, he deserves a greater punishment than this House has jurisdiction to inflict. Sir, I not only believe him guiltless of any of these crimes and guiltless of any of the offenses with which he is charged, but I declare, upon my word as a member of this honorable body, that I believe him to be a gentleman of the highest integrity of character.

Now, sir, I am not here for the purpose of indulging in harsh criticism upon the action of the committee who have conducted this investigation. I recognize every gentleman upon the committee as my peer on this floor. I know it is composed of honorable gentlemen, and many of them are able and learned lawyers, and I mean to speak of them with the utmost respect; but I say here, weighing my words well, having read this evidence with care, and having arrived at my conclusion upon my conscience, that if this man had been tried by any court in this country and the jury had returned, upon the evidence adduced in this case, the verdict which the committee has returned, there is not a court of appeals in the land or in any civilized land in this world that would not have promptly set aside that verdict as contrary to the evidence.

I say with emphasis that there is not from the beginning to the end of the evidence in this case a line or letter, a word or a syllable, that would justify in the remotest degree the finding of the committee; and I do not mean to say this in any dogmatic spirit. I am not setting up my judgment as a man or as a lawyer against that of any gentleman upon the committee, or against the committee itself; but feeling earnestly on this question, I have, as a lawyer, tried carefully to read the evidence, and if I could know that every member of the House had read the evidence with the same earnest care and attention which I have conscientiously endeavored to bestow upon it, I should esteem it a work of supererogation for any friend of Mr. Warder to utter a single word in his behalf upon this occasion. But the record is so voluminous that it was not to be expected any considerable number of gentlemen would find time to thoroughly acquaint themselves with its contents.

Mr. Speaker, if I urge this defense with some degree of earnestness I do so not simply from the fact that I have weighed the evidence carefully, but also for the reason that I have known the defendant, Mr. Warder, long, well, and most intimately. He is from my own State, and I say here in the presence of the House that in my judgment there is not a member here to-day who is more incapable of prostituting his position for pecuniary gain or of betraying his official trust by corruptly seeking to influence legislation than is Mr. Warder.

I say this upon my knowledge of the man. What is proposed to be done here? If the committee in their wisdom and upon their consciences had contented themselves with finding and saying in their conclusions that Mr. Warder had done wrong in receiving and expending money while an employé of the House in engaging the services of an attorney for the purpose of influencing legislation he would have been content, I would have been content, and his friends would have been content. But they go further, and I ask you to consider what is proposed to be done here. I ask you, each one of you, to put yourselves in the place of Mr. Warder. And I ask you if you propose to send him forth a branded perjurer to disgrace and to dishonor? If you do, I say again you do it upon evidence that can not possibly satisfy any disinterested and impartial mind.

What are the charges? Allow me to read them. Let us see what is the resolution that was sent to the committee. Let us see what was the issue the committee had to try:

Whereas there was pending in the Forty-eighth Congress a bill containing, among other matters, an appropriation of $50,000 for a certain improvement of the Ohio River at or near Jeffersonville, Ind., known as the Jeffersonville levee appropriation; and

Whereas it is charged by a reputable citizen of Indiana—

I will have something to say about that "reputable citizen" before I get through—that during the pendency of said measure a person or persons, then officers of the House of Representatives, exacted, collected, and accepted from a person or persons interested in the success of the said appropriation a large sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, or some committee thereof, or Members or Senators in their official action thereon; and

Whereas it is also charged that the person or persons so exacting, collecting, and accepting said sum of money for the purpose aforesaid are officers and employés of this House: Therefore,

Be it resolved, That the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service be, and is hereby, instructed to inquire into the truth of said charges and report the facts to this House, &c.

That amounts to this: that some persons who were employés of the Forty-eighth Congress, and are employés of the Forty-ninth Congress, collected money from some person or persons, and paid it over to some member of this House or members of this House, Senator or Senators, for the corrupt purpose of influencing legislation. That is the charge. And I now respectfully ask the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] to put his hand upon one letter, upon one word that was uttered by any witness on the stand which sustains that charge. Who was the witness? He is not to be found. He was not to be found. There is no such testimony.

What are the facts, Mr. Speaker? Let me briefly allude to them as they are disclosed by the evidence. Who is Luther F. Warder? Who he is and what he has been is fully shown by the evidence. He is a citizen of Jeffersonville, Ind. He has held the position of councilman for eight years in that city; he was mayor of that city for four years; he was a captain of a company in the Union Army in the late war. He is a gentleman who has held high positions before he came here. In the Forty-eighth Congress and in this Congress he has held the responsible position of first assistant doorkeeper of the House. Who has testified against Mr. Warder? What is there in the evidence in this case that reflects upon his character? Every witness who gave testimony in this case, so far as he alluded to the subject at all, testified that Mr. Warder had hitherto sustained a good reputation. And right in that connection, Mr. Speaker, I wish to read a short extract from a letter recently received by Mr. Warder from one of the leading citizens of Clark County—the county in which he resides—who is not only a leading citizen but is the leading Republican of that county. And Mr. Warder is known to all of you as a Democrat. Here is what Mr. James G. Merryweather says—a gentleman of high character, bitterly opposed to Mr. Warder in politics. I wish to read a portion of this letter as tending to show you the esteem in which Mr. Warder is held.

Mr. COX. Is that in evidence?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. It is not. I am not confined to the evidence. This, as I have said, is a letter recently received from this distinguished citizen.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Do I understand letters of that character are to be admitted on both sides?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I am not sitting as a court and I can not say what documents are to be admitted, but I propose to read this letter unless somebody prevents me from doing so. The extracts which I read are as follows:

JEFFERSONVILLE, May 15, 1886.

FRIEND WARDER: I see your committee has reported. That report is wonderful to me. From a Jeffersonville standpoint, it is amazing. To justify it, there must be things which we have never known, and matters about which we never had the least suspicion. All of the matters connected with your case have been freely canvassed here, and excepting a very few of your enemies, political and personal, there has been but one expression, namely, that you acted as desired by the citizens, and in no way benefited yourself pecuniarily. That is the almost universal expression of opinion, and the sympathies of the people are accordingly with you. We think you sought to befriend us and resent any other construction or meaning of your action. We know the committee has done you great wrong, and was not fully enlightened as to your true position and objects. Four-fifths of the people of Jeffersonville would gladly aid you, and if any way were indicated their expression would at once be forthcoming. * * * In all things, regarding the good of Jeffersonville, you have been the friend of the people, and while, as did occur, we often differed as to the best policy, I and those with whom I acted always gave you credit for being upright, unselfish, and faithfully regardful of what you believed to be the best interests of the people. I say nothing of the committee—doubtless it has done what it thought right and best, giving due regard to the rules of the House and "civil-service reform," &c. But I am sure "civil-service reform" has given too much zeal to its functions, and has led it into a most grave and grievous error in your case. When the evidence is properly weighed, I hope and believe it will see its error, and you yet receive justice. Let that be as it may, our faith in your integrity is not in the least impaired.

* * * * * * *

Your friend,

J. B. MERIWEATHER.

That is the testimony of a political opponent, the leader of his party in this man's county. That is the esteem, I undertake to say, in which Mr. Warder is held at his home, by his fellow-citizens in general.

I have stated what is charged against this gentleman in the resolution referred by the House to the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service. Let us see from the evidence what are the facts of the case. In 1883 the winds came and the rains descended and beat upon the town of Jeffersonville and flooded it almost out of existence. In 1884 there was another flood, greater in magnitude than the flood of 1883. Luther F. Warder, in both those years, was a citizen of the town of Jeffersonville. All the little he owns in this world is situated in that town.

During the flood of 1884 he was here occupying the position that he occupies now. His city, as I have said, was flooded. Mr. Warder's property was in danger; the water had come up to the second story of his house. The property of his friends was in danger; there was imminent danger that the city of Jeffersonville would be ruined as a place of commercial and manufacturing importance. The common council of that municipality (of which Mr. Warder had previously been mayor, having also served several terms as common councilman), knowing that he was here, sent on a committee to advise with him as to what was best to be done for their interests. They wanted to get a levee constructed at Jeffersonville to prevent the recurrence of such damage should another flood come. They sent a committee here with full authority to confer with Mr. Stealey and Mr. Warder, empowering them to do whatever seemed wisest and best in their judgment. Two committees of that kind came on to Washington. On the last of those committees was a wealthy and prominent citizen of the town by the name of Goldbach. He called upon Mr. Warder and told him he had full authority to do what he thought best, to employ an attorney or to do anything that would be in the interest of the town. That was the starting point of this case. That is who Warder was. That is what his relation to the city of Jeffersonville was. That is what he was authorized to do by the citizens of Jeffersonville acting through their common council and through their committees.

Now, what was done?

The important evidence in this case is embraced in the testimony of the witnesses Glass, Shuler, a member of the common council of Jeffersonville; Schwaninger, Burlingame, the clerk of the council; Prather, the treasurer; HOWARD, now an honored member of this House; Goldbach, Stealey, Warder, and Hill. These, I say, are the witnesses who give pertinent testimony in this case, and I again ask the gentlemen of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, with great respect, to tell me which one of these witnesses has sworn to anything that justifies these charges. Name the witness. Cite me to the testimony he has given. The testimony is not contradictory; it is uniform in its tendency throughout, and it establishes no fact which I do not cheerfully concede in this case. Gentlemen, when a man intends to commit a crime or undertakes to do a fraudulent act he does not proclaim his intention to the world. What was the conduct of Mr. Warder throughout this transaction?

First, I say, and the evidence fully sustains the assertion that from the beginning of this transaction to the end of it he acted openly, boldly, and above board. There was no secrecy or concealment in anything that he did. Everything was published to the world, so that all the world might have known it, and the people of Jeffersonville did know it. Does this look like the conduct of a man who was attempting to commit a crime or an offense of any kind? Is there evidence in the conduct of Mr. Warder that he was engaged in the business of seeking to improperly or corruptly influence legislation in this House? The committee have found that there came into Mr. Warder's hands $1,250. They do not find that the money was used by him for the purpose of corruptly influencing legislation. In fact they find—they could not find anything else and justify their verdict—that, although Mr. Warder paid this money over to the man Hill, yet it was done fraudulently and with a secret understanding between him and Hill that the money, or a considerable part of it, was to be paid back to Warder.

Now, I wish to know where the evidence of that is? Take the evidence just as it stands in the record and tell me who is the witness that swears to anything of that kind? Mr. Goldbach swears that Warder informed him fully of what he had done in employing Hill as an attorney. Warder informed Shuler of the same fact, he informed Foutz of the same fact, and when he returned to Jeffersonville he exhibited to the people there the receipts which were given to him by this man Hill and which have been put in evidence here.

Mr. CALDWELL. What are the dates of those receipts?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I will give you the dates. The one for $250 is dated May 13, 1884, and the one for $1,000 is dated July 7, 1884. Mr. Warder came here in January, 1883. The first he had to do with this matter was along in February or March of that year. Now what does he testify to himself? and his testimony is corroborated by other witnesses. He was here in the House, here acting in the position which he now occupies. He became acquainted with this man Hill. He had frequent conversations with him before this matter came up. Hill frequented these lobbies; Warder made his acquaintance and talked with him about many things, among others about levees. Hill told him that he knew all about levees, that he had "been raised behind a levee" himself, and he exhibited, Warder says, more intelligence upon the subject of levees and legislation concerning them than any man with whom he had ever conversed. Mr. Hill is a plausible man, a smart man, an able man, and these gentlemen of the committee say he is also a rascal. I do not know anything about that, but for the purpose of this argument I am perfectly willing to concede that he is, or was, a disreputable attorney.

In fact, I think the evidence tends to show that; but, gentlemen, tell me if you can where is the evidence that Mr. Warder at the time he employed Hill knew his character? The gentleman from North Carolina says that Warder had made Hill's acquaintance two or three months before and he ought to have known he was a rascal. Why, sir, there are gentlemen on this floor who have been here fifteen or twenty years, but I venture to say there is not one man out of ten here today who ever heard of Hill until this investigation was entered upon.

Mr. Warder, meeting this man, believing him to be intelligent and able in the matter in which he was interested, employed him. What did he employ him to do? He employed him to act as the attorney of the people of Jeffersonville in getting this appropriation through Congress. Hill gave him advice. What advice did he give? The Committee on Rivers and Harbors of this House had made or were about to make their report. Mr. Hill told Mr. Warder that in his judgment it would be useless to try to get anything through this House, but that an effort should be made to get the appropriation put on in the Senate; and that it must be tacked on there upon the ground that such an appropriation was necessary to protect Government property at Jeffersonville.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. Did not Mr. Stockslager, then the representative from Jeffersonville, embody just that idea of the protection of Government property at Jeffersonville in a bill which he introduced one month before the employment of Hill?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Yes, sir; he did. But what of that? It only shows that Mr. Stockslager was an intelligent man also. He put the matter upon the right ground.

But before Mr. Hill was employed by Mr. Warder the latter did not know what advice he was going to get from Hill. In fact, Hill told him he would not give him any advice until he had been paid a retaining fee of $250; and after that fee had been paid, he gave him this advice.

But it is said by this committee that Hill never did anything else; that there is no evidence that Hill ever went to the committee or to any member of Congress, or ever did anything except advise Warder from time to time; and that his services, if worth anything, were manifestly worth less than what Warder paid him. Suppose we concede that proposition; and I do concede it for the purpose of the argument. Mr. Warder, under the contract which both Hill and Warder swore was made, agreed to pay Hill a retaining fee of $250, and $1,000 more. Upon what condition? Not if he performed valuable services, but if the appropriation passed. That was the contract; and Hill, if he had sued him for this money would not have sued for the value of the services rendered, but upon the contract. Because Hill did not render services equal in value to the amount which was paid him, it does not follow that Mr. Warder was corrupt in employing him to perform those services. He is not the first client who has paid his attorney more than the services of his attorney were worth.

Mr. MORGAN. Is the charge of the committee that Mr. Warder shared the money with Hill, or is it charged that the contract between them was immoral or illegal?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. My inference from the finding of the committee is that they believe Warder shared in this money.

Mr. MORGAN. Do the committee believe there was anything immoral or illegal in the contract, as you have stated it.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I do not know that the committee charge there was anything immoral in the contract. I do not think there was anything immoral in it. I conclude from the finding that the committee believe that although Warder paid over the money to Hill, Hill paid back some part of it to Warder; that Warder was the recipient of the greater part of the money. In view of their finding, they must have believed that.

But I say here to-day that, in my judgment, the committee have found Warder guilty upon mere suspicion; nothing else. They find him guilty upon the sole ground that he employed a disreputable man. I say respectfully—for I mean to be respectful all the time—but I say with entire confidence, that there can not be found in the evidence anything which warrants the conclusion to which the committee have come; and we are remitted simply to suspicion, based on the fact that Mr. Warder employed a disreputable attorney.

Now, it may be that Hill was a rascal. I do not know whether he was or not. I never heard of the man until this transaction came up. But I say again there is no proof that Warder knew his character. And I say that Hill, being a man of ability, as must be conceded, a plausible man in conversation and manner, he was just the man of all men to impose upon Mr. Warder, who was a newcomer here, who was himself a frank, outspoken man. That is what I believe.

Now, I want to see who this man Hill is. It is said that he has no standing as an attorney. If it were said merely that he is a rascal, perhaps I might assent, although I do not know anything about him; but I want to see whether he is so insignificant a person as we should be led to conclude from the report of the committee. I find from the evidence that Hill was paid $2,500 for his services in the case of Mill, formerly United States marshal, of Arkansas. That is one fee which he received.

Mr. SPRINGER. Who says he received it?

A MEMBER. He says it himself.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Well, I will give you the testimony of somebody else whose credibility you will not impeach. He was assistant counsel for the Louisiana returning board before the Potter investigating committee, having been employed by Judge Edmunds, secretary of the national Republican committee, and he was paid $500 for his services in that case.

A MEMBER. That is enough to condemn him.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Well, I am only speaking of the question of his ability and character as a lawyer, not his character as a man. He must be a man of some ability or he could not have got such employment as he did in these cases. Again, he is now engaged in an important case before the Court of Claims, involving $67,000. He is the leading counsel in that case. One of the members of the committee, the honorable gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. STONE], testifies that he knows the fact that Hill is employed as the leading counsel in that case to-day. So he is not an insignificant man. He is a man of considerable ability. I suppose his ability extends, perhaps, to his rascality. I do not know about that, and I do not care. But I take it that it can not be a just conclusion, that because Mr. Warder happened, owing to circumstances by which any man might be deceived, to employ this disreputable man, therefore it follows Mr. Warder was acting corruptly and knew of the bad character of Mr. Hill. There is nothing, sir, in the testimony of any witness to warrant such a conclusion.

I wish, Mr. Speaker, to call attention to another matter. Hill did give him further advice. There was a time in the progress of this transaction, while this appropriation bill was being considered by the Senate, when Senator HARRISON, and he testifies to it himself, advised Mr. Stealey to get the citizens of Jeffersonville to raise the sum of $25,000 themselves and then to petition Congress for an appropriation of $25,000 more, and, if this should be done, Senator HARRISON thought an appropriation of $25,000 might be voted by Congress. Mr. Stealey went to Hill and communicated to him the counsel of Senator HARRISON. Hill immediately said to him not to act upon that advice, that if they could get $25,000 they could just as easily get an appropriation of $50,000. That advice of Hill's was followed, and no doubt Jeffersonville obtained $25,000 more than she otherwise would have received, and I am glad of it, for Jeffersonville is one of the enterprising and promising cities of my State, and I rejoice in any proper measure which may at any time be adopted tending to promote her growth and prosperity.

Mr. CRAIN. Thirteen hundred dollars was a small fee for that purpose.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Very small. There is no lawyer in Indiana or anywhere else who would render the same service for that amount of money.

I wish to say a word in this connection, as my friend from North Carolina [Mr. COX] has alluded to it, and I do not wish the House to be misinformed in the matter. The honorable gentleman from North Carolina has attacked, with some asperity, the counsel of Mr. Warder in this case. He has indulged in severe criticism of the brief which they have filed. Now I am not here to defend Mr. Warder's counsel. They are abundantly able to take care of themselves. I am not standing here as Mr. Warder's advocate either, except as I deem it my duty as a member of the House and one of his triers.

It is asserted these gentleman, who by the way were both honorable members of the Forty-eighth and several preceding Congresses, Mr. Ellis of Louisiana and Mr. Thompson of Kentucky, attempted to palm off a fraud on this House by attaching the name of Hon. Joseph E. McDonald, of Indiana, to the brief filed in behalf of Mr. Warder. It is, perhaps, but simple justice for me to say that Senator McDonald attended the sittings of this committee for a time, at least, and that Mr. Ellis and Mr. Thompson naturally thought he was counsel in this case, and so thinking, learning he was out of the city when the brief was filed, they deemed it but an act of courtesy to him that his name should be appended to the brief. I wish to have read by the Clerk the letter which Mr. McDonald has written on this subject.

The Clerk read as follows:

RIGGS HOUSE, WASHINGTON, D. C., May 22, 1886.

MY DEAR SIR: On yesterday my attention was called to a brief in the Stealey-Warder matter, which had been under investigation by the Civil-Service Committee of the House, purporting to be signed by me as one of the counsel in the cause. I am sure my name was placed to it under a misapprehension of the facts. I was not at any time attorney in the cause.

At the instance of Mr. Stealey I took an interest in the investigation as a friend of the accused, and consulted with you as one of the counsel in the cause, from which fact, I have no doubt, you inferred I also was of counsel.

I attended two sessions of the committee, and heard the testimony of the chief witnesses from Jeffersonville, but I heard no other part of the testimony, nor have I read it.

I had expected to be called as a witness, as Mr. Stealey informed me that he might need my testimony, but it was not found necessary.

The evidence I heard did not, in my judgment, tend to criminate either of the parties, and I understand the committee fully exonerated Mr. Stealey.

My acquaintance with Mr. Warder, which is of some years' standing, would not lead me to believe that he would embezzle funds placed in his hands.

Very respectfully yours,

J. E. MCDONALD.

Hon. E. JOHN ELLIS.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I do not regard this matter as one of great importance, and I would not have alluded to it but for the fact that unless I misapprehended the remarks of my honorable friend from North Carolina [Mr. COX] there was an attempt made to have it appear that something in the way of fraud had been attempted to be practiced on the House in the defense of this case. I respectfully call the attention of the honorable gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] further to what appears upon the record of the committee as published in this case. I read from the proceedings of the case——

A MEMBER. What page?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. The first page of the record.

COMMITTEE ON REFORM IN THE CIVIL SERVICE,
Friday, April 2, 1886.

The Committee on Reform in the Civil Service, to whom was referred the resolution introduced by Mr. T. M. BROWNE, of Indiana, on the 18th of March last, relative to the appropriation for the Jeffersonville, Ind., levee, met this morning for the purpose of investigating the matter as instructed therein, Mr. COX, chairman, presiding.

Hon. J. E. McDonald of Indiana, Hon. Philip B. Thompson of Kentucky, and Hon. E. J. Ellis of Washington, D. C., appeared as counsel for the parties against whom the charges were made.

I suppose Mr. Ellis and Mr. Thompson very naturally concluded that Mr. McDonald was counsel in the case when they found his name published in the record itself. It would have been an act of the extremest discourtesy to him if they had left his name off that brief. I call the attention of the House to another fact, that although Mr. McDonald disclaims being an attorney in the case at all he bears testimony to the high character of Mr. Warder in the letter which has just been read.

Now, sir, because I am desirous that other gentlemen who are the friends of Mr. Warder, some personally and some because they have read the evidence in the case—because I am desirous that they shall be heard, I do not propose to extend my remarks, but I appeal to the House before they pass final judgment in this case to understand—to consider and ponder well, the evidence upon which they are called to act. I say again, and repeat it with earnestness and emphasis, and I appeal to any lawyer in the House to support me if he has read the evidence, that the findings of this committee are wholly inconsistent with the evidence and are absolutely unsustained by it. And yet it is proposed to send this man forth a branded criminal upon a state of facts on which any jury of his peers, in any court of the land, would promptly acquit him.

I ask any man upon this floor if he would like to be so treated, so tried, or if he could patiently submit to being found guilty upon such an array of testimony? I do feel most earnestly in this matter, because I believe, I repeat, in the man, from my own acquaintance with him, from my own personal knowledge of his character, and from my knowledge of the general reputation he bears in the State where he lives; and knowing him as I do I believe him to be an upright man, and I have as implicit confidence in his integrity and high character as in those of any gentleman upon this floor.

Mr. Speaker, the vicissitudes of life bring varied and varying fortunes; the distribution of Heaven's good gifts to the sons of men is not made in equal measure. To some comes the pride of descent from a noble ancestry; to some come great riches; and to some high position and honor; but the ambition which is born of divine inspiration is to transmit to our posterity the legacy of a good name.

For this it is which shall survive when all else shall perish. It is for the House to say whether the children of Luther F. Warder shall be robbed of this legacy, which surely would have been theirs if they had become fatherless before the report of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service was made. I appeal to you, gentlemen, to try this man upon the rules of law and of evidence.

There can be no appeal from your high verdict. There is no court which can reverse your finding. Either this man goes hence vindicated fully from what those who know him best believe to be a vile and wicked calumny, or he spends the remainder of his life under the shadow of a cloud which can never be lifted.

I do not believe that you will suffer this; my faith rather is that you will send him forth clothed with the badge of innocence—so shall he walk in the golden sunshine which illumines the path of all honest and upright men. [Applause.]

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the remainder of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman has sixteen minutes of his time remaining.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have some indication on the part of gentlemen as to what time they should like this debate to continue?

Mr. MATSON. Several gentlemen desire to be heard, I know.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I reserve the remainder of my time, and hope the House will allow a reasonable length of time for the friends of Mr. Warder to be heard in this case.

Mr. COX. I am simply trying to agree upon some time when the debate shall close. Some members have informed me that they were under the impression the debate would be closed in two hours, and I do not wish to antagonize measures of public importance which gentlemen desire to call up, nor do I wish to impose upon the patience of the House any longer than is absolutely necessary. I hope therefore that gentlemen will indicate a reasonable time within which the debate shall run. Would three hours answer for the gentlemen?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. It seems that two hours on a side would not be an unreasonable time. There are grave and serious charges. I do not know, of course, how many gentlemen may desire to discuss the question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman mean two hours additional?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. No; two hours altogether on each side, making four hours in all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is reasonable.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think we have had debate enough, and the House is ready to vote.

Mr. COX. Does the gentleman mean to indicate that he is willing that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of four hours?

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I think that would be satisfactory.

Mr. COX. Then I ask unanimous consent that the debate shall be closed in two hours from this time.

Mr. WISE. How long has the matter been under consideration?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The debate began at thirty minutes past 11 o'clock. The gentleman from North Carolina now asks unanimous consent that at the expiration of four hours from that time the previous question shall be considered as ordered upon the resolution reported by the committee and the substitute of the gentleman from Indiana. Is there objection?

Mr. ROBERTSON. I object.

Mr. COX. I will call the previous question at that time.

Mr. SPRINGER. I hope the gentleman from Indiana will consent to limit this debate to three hours in all. The House will be just as competent after three hours to vote upon it as they will after four hours. The facts are few and simple, and so far as I am individually concerned I am ready to vote now.

Mr. ROBERTSON. On consultation with gentlemen around me I withdraw the objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there further objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I possibly misapprehend the statement of the gentleman from North Carolina. I only consented that the entire debate should be limited to four hours, under the supposition that we could not get any more. My friends around me, or rather the friends of Mr. Warder, are anxious that more time should be given, and I ask the gentleman from North Carolina now to consent that the previous question be called at the end of five hours from the beginning of the debate; which will give two hours and a half on each side.

Mr. COX. I can not consent to that.

Mr. WISE. I object to that proposition.

Mr. COX. I propose to call the previous question at the end of four hours.

Mr. WARD. Then I agree to the proposition that the previous question shall be considered as ordered at the end of four hours of debate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair again submits the proposition that the previous question be ordered at half past 3 o'clock.

There was no objection.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I desire to make a parliamentary inquiry. Will the chairman of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform be recognized by the Chair to dispense one-half of the remaining time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from North Carolina has ten minutes of his hour remaining, and the gentleman from Indiana has sixteen minutes of his hour remaining. If there be no objection the gentleman from North Carolina will be recognized to apportion the hour and ten minutes remaining on his side, and the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD] will be recognized to apportion the hour and sixteen minutes on his side.

There was no objection.

Mr. COX. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER].

Mr. SPOONER. I am sure it has been no part of my purpose, and I am equally sure it has been no part of the purpose of the Committee on Civil Service Reform, which had this disagreeable matter under inquiry, to do injustice to any officer of this House coming within their scrutiny in the performance of the duty which was delegated to them. The Committee on Civil Service Reform is composed of eight Democratic and five Republican members. Its report upon this matter is a unanimous report, arrived at after a careful hearing of the testimony and a consideration of the case and the questions involved, occupying a period of more than a month, during which I believe they gave earnest, faithful, and honest investigation to this subject, and arrived at the one conclusion which the facts which came to their knowledge warranted. Evidence, I suppose I need hardly suggest to a House composed so largely as this House is of gentlemen of the legal profession, is that which convinces.

No man reading this testimony as it is presented in the pages of this report can arrive at the fair and intelligent conclusion concerning the questions involved that a committee can which, competent for the task, has listened to the testimony as it came from the lips of the witnesses, has seen the bearing of the witnesses upon the stand, has scrutinized their manner of testifying, and carefully digesting the facts, has put them in their proper relationship with one another.

I can not doubt that the House in its consideration of this matter has the same desire which the committee had to arrive at a just conclusion. If I could be satisfied that I was wrong in the conclusion which I have reached, no one more readily than I would concede the fact, for I would be among the last of those who would undertake directly or indirectly to blacken the fair fame of any man or attempt to punish him improperly.

But, Mr. Speaker, under the oath of office which I have taken here and in the performance of my duty upon the committee to which this matter was assigned, not by the committee's request but by the order of the House, I can only do that which, in the light of the testimony and under the responsibility of my position here and upon that committee, seems to my conscience just and proper. I must lend my voice and my vote, now and whenever circumstances require, to maintain the dignity and integrity of this House and its proceedings; and whenever it becomes my duty, as it evidently has upon this occasion, I shall not hesitate to express my judgment concerning any matter relating thereto which may be committed to my consideration.

The time which I have is very limited, and I can not attempt therefore to go into the extended consideration of this testimony which its character and importance properly demands. I must content myself with referring briefly, as it necessarily must be, to those salient points in this testimony and this case which have largely compelled me to arrive at the judgment which I have formed.

No one who knows Mr. Warder can question that he is a shrewd, intelligent man of the world. He has had large experience. He has been mayor of the city of Jeffersonville. He has been in public and official life. He has mingled with men. He shows and exhibited to the committee those traits of intelligence and ability which justify the committee in measuring his acts by the standard they would apply to those of any man possessing those characteristics in similar circumstances.

Now, Mr. Warder admits that this money was received by him. He admits that while an officer of this House he received it for the purpose of influencing legislation concerning the appropriation for the Jeffersonville levee. When he is asked what he did with this $1,250 he tells the committee, as appears in his testimony here, that he employed one E. N. Hill and paid him this amount of money.

If Mr. Warder had employed a reputable attorney and paid him this $1,250 which came to his hands, I am not by any means prepared to say he would be excusable for his connection with this matter; but he certainly would stand in a very different attitude in my apprehension from that which he now occupies; for he would at least have a reputable witness to verify his now doubtful or incredible and unsupported story. I can not stop to tell the House who and what this man Hill is; a man without character; a man who has been engaged in the most questionable transactions; a man who has been a pirate in politics and a mercenary everywhere; a man who is irresponsible for a five-dollar loan; who could have been employed, if his employment was desired in any matter, for a very trifling compensation; the last selection of any honorable, intelligent man for legitimate service in forwarding Congressional legislation.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SPOONER. I wish the Chairman would give me a few minutes more.

Mr. COX. The gentleman can have three minutes more.

Mr. SPOONER. Then, Mr. Speaker, I must hurry on. Whatever the employment that Hill is alleged to have been secured for, he did nothing. He was first employed, as he and Warder testify, on the 13th of May, 1884. The only thing that Warder pretends that Hill ever did in this case, the only thing that Hill himself pretends he did in this connection, was to advise that this appropriation should be urged upon the ground that it was for the protection of the Government property at Jeffersonville.

Now, bear in mind that it was not till the 13th of May that Hill was first employed. It is also a fact that on the 4th of April, nearly a month preceding Hill's employment, Mr. Stockslager, then a member of this House, had introduced here a bill for the protection of that same Government property at Jeffersonville, Ind., by the construction of levees, the identical project that Mr. Warder and Mr. Hill claim that Hill originated. It is also a matter of fact that on the 1st of March preceding, nearly two months and a half before the employment of Hill, Senator HARRISON had introduced in the Senate a resolution of inquiry addressed to the Secretary of War, asking for information on this same subject as a basis for appropriation; and the report of the Chief of Engineers in response to that inquiry, concerning the protection of those Government works by levees, is dated on the 19th of April, 1884, nearly a month prior to the time when Warder and Hill would have us believe that the project of protecting the Government works there by levees was originated by Hill. Hill appeared before no committee, conferred with no member or Senator, and did nothing and could have done nothing to forward that legislation, as Warder must have known.

All that was done in connection with this project in either House of Congress was done by the Senators from Indiana and the Representative of the district upon this floor, Mr. Stockslager; and there is no evidence and no pretense that Hill knew anything about what they were doing or what they did, or performed any professional service in the matter.

It is a larger draft on my credulity than I can conscientiously honor to ask me to believe, upon Warder's statement, indorsed by Hill, that a man of intelligence and experience would have paid so considerable a sum as $1,250 in such circumstances for such utterly worthless and entirely unnecessary services.

Mr. WARD. I now yield ten minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER].

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. Speaker, under ordinary circumstances no man in this House would hesitate longer than myself to antagonize the report of a committee; but, sir, I have done in this case what I believe very few members of the House have done—I have read every single word of the evidence, and I have come to the conclusion, after mature deliberation, that the resolution reported by the Committee on Civil Service Reform ought not to be adopted by this House.

The chairman of the committee asks this question: "Are the charges against Mr. Warder true?" Now, sir, I want the committee itself to answer the question thus propounded by its chairman. The charge against Mr. Warder I find to be this:

Whereas there is pending in the Forty-eighth Congress a bill containing, among other matters, an appropriation of $50,000 for a certain improvement of the Ohio River at or near Jeffersonville, Ind., known as the Jeffersonville levee appropriation; and

Whereas it is charged by a reputable citizen of Indiana that during the pendency of said measure a person or persons, then officers of the House of Representatives, exacted, collected, and accepted from a person or persons interested in the success of the said appropriation a large sum of money upon the pretense or for the purpose of influencing Congress, or some committee thereof, or Members or Senators in their official action thereon; and.

That, sir, is the charge upon which Mr. Warder was tried, and now, as I have said, I propose to let the committee answer the question of its chairman. They say in their report that the testimony establishes the fact that no part of the $1,250 paid by the people of Jeffersonville was used, or attempted to be used, in corruptly influencing any member of either branch of the Forty-eighth Congress. Therefore I say that the committee have themselves answered the question of the chairman whether or not the charge has been sustained, and have said to this House that the allegation upon which Mr. Warder was tried is not sustained by the evidence.

Mr. Speaker, we have testimony in this case that is worth our while to examine. In the first place, two members of the last Congress, Mr. Ellis, of Louisiana, and Mr. Thompson, of Kentucky, say that, "As lawyers and honest men, and with a keen appreciation of the dignity and honor of this House, we have carefully and closely read all the evidence adduced in this investigation, and we do most solemnly aver and declare that the charges against Mr. Warder are not sustained, and that the resolutions reported by the committee are unwarranted, unjust, cruel, and severe." Ex-Senator McDonald, who has been called into this controversy, has given his testimony, and he says, "The evidence I heard did not, in my judgment, tend to criminate either of the parties, and I understand the committee fully exonerate Mr. Stealey."

We have a gentleman in this House who stands as high, I apprehend, as any member of this body, Hon. JONAS G. HOWARD, of Indiana. He was a member of the committee that came on here to Washington to press this appropriation for the works of Jeffersonville, and he on the witness stand gave this testimony:

Q. You helped to raise that money, the $1,000 or the $1,250?
A. I advised them to raise it, and thought it was necessary to do so. Afterwards a note was presented to me and I either signed it as a surety or as a principal; I do not remember which. I had the impression that some one or other of the signers brought it to me, and that I occupied the position of surety on it; but I was willing to pay my proportion of it, and advised that the money be sent; and if I had not advised it the money would not have been sent. It was sent here for the purpose alleged in the letter, that they wanted it to employ a man here to assist in getting it through.
Q. Were they counsel, lawyers, or what?
A. I do not know; I thought some lawyer, to give an opinion upon what was thought best to do in the matter, or some men who were not lawyers, who knew how to manage a scheme of that kind. That would be my judgment, without ever having been here or had any legislative experience.
Q. What was that money to be used for—any illegal or unlawful purpose?
A. Of course not.
Q. Was it open and notoriously known there?
A. I was attending to my own business, but it was understand by me that it was no secret, and my advice always was to send the money.
Q. And at that time you were a candidate for Congress?
A. Yes, we were in the fight. I was nominated on the 15th of May.
Q. Then it was after you were nominated that the money was sent?
A. Yes, sir; this committee that Goldbach was on was here before I put my name on the note.
Q. You raised the money after you were a candidate?
A. I think the money was not raised until some time in July.
Q. Now, Mr. HOWARD, you came here first to Washington in the capacity of a visiting committee?
A. Yes, sir.
Q. Did your experience here cause you to advise the employment of counsel in this matter who would give it special attention?
A. Well, sir, I should do that now after my experience here. I would want somebody to look after it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the allegation in this case involved not only Mr. Warder, but Mr. Stealey also, and let us see how the case stands as to Mr. Stealey. The committee say:

The only other employé of the House of Representatives in any way connected with the charges under investigation is Mr. O. O. Stealey. It appears that Mr. Stealey was cognizant of the employment of Hill, and loaned Mr. Warder the sum of $250 for that alleged purpose, which sum was repaid Mr. Stealey by the citizens of Jeffersonville.

Now let us hear Mr. Stealey's own testimony on the subject:

Q. Mr. Stealey, please tell the committee what connection you had with procuring this levee appropriation for Jeffersonville; when you first undertook it, and all about it.
A. I am a citizen and tax-payer of Jeffersonville; all my interests are there, and my family lives there. They had floods there in 1883 and in 1884 which destroyed the town pretty much, and I was asked by friends to assist here in Washington in securing this appropriation, which I did. I went to Senator Harrison frequently, and I went to Senator Voorhees, and to members of the House, and did all that man could do for his town in that respect.
* * * * * * *
Q. Something was said about you having paid out $250.
A. I loaned Mr. Warder $250.
Q. What was that for?
A. He told me at the time that he wanted to or had employed an attorney. I asked him who the man was, and he said it was Hill. I then asked him what he knew about the man and was he a good man, and he said: "I think so; I talked to him, and he seems to have a good idea of legislation." I then asked him where the money was to come from, and he answered: "Prominent tax-payers want this done, and I am authorized by Mr. Goldbach to employ an attorney, or some man to watch this bill."

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that upon the testimony given by Mr. Stealey himself, which I have just read, it is a most extraordinary circumstance that this committee should find Mr. Warder guilty and yet find Mr. Stealey innocent of this charge. Why, sir, Mr. Stealey knew that Warder had employed Hill; Stealey took the money out of his own pocket and handed it to Warder for that purpose, which money the citizens of Jeffersonville subsequently repaid to Stealey. Yet the committee say that Stealey is innocent while Warder is guilty. If I buy a pistol and hand it to my neighbor to shoot a man down, I ask this House if I am not equally guilty with the man who commits the murder? And I ask the House this further question: If this man Stealey, who took this money from his own pocket, knowing what it was wanted for, and thereby enabled Warder to use the money for that purpose—if he is innocent, how can Warder be guilty?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I protest against this discrimination. I protest against this committee striking down one man and allowing another man who is equally guilty go free. I protest against this committee or this House striking down a brave Union soldier because a man who was a deserter from the confederate army and a personal enemy to the accused has come forward to prefer charges against him, as is the case here. I am not going to detain the House. I have read this testimony—every word of it. I am not a lawyer, but I undertake under all circumstances to do justice as between man and man. I say it might be right for this House to censure both these men. Very likely they were both guilty of an indiscretion. But when this committee undertakes to declare this one man guilty of an offense deserving expulsion, and the other man guilty of no offense whatever, it is making a discrimination which the intelligent judgment, the good sense, and honesty, and integrity of the House will not, in my opinion, sustain by its vote. Sir, my vote will be given against the committee's report. I shall be neither principal nor accessory to a wrong which I think is unprecedented in this House, and if done to-day will not, I think, be repeated in the future. [Applause.]

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I look upon the functions of a committee of investigation as somewhat similar to those of a master or commissioner in chancery, whose duty it is to take testimony and report it to the court with such recommendations as he may think proper within the terms of the order. I look upon the members of the House in this matter as standing in the attitude of judges to take that testimony and conscientiously examine it so that their votes may really be judgments based upon the evidence. Of course, Mr. Speaker, in such a proceeding a judge in equity or a member of Congress is always at some disadvantage, because he reads the testimony as it appears on the printed page and has not the benefit of the impression that is necessarily made upon those who hear the witnesses depose and who mark their demeanor under cross-examination. But the best we can do is to take this testimony and try to find what is established by it.

Having read the testimony in this case from beginning to end with such care as the practice of my profession has taught me to exercise, I have, in spite of a prejudice which I could not entirely remove, come to the conclusion that the judgment reached by the committee is not warranted by the testimony reported to the House. I have no criticism to make upon the committee. It is solely in discharge of the duty required of me to vote on this question that I have attempted to understand the testimony so that I might vote intelligently.

The facts as shown by the testimony—the uncontradicted facts, facts which, so far as the testimony that I hold in my hand goes, are without contradictory evidence—are that Mr. Warder, a citizen of Jeffersonville, Ind., having been its mayor and then an employé and officer of this House, was requested by an official act of the council of Jeffersonville to aid in the obtaining of an appropriation of $50,000 to prevent the recurrence of an overflow of the Ohio River and the consequent damage therefrom.

Mr. FINDLAY. Do I understand my friend to say he finds from the evidence that Mr. Warder was employed by the city council of Jeffersonville?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. No, sir; I did not say employed; or, if I did, I will now say "requested."

Mr. FINDLAY. In what way?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. By a committee of which Mr. Shuler was the secretary, of which Mr. Jonas Howard and others were members, which committee had been requested to come here and see about this matter.

Mr. FINDLAY. Now, I desire to say to my friend from Kentucky, with all deference to him, that I do not think he has read the evidence with that care with which I know he usually reads the testimony in cases with which he is professionally connected. If he will allow me to say——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I am perfectly willing to yield to the gentleman, if it does not come out of the few minutes allowed me.

Mr. FINDLAY. Of course this is an important point, and ought to be corrected right here. There were two committees. If my friend will look at the testimony——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, there were two committees that came here at different times.

Mr. FINDLAY. The first was a legally authorized committee. The second committee was composed of three persons, Mr. Jonas Howard, Mr. Clark, and Mr. Goldbach. Mr. Clark was the only member of the committee who had any authority from the city council to come here. Mr. Howard did not come. Mr. Goldbach was substituted in Mr. Howard's place by Mr. Howard.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Yes, sir, that is true.

Mr. FINDLAY. Well, I do not think you can make a "request" out of that.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. Authority was delegated to him to employ an attorney.

Mr. FINDLAY. Authority from Howard to Goldbach.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The fact is, then, as I stated, that Mr. Warder was requested by a committee to aid in obtaining this appropriation. As the gentleman from Maryland says, Mr. Howard was originally a member of the committee. Mr. Howard could not come, and Mr. Goldbach came in his place. That committee represented the town of Jeffersonville, and that committee requested Mr. Warder to act. It is a mere "sticking in the bark"——

Mr. FINDLAY. Not at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It is a mere "sticking in the bark" to say because one of the three members of the committee staid at home and nominated another citizen as his proxy, who did come, that the request made by this second committee was not an authorized request.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that is too narrow a ground to put the disgrace of a man upon.

Mr. FINDLAY. It is if true, but unfortunately it is not true. Mr. Goldbach was the man when he came to Washington who says he gave this authority to Mr. Warder. There is no proof in this case that Mr. Clark, the second man on the committee, ever united in the request. Mr. Clark comes here as a substitute, but does not show how he became a substitute.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. The fact is shown by the testimony, and it is making a mountain out of a mole hill and an elephant track out of a mouse track to attempt to build up an argument upon the absence of the authority of Mr. Goldbach, representing as a member of the committee from Jeffersonville his right to ask of this citizen, an ex-mayor of Jeffersonville, the duty of helping that town to have an appropriation to prevent the recurrence of a disastrous flood is clear.

Mr. FINDLAY. I only want to set you right.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think, sir, the statement I made, and which I repeat under the full knowledge I think of the testimony, is that Mr. Warder was requested by a committee from Jeffersonville to see if this appropriation could not be made. Mr. Speaker, whether requested or not, he was a citizen of the town of Jeffersonville, his family living there; had been one of its citizens; was now upon the ground; and the thing asked by the town was a thing the citizens of Jeffersonville were greatly interested in, and was not an improper thing to do.

Passing from that, Mr. Speaker, whether properly or not does not affect the argument, I desire to submit he came to the conclusion and decided he would not be of any efficient service, that it was better to retain a man skilled as an attorney, and he says he employed, and I am not commenting upon the verity of the testimony, about which, of course, I can only judge by the testimony itself—but speaking from the testimony of the committee as reported itself, that testimony, not the suspicion, not the conjectures, not the guesses of anybody, not the beliefs of anybody, but the testimony is that he employed a man by the name of Hill, that he employed him with a bargain that he was to have $250 down and $1,000 after the act was passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP in the chair). The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I ask the gentleman from Indiana to give me five minutes more.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I will yield to the gentleman for that time.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not desire to take up so much of the time of the House, but it was because of the colloquy with the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY], and I will now proceed. He paid that $250, and he paid the other $1,000 after the bill was passed, as both Warder and Hill testified, and there is not a single word of contradiction but some of corroboration.

Now, the committee report one important fact as the conclusion to which they come, and as to which there is no contrariety, so that we get rid of one phase in the case which might require severe punishment. It is that the testimony shows no portion of the $1,250 paid by the people of Jeffersonville was used or attempted to be used in corruptly influencing any member of either House of Congress. Therefore the only act Mr. Warder was guilty of was that he acted as the conduit through which $1,250 of the money of the people of Jeffersonville passed into the pockets of Mr. Hill for the purpose of having the appropriation made.

Say it was wrong that he did employ an attorney for this purpose, he himself being at the time an employé of this House; admit, if you please, that it was improper for him as an employé of this House to interest himself in an appropriation for his own town, still is it conceivable that that impropriety should be regarded as such a crime by this House as to warrant his being dismissed in disgrace?

Mr. Speaker, the objection I have to the report of the committee is that it obliterates the distinction between crime and impropriety. It is no such crime—a citizen of a town interesting himself in an appropriation for his town, being himself an employé at the time of the House which makes the appropriation, employing a lawyer and paying a fee for that service—as it is to receive money for a corrupt purpose, for the purpose of effecting or influencing legislation and using that money for such corrupt purposes. There is a broad distinction between the two; and yet we, if this report is adopted, inflict upon this man all of the punishment, the extremest punishment that could possibly be inflicted upon him even if this money had been used for corrupt purposes. We go back to the old days when the man who stole a shilling was hung as well as he who murdered by poison.

We obliterate all discrimination between crime and impropriety. Sir, I have tried, from the testimony, to come to a just conclusion. I have no other feeling in it. The fact that Mr. Warder was a citizen of Kentucky at one time, that he served in a most gallant regiment under a most gallant and meritorious officer of the Federal Army, only strengthens my desire to do him justice under the testimony.

But the point I desire to make is, that the committee itself do not report corruption. They report that the story about the payment is suspicious, but not that he is guilty of that perjury which must be necessary and of which he would be guilty if he did not pay the money; nor do they find him guilty of the embezzlement necessary if he had pocketed it. They simply report that the story is suspicious and they do not believe it; and that report leaves the matter just in this condition: that a man did have $1,250 put into his hands, out of which he paid a lawyer $250 at one time and $1,000 thereafter; that he did not corruptly influence or try to influence anybody; that he approached nobody improperly or used any improper means with anybody to do anything; and the sole question for the House to determine is, whether under such circumstances punishment such as is here recommended shall be inflicted. I do not believe it just.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me, and I say it with all respect to the committee and with all respect to its members, that those who read the testimony will come to a conclusion opposite to that which the committee has reached. It seems to me that this great punishment is not at all proportionate to the offense as established by the testimony; and thus believing, when the friends of this man asked me my opinion and I had given it to them, I thought it was no more than proper that I should express openly and fully on the floor of the House the same opinion I had given to them on an examination of the testimony.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, two things are involved in this investigation: In the first place the dignity, the purity, and the integrity of the proceedings of this House; in the second place the character of one who has been a reputable citizen. Like the committee who report this resolution, and like every gentleman here who values his own good name, I have endeavored to take care that the dignity of this House shall be duly and most scrupulously defended. On the other hand, not for the sake of our own personal character, nor for the sake of the character of this House, nor for the sake of the character of anybody, should any gentleman who sits here clothed with the power and dignity of a judge venture to trespass in any degree upon the character even of the humblest citizen of the land. For my part, sir, I do not take into account, and small would be the man indeed who should, in my humble judgment, the fact that this man has or might have worn the blue or the gray or whether he is here as a Republican or a Democrat or neither. He is an officer of the House, and we are the representatives of the people, and that is all our relation.

Now, sir, the facts of this case when summed up and boiled down are simply these: That an officer of this House received from a gentleman in the community where he lived, in no secret manner, a very reputable citizen so far as we know and so far as the record shows of that community, a certain sum of money to be paid to an attorney, which attorney was to exercise his skill in some way, whether by argument before the committee or not, or whether in legitimate ways or not, does not appear, and there is a blank as to that. There can be no presumption against an estimable citizen of criminality unless the circumstances fairly prove it. Now, sir, in my humble opinion that any officer of this House should lay hold of matters of legislation which are to be dealt with, and should have to do with them, is an impropriety.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. DANIEL. Certainly.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Is there any evidence anywhere to show that even this man Hill, after having been employed as an attorney, ever approached any member of the House?

Mr. COBB. The testimony is just the other way.

Mr. DANIEL. There is no testimony that a dollar of the money was corruptly used; and nothing but inferential and conjectural testimony, which is a mere matter of suspicion, according to the varying minds of men who may devote their attention to the matter, that any money was intended to be used corruptly.

But there is this about it: The very nature of the contract made, with a contingent fee dependent upon the passage of a bill in this House, was against public policy, and that fee could not be recovered in a court of law if it had been sued for. It was a grossly improper transaction, but it was not a transaction which by any court has ever been held to partake of criminality or to require the visitation of severe judgments.

Now, sir, it seems to me that standing in this attitude, having to deal with our own characters and with the dignity of the House of Representatives, and having to deal with the character of a reputable citizen with an equitable and just judgment, not straining the mind to take hold of suspicions and inferences and conjectures, which are involved in fog and uncertainty; nor on the other hand yielding to that looseness of legislation and that looseness of morals which perhaps has been gone too far with in many transactions—that we should deal with this matter just as it is proved to be—"nothing extenuating, nor setting down aught in malice," and that this officer should be censured for an improper transaction; whereas a just and equitably-minded man, reviewing all the circumstances and partaking of just indignation against any impropriety in legislative concerns, would say that judgment was too harsh and too severe which degraded a citizen so far as to dismiss him from the public employment.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FARQUHAR].

Mr. FARQUHAR. I wish to be very brief and very pointed in the few remarks I may make as a member of the committee, not merely in vindication of the findings of the committee, but to look at one or two points brought out in the testimony, and that have led in all likelihood to the findings of the committee in their report.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say as a member of this House and as a citizen, that this whole Jeffersonville investigation, from beginning to end, is so besmirched with circumstances brought out in the evidence, and that have led to the findings of the committee, that I almost feel glad that it has come to this House to be turned over to it to be ultimately settled; but I hope that no other investigation of this kind may ever again come before a committee of which I am a member.

From the first day that a delegation was sent from Jeffersonville until the last dollar of money was turned over by Mr. Warder to this so-called briefless barrister, there is a history of circumlocution with men's characters, and men's actions, and men's motives thoroughly involved; and in the midst of all of it there was a good deal of politics and political trickery.

During the investigation I took occasion to ask Mr. Warder on the witness-stand why it was that he did not consult with the Representative on this floor of that district, Mr. Stockslager, who certainly knew more about the matter than he could, and had more interest in it than he had. I asked him why he was not the man to consult, and to go to Senator VOORHEES and Senator HARRISON when this bill passed out of the House without this designation of $50,000 of appropriation—why the Representative of the people in this House was not the man to be consulted about it? I shall give the House Mr. Warder's answer. Here is his explanation of the whole transaction. It is the explanation why Mr. Stockslager got left.

By Mr. FARQUHAR:

Q. The receipt for $250 is dated May 13. How long before that date did you hire this man Hill?

A. I think a day or two previous to that.

Q. Now, in all this time intervening between the hiring of Hill until the passage of this designation of appropriation, can you give this committee a reason why you never told Mr. Stockslager that you had hired this man?

A. I suppose I can, sir.

Q. That is just it.

A. If that is just it I think I can satisfy you. I want to be very particular, because there is some little delicacy about it. I think I will make a statement that will be reasonable, and if it does not convince you, I am thoroughly convinced: In the first place Mr. Stockslager was a candidate for re-election, and my county and my city and my people were friendly to Mr. Stockslager up to the time that Mr. Jonas G. Howard, a citizen of our city, was induced to become a candidate. I had received an appointment as assistant doorkeeper in the House of Representatives under the Doorkeeper, and I was credited to Mr. Stockslager, while in reality and in truth Mr. Stockslager had nothing to do with my appointment. But still I was willing that it should be so, and I was friendly to him at the time. Naturally, I suppose, Mr. Stockslager thought I ought to support him in his candidacy. Mr. Howard was my neighbor and my friend, and of course I could not support Mr. Stockslager. I went to him and told him so. I told him I intended to support Mr. Howard and to do all I could for him. That caused a little estrangement between Mr. Stockslager and myself, and I never consulted with Mr. Stockslager about this thing in my life.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. FARQUHAR. I ask the chairman of the committee to yield me just another minute.

Mr. COX. I yield the gentleman another minute.

Mr. FARQUHAR. Now, as a member of the committee I base my whole action on this. An officer of this House by his own volition, of his own will and act, exacted from citizens of Jeffersonville $1,250 for the influencing of legislation. He sought his own way to influence it. It was through a briefless barrister, a nobody, who stands before a committee of this House perjured. He swore before the Hot Springs investigation committee that he had lied on the witness-stand. And when I asked Mr. Warder "did you not pay too dear for your whistle," he answered they had.

Now, with all the circumstances of the case, with no animus against this gentleman, because in my view he has done his duty in this House diligently and well, I can not with the rest of the committee rest under the stigma that any feeling has entered into their report. And let me say not a line of brief was written by Hill, not a consultation was had by him; Hill was a man of no repute and was a poor man to hire at an awfully big figure.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I yield ten minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. WADSWORTH].

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. Speaker, I have found time to read the entire testimony in this case, the report of the committee, and the brief of counsel, not only because I wished to know the facts before passing upon the question of the expulsion of an officer of this House, but also because of my long acquaintance with the gentleman principally concerned, Mr. Warder. He was born and raised in my district and my neighborhood, and many of his kinfolk reside there to-day, people of most eminent respectability and worth. Mr. Warder volunteered in the county of Fleming in the fall of 1861 as a private soldier in a company of the Sixteenth Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, one of the finest regiments that ever served under our flag, a regiment raised in my own county and the adjoining counties of my district by Col. Charles A. Marshall, one of the worthiest citizens of the State.

It is no small praise to say that in such a regiment Mr. Warder rapidly rose to the rank of captain. Under these circumstances I took an interest in the case which led me to make a thorough investigation of it by reading the testimony, the report of the committee, and the brief of counsel, and I confess that I was agreeably disappointed upon reading that testimony after the report of the committee had been filed. The effect of that reading was to entirely change my impression of the case. About the facts as shown by this testimony there is no room for a difference of opinion. The crime or the impropriety, whichever gentlemen choose to call it, consists in the fact that Mr. Warder, by the authority of his fellow-citizens of Jeffersonville, employed a lawyer to counsel him in relation to the question of an appropriation pending before Congress, in which his neighbors were deeply interested. The fact that the lawyer employed was a man of poor reputation is, in my judgment, a small and unimportant circumstance in the case. My opinion is that the offense, if it be an offense, would have been the same if the lawyer had been a man of high standing, because there is no evidence to show that Mr. Warder, new as he was to the men and business of this city, had any notice that Mr. Hill was not a lawyer in good standing.

The case is simply the case of an officer of this House employing counsel to advise him as far as he could properly do so in the interest of an appropriation pending before Congress for the benefit of the town in which he lived. It seems to me that the motives of the gentleman in making this employment are in question and nothing else, and

I think our friend from Rhode Island [Mr. SPOONER] concedes that when he says that even if the lawyer had been reputable, still he is not quite clear in his own mind that Mr. Warder would have been blameless.

Mr. SPOONER. I simply meant to say that he would then have had a reputable man to corroborate him.

Mr. WADSWORTH. It is perfectly clear, Mr. Speaker, that if this lawyer had been among the members of the bar in high standing this case would have been whistled down the wind, and this blow is aimed at Luth Warder simply because shortly after his coming to Washington he employed a man who upon cross-examination seems to have been employed theretofore in performing questionable exploits. Now, the motive of Mr. Warder in making the employment was honest or it was corrupt. If it was honest, this report can not be justified. The employment of counsel for and on behalf of his townsmen is all that he is responsible for. The testimony is absolute that the money was raised publicly in the town of Jeffersonville, where Mr. Warder lives, and that the most reputable citizens there knew all about it. It was not done in a corner.

It was no secret. It was not fraud trying to cover up its steps; it was the open manifestation of the anxiety of the citizens of Jeffersonville to procure some assistance from the national Treasury. At the request of these people, Mr. Warder made this employment, not to influence legislation corruptly, not to buy any committeeman or Congressman. No committeeman, no legislator was approached. There was no secret proceeding of any kind. The money was raised by the people of the town, and part of it was paid to Mr. Stealey, who had advanced $250, and, after the passage of the bill, $1,000 was sent to Mr. Warder, and he paid it to Hill. If he is to blame, he is to blame for having employed this man at the solicitation or request of his fellow-citizens while he was an officer of this House. Now, if that was a mistake it was a mistake that any gentleman might have made, and probably would have made under the same circumstances, and does not imply any corrupt motive.

If it was criminal Mr. Stealey is just as criminal as Mr. Warder. He knew that Hill was to be employed. He furnished the money to employ him, and the committee show that they are not sure of their ground when they leave Mr. Stealey out. If they had felt certain that the employment of Hill under these circumstances was a criminal act which should be visited by expulsion, they certainly never could have exonerated Mr. Stealey. Why, it is in proof that he sent a friend to suppress the investigation and offered to pay the money back, and he is the man that advanced the money to employ Hill and interested himself to secure the appropriation.

We are asked to brand an officer of this House as criminal simply because, at the solicitation of his fellow-citizens, he employed a lawyer to advise in a matter pending before Congress. Now, the committee do not mean that. The chairman of the committee says that we have not seen the men testify, that we have not had an opportunity to see the manner of the witnesses. The committee are of opinion that there is something not disclosed by the evidence.

But, Mr. Speaker, I protest against condemning an officer of this House upon any such ground as that. The evidence is all we have. The testimony is absolutely clear and convincing that the people of Jeffersonville raised this money openly and above-board; that they wanted this lawyer employed, that they requested their fellow-citizen to employ him, and that they paid him. That is all clear from the proof in the case, and I protest against going behind the proof and inferring something merely because the testimony may show that the man employed was not a reputable lawyer. To condemn an officer of this House upon any mere inference of that kind is to do an act of injustice and can not in any way promote the dignity or maintain the character of the House, which seems to be the end in view.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I have already yielded to three gentlemen consecutively, and I now ask that the other side dispose of a part of their time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRISP). Does the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. COX] desire to yield to anybody?

Mr. COX. Not at this moment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state that at half past 3 o'clock the vote must be taken, and any delay in occupying the floor reduces of course the time allowed for debate. If there is no desire to continue the debate further the Chair will put the question.

Mr. COX. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BROWNE].

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, if I can have the attention of the House I propose to talk about this case. I have no feeling whatever as to its result. I have long believed that truth, when it has a fair opportunity, will vindicate itself. It was one of the earliest things I learned that you might fortify a falsehood—attempt to make it appear a truth—but the time would come in God's providence when the light would shine through it and show its real character. With your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, I will present this case as it seems to me to be disclosed by the testimony. I will begin by saying that the original fact of the receipt of $1,250 by Mr. Warder is not denied by him. It is an admitted fact in the case. Here I wish to say that an attack has been made upon John M. Glass, who seems to have furnished the statement upon which the charge was made.

I do not deem it necessary to say a word in vindication of Mr. Glass. It is enough to say that he does not testify to a single fact which is not admitted to be true even by the defense. I challenge any gentleman to refer to a single fact in this case testified to by John M. Glass that is not conceded to be true. Why then assail him?

Now, $1,250 having been received by Warder, for what purpose was it received? My distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. WADSWORTH] says it was raised by citizens of Jeffersonville for the purpose of having a lawyer employed to secure this appropriation of $50,000. Where in the record does that appear? It seems that after two committees had come from Jeffersonville for the purpose of influencing Congress or some committee to consider favorably this contemplated appropriation, a dispatch was sent by a gentleman of Jeffersonville to know whether it would be better to send a third committee. Why, sir, the second one, according to the testimony of Mr. Goldbach, did nothing for two mortal weeks but eat and drink and look at Congressmen and draw their pay! But a telegram was sent to Mr. Warder inquiring whether it would not be better to send another committee; and he telegraphed in reply, I do not undertake to repeat his language, for I do not remember it, but substantially he replied that they might as well throw their money away as to send a committee here. He thought it best to employ some one here.

Now, that advice came from Mr. Warder himself. Mr. JONAS G. HOWARD, the distinguished gentleman who now represents that district, was thought to possess no sufficient influence to be of value if he should return; nor was it conceived that any other distinguished citizen of Jeffersonville could render any service by coming here. Warder and Hill seemed to be the men who Warder thought should figure in the case.

But I pass hurriedly on; for I have but fifteen minutes. Mr. Warder suggests that he had employed or would employ—my recollection is that he states he had employed—whom? One of the witnesses who is not impeached says "an influential friend;" another states "a competent person;" and a third, swearing in regard to Mr. Warder's statement, says "an attorney." Mr. Warder had employed either "an influential friend," "a competent person," or "an attorney." Before I pass from this point I want to say that notwithstanding the fact that this matter was discussed in the newspapers of Jeffersonville and Louisville for two years, becoming, I may say, a matter of notoriety, a public scandal, yet I dare any gentleman to point to the place in the record where the name of this attorney was ever disclosed until it was disclosed to the committee during the investigation.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I assert that the record in this case shows that this matter entered into local politics, became a matter of local controversy through the newspapers; men ran for office on the platform of reimbursing or not reimbursing these men who raised the money. Yet for the first time the name of the attorney is disclosed during the committee's investigation. It is true that Mr. Goldbach says that some time after the transaction was over he saw a letter in which the name of an attorney was given, and it was a short name, but he does not remember what it was. But it is a little singular that when this matter became one of public controversy some explanation was not made to the people. Further than this, when this money was reimbursed by the city council and the bill was presented it was for expenses incurred in procuring the appropriation, but neither the name of Hill nor the name of any other attorney is mentioned, nor is the receipt of any attorney filed in connection with the matter. Nor did the bill mention an attorney's fee at all——

Mr. BYNUM. Will my colleague permit a question?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Not now.

Mr. BYNUM. My colleague asked to be shown where in the record this name is mentioned.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Yes; I know what the record is.

Mr. BYNUM. If the gentleman will yield, I can point out where the name is mentioned.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. You will have an opportunity.

Mr. ROBERTSON (holding up a copy of the evidence). Here, it is right here.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Read it.

Mr. ROBERTSON. You can read it yourself.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I do not know what the gentleman refers to. There is in this case an intimation from some witness, perhaps more than one, that in some conversation in the city of Jeffersonville a name was mentioned; but I say if it was mentioned it was kept in the breasts of these men, and the public who were concerned in the matter were never informed in reference to it. After this thing had gone through the newspapers the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors [Mr. WILLIS] noticed the controversy and informed Mr. John M. Glass that if the citizens of Jeffersonville or its council had paid any money for this purpose they had been "taken in" by some Washington "shark," as there was no necessity for the payment of the money or any part of it.

But I must pass on. It is admitted that this money was paid, that it was received by Mr. Warder. It was received either that he might thereby influence legislation or that he might procure somebody else to do it. Now the inquiry comes, what became of it?

That is the question. Let us discuss it fairly. What became of it? Says my distinguished friend from Kentucky [Mr. WADSWORTH], he employed an attorney. Who? Let us talk about it as sensible men. Suppose you, or some of you, become trustees of your neighbors to use $1,250 in the employment of an attorney, do you not want to know who the attorney is, to know something of his standing in the profession, to know something about his character as a man? Do you not want to be introduced to him by somebody, not want to know him? No, it is not insisted on here that Warder knew of Hill's standing, but it is admitted he was never introduced as an attorney or anything else. But Warder finds a man wandering about these corridors and picks up a little passing acquaintance with him. He discovers in conversation with him that he "knew more about levees than any man he ever struck." And one day afterward, in conversation with Hill, he told him he had a levee matter on hand, and wanted to know how to proceed. I give the substance of his testimony and the testimony of Hill. "I am a man of business," said Hill, "and generally get something for my service. Give me $250 down, and I will begin to talk to you." The inquiry was: Where is your office, and when will you be there? Without another word the bargain was made. The same evening, or the evening of the next day, he goes to Hill's office and shells out $250, and agrees he will pay him a thousand more when the bill becomes a law. Up to this time he does not ask any one about Hill. Up to this time he has not made inquiry of anybody about Hill. Up to this time he has conferred with no one about Hill's employment. He did not ask Mr. Stealey about him, as has been asserted. Mr. Stealey asked Warder, when he was informed Hill had been employed: What do you know about this man? Is he a good man? He said: "I do not know anything about him. I casually met him here, and he seems to know all about levees." That was after Hill was employed.

Mr. ROBERTSON rose.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana, Now, would you, my friend, would any of the gentlemen here employ a man and pay him $250 down and promise him a thousand dollars more in addition without knowing anything at all about him?

Mr. ROBERTSON. And would you convict a man merely on suspicion?

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I will talk to you about that after a while.

Mr. ROBERTSON. And that is what you do when you vote to convict him, for there is not one line of proof in this record to show he is guilty of anything.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. My friend is——

Mr. ROBERTSON. Not at all. [Great laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. If I could only apply a sedative to my friend and quiet him he would not talk so much.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I can talk. There is the gentleman's misfortune. I have the facts and I can show that there is not a particle of proof against him. [Laughter.]

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I protest against these interruptions.

Now, sir, having employed a man nobody told him anything about, a man to whom he was never introduced, a man nobody ever knew, he paid him an enormous fee to do what? I ask again, to do what? What duties were enjoined upon him? Who was to confer with him? With whom was Hill to work, and how? Did he ever for a moment go before the committee having this appropriation in charge? Oh, no. Did he ever see any member of Congress? No. Did he make any argument or prepare any brief? But he conferred with Warder. What did he tell Warder? If you want to get this appropriation you must abandon the idea of getting it for protecting Jeffersonville or for the improvement of the river; you must get it for the protection of the Government property in Jeffersonville. It was, they say, on that advice they proceeded and subsequently obtained the appropriation.

Was this advice really given or acted on? No.

Let me say a word about that. In the first place, before I pass, it is admitted that that advice is all Hill did that was of any consequence. This lawyer who received $1,250 never spoke to any member of the committee. That is true. And it is true this money was not used to influence any member or any committee, corruptly or otherwise, because the emphatic proof is that Hill never spoke to any member or to any committre. He did not speak to any member of the House or of the Senate. Oh, yes, he earned this money very easily. But did the measure begin or proceed on his suggestion?

Now, I want to put down dates, and I do not want to be confused. Hill was employed on the 13th of May. Mind you it must have been subsequent to the 13th of May he gave this important counsel to abandon the idea of securing the levee to protect Jeffersonville, but to proceed on the theory that it was to protect the property of the Government there.

Bear distinctly in mind now he was employed on the 13th day of May, and, mind you, it was subsequent to the 13th day of May he gave this important counsel. Bear in mind that fact. Now, before March 1 there was a meeting of Senator HARRISON, Senator VOORHEES, Mr. WILLIS, the chairman of the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and Mr. Stockslager, who represented that district, and these gentlemen there agreed upon this plan of proceeding, and they had never heard of Hill and had never heard of his employment. This was ten weeks before Hill's pretended employment.

My colleague, Judge HOLMAN, the record says, was present, and at this meeting, I repeat, held before the 1st of March, it was agreed that if this appropriation were proper at all it must be made and presented upon the assumption that it was necessary to protect the Government property in Jeffersonville. On the 1st of March Senator HARRISON introduced a resolution into the Senate asking the Secretary of War for information on this subject; and on the 19th day of April the engineer reported, and on the 12th day of May the Secretary of War reported—all in favor of the project, and all before Hill had been employed and got his $1,250 for doing nothing. Mr. Stockslager, the gentleman who was not to be communicated with at all in this matter, had, on the 14th day of April, introduced a bill into this House proposing to secure this appropriation upon that express ground.

Ah! gentleman, look at it now. Here is a man employed by Warder that he did not know, that he had had no introduction to, that he had never heard of, who had been recommended by nobody, who was not a lawyer at all in any proper sense of the word, but he employs this man and pays him $1,250 and requires him to do nothing. He did not communicate Hill's employment, and only pretends now the lawyer had given him this counsel. All this had been anticipated, and long before had been anticipated and was a matter of record. Now let us come to the close of it. Unfortunately, in this case, the man who secured and accepted the money, the man who appears and swears that he received the money, the man who puts the $1,250 in his pocket without rendering any service, is, by all, conceded to be a most disreputable man, wholly unworthy of credit. Is it surprising that the committee discredited this story?

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina has thirty-two minutes of his time remaining and the gentleman from Indiana has twenty-seven minutes.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I yield ten minutes of my time to my colleague [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I regret exceedingly that so important a matter as this, a question of investigation that has taken one month to get through with, and comprising one hundred and twenty-five pages of evidence—that it should be crowded into the short space of four hours' debate on this floor. I think that this House by limiting the time to so short a period has done a great injustice to the defendant as the party arraigned before its bar.

There is more in this case than dollars and cents, Mr. Speaker. There is involved in it the integrity and honor of a citizen; and every member of this House has to pass in judgment upon that citizen. They are called upon not to recall the judgment of the committee; that is not the question; but each must be responsible for the verdict he gives to-day. He can not shirk the responsibility. This rests upon each and every man, and each and every man must bear it. It is a question that we can not weigh in comparison with money. It is more far-reaching in its consequences than that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the time is so limited that I scarcely know how to take hold of the case in order to discuss it properly; but there seems to be two prominent points to which I ask attention, and which the advocates of the report of the committee make in this case: One is that the attorney employed was a disreputable man; another prominent point is that they went and employed an attorney and ignored the Representative of the people from that district, Mr. Stockslager, and these two points, together with another point—that the parties upon the witness-stand, Hill and Warder, did not in their manner of testifying suit the members of the committee—are all they rest upon. None of them appear to be worried about the evidence or the facts submitted; they do not pretend that the evidence sustains the verdict they rendered; nowhere do they dare say that the man could be found guilty on the strength of the evidence adduced against him, nor would it be sustained by any court in this country. But upon what principle do they find him guilty? Do you find him guilty because the man he employed was not the man that he ought to have employed? If you held every man responsible for the character of the lawyer he employs I ask how it would fare with many litigants in this country? What would be the end of it? It is not the first time that true and good men have been deceived by the men they employed as attorneys. But it does not appear that Mr. Warder was the only man who employed this attorney, for it is shown that greater and wiser men than Warder have been deceived in the employment of this same man.

We find him employed in the Potter committee by the gentlemen who are here. We find him employed in various important cases. And although the services might not have been exactly in accordance with what men may regard as reputable, you should not be asked because of this to condemn this man Warder as a felon, as a criminal, and send him out of this House in disgrace upon mere inference. I submit that inferences are always in favor of innocence and not of guilt.

But gentlemen of the committee say we are not bound by the ordinary rules of evidence that govern the courts of justice. Why should not the ordinary rules of evidence prevail in this House? When Congress with all its power occupies one end of the scale and a humble individual is in the other, because Congress has unlimited power we should for that very reason be very circumspect and examine every point with care. I again ask why it is the ordinary rules of evidence should not govern in a case like this? Is it not as important as a question of dollars and cents? A man's honor and integrity are as important to him as his life itself—nay, more so. The same rules that prevent him from being incarcerated in a penitentiary should be applied when his honor is at stake.

Now, let us apply these rules, and where does the case stand? The committee ask us to judge the law and the evidence. They bring prominently before the House the attitude of Mr. Stockslager. For one solid month Mr. Stockslager was in my Congressional district. He came four times and spent one month there. My people were against him; I was against him. Mr. Warder and Mr. Stealey were against him. On the 1st May he was in Indiana at the convention that nominated me. And when these parties came here, knowing my town was against him, knowing that the appropriation was to be in favor of my town, my advice was to keep away from Mr. Stockslager. His position was such that no prudent man would trust him in that transaction. Why? Because we were all against him. All the town was against him. Those that were seeking the appropriation were against him. And I say no prudent man would commit his case to that kind of a man under such circumstances. I advised them not to do so. Mr. Stockslager, as I am informed, did not even know that that appropriation was before a committee of conference. And it was for the reason that he might be friendly to it, yet he might on the other hand stab it if he had a mind to; and no prudent man would have committed the charge of the matter to him under such circumstances.

And yet this committee have used that as a circumstance to bolster up their report. I do not say Mr. Stockslager would not have acted honestly. I say, while he might have supported the appropriation, it was dangerous to have him interfere with it, and no prudent man who understands business transactions and human nature as we do would trust such a man under the circumstances. And for that reason we felt we were without any assistance in Congress from the Representative of that district.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. COX. I yield fifteen minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BLANCHARD].

Mr. BLANCHARD. In the outset of my remarks I desire to state that I take no part in the criticism which in the course of this debate has been passed upon two of the gentlemen who represented the defendant in this investigation as counsel. I refer to the charge that by one of those gentlemen the name of ex-Senator McDonald was improperly signed to the brief. It appears from the record which I hold in my hand that Mr. McDonald did appear before the committee in the capacity, as was thought, of counsel for Warder and Stealey, and, being absent when the brief was prepared, I do not think it was improper or unprofessional for one of his colleagues to sign his name along with theirs to the brief which was prepared on behalf of the accused.

With this statement I will proceed to present the case from the standpoint of the committee.

Mr. Speaker, to me it is somewhat singular that so much opposition to this report should have been developed upon this floor considering the fact that your committee, composed of a majority of Democrats and a minority of Republicans, investigating this case for weeks and devoting to it a great deal of care and attention, and after the investigation had ceased going into executive session and discussing it among themselves at length, came to the unanimous conclusion that the verdict agreed upon is a proper one and sustained by the evidence.

Mr. DOUGHERTY. Will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not yield. A majority of the committee making this investigation were and are the political friends of Mr. Warder; and I speak for the whole committee, I believe, when I say that in conducting the investigation every man of us felt it as much our duty to acquit him if the facts warranted it, as we did to convict him if the facts justified that verdict.

Now I say, considering these facts, with no animosity on the part of any man on the committee toward either of the accused, it is somewhat remarkable that when a unanimous report of the committee in a case like this is presented to the House it should encounter so much hostility. It shows that much of importunity of members has been indulged in on the part of the accused or his friends since this report was first submitted.

The facts of this case, Mr. Speaker, are simply these: The city of Jeffersonville was subject to inundation. Twice within recent years had the floods swept over it causing much damage to property. It was quite natural those people should desire protection against overflows, and believing they were not themselves able to build the necessary levees for that protection they sought it here through their Senators and Representatives.

There were at the other end of this Capitol two gentlemen representing the State of Indiana in the Senate, and the testimony before the committee (both those gentlemen were on the stand) showed that they were wide awake to the situation and giving heed to the cry that came up from the people of Jeffersonville for relief. The Representative from Jeffersonville on this floor, Mr. Stockslager, was also alive to the situation. More than five weeks before the time when this Hill is said to have been employed Mr. Stockslager introduced a bill which embodied the proposition that Jeffersonville should seek this appropriation, not upon the ground of protecting the town, but upon the ground of protecting the Government property there. Yet the making of this suggestion by Hill is paraded here as part of the service which it is claimed he rendered to Mr. Warder.

Two committees came on here from Jeffersonville for the purpose of urging the appropriation. They saw not only their member in the House but the Senators from their State, and the matter was being worked up, especially in the Senate, where Senator HARRISON introduced a resolution, which went to the War Department, asking for estimates of what it would cost to build the proposed levee. Now under all these circumstances, with a Representative here looking after the interests of the town, with two Senators at the other end of the Capitol alive to its necessities, we find Mr. Warder, one of the accused, writing a letter to a gentleman in Jeffersonville, a member of the city council, telling him that in his (Warder's) opinion it is necessary to use money here for the purpose of securing this legislation, and at the same time stating that he had employed an attorney, had given him a retainer of $250, and had promised him a thousand dollars more after the bill should have become a law.

There had been no resolution of the city council of Jeffersonville in relation to the employment of an attorney before that time, and in point of fact there never was any such action. In June, 1885, nearly a year after the bill had become a law, and not until then, did the city council take any action whatever in relation to the matter, and that was simply to authorize the payment of $1,329, which was the $1,250 said to have been paid to Hill, with the addition of interest. It seems from the testimony that one person, a Mr. Goldbach, came on here and authorized Mr. Warder to employ counsel. It does not appear that his colleagues on the committee concurred in that action, or that the city council of Jeffersonville had requested or authorized it. It is true that an informal meeting of the council was called after Warder had informed one of them of the employment of a party here, but it was so informal that the mayor did not preside and no record of it was kept by the clerk of the council. The gentlemen composing the city council simply met and talked the matter over among themselves.

Mr. Warder's letter to one of them, Mr. Shuler, was read, and they agreed that the money should be sent on, and that the gentlemen who composed the council would, if it became necessary, vote at the proper time to pay it. But, as I have said, there was no meeting of the city council. This meeting was not called in any regular way, and there is no pretense that it was a meeting of the council.

It was merely a meeting of certain gentlemen upon their own responsibility.

After the committees from Jeffersonville had come here, after the employment or alleged employment of Hill, after the bill had become a law (it became a law on the 3d or 4th of July, 1884), on the 15th of the same month, one of these committees reported to the city council that they had secured an appropriation of $50,000 for the Jeffersonville levee without cost to the city save the expense of one of the committees, some $300. That report was made, I say, on the 15th of July, after Mr. Hill had been paid this $1,000, and after the bill had become a law. From that time, July 15, 1884, to June, 1885, no action was taken by the city council of Jeffersonville with reference to this matter. On June 9, 1885, nearly one year after the $1,000 was paid Hill, the council allowed an account reading about as follows: "To expense relating to Jeffersonville levee, $1,329;" being the principal and interest of the amounts alleged to have been paid Hill. So that while the city council of Jeffersonville never authorized this expenditure, they did ratify it by paying the money a year afterward.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there was no necessity whatever for the employment of counsel. Senator VOORHEES and Senator HARRISON both testify to that. They did not even know of the employment of counsel. Mr. Stockslager, then a member of the House from the Jeffersonville district, did not know of the employment of counsel. If this counsel was employed, what did he do? We are asked to believe that Mr. Hill, a person whose record is shown to be disreputable, was employed and paid $1,250 simply for giving advice, to whom? Not to any committee of the citizens of Jeffersonville, not to any committee of either House of Congress, not for writing any brief or making any argument, but for giving advice to Mr. Warder himself, which could not have occupied him at the outside more than twenty minutes or half an hour.

Mr. HENLEY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can not now. I have not the time.

Mr. HENLEY. It is very important. It may determine my vote.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, we are asked to believe all this and to be governed in our action on this case by the consideration that Mr. Warder was a citizen of Jeffersonville and therefore had an interest in securing an appropriation for this levee.

It is true that Mr. Warder was a citizen of Jeffersonville; but, sir, I hold and announce here as a deep-seated conviction on my part that an officer of a legislative body like this, no matter whether he comes from the city interested in the proposed legislation or not, is guilty of official misconduct if he receives or acts as disbursing agent for money to be used in influencing legislation before the body of which he is an official. I say this House can not do otherwise than stand upon that doctrine. It will not do to try to shield or excuse Mr. Warder upon the fact that he was a citizen of Jeffersonville. He was an officer of this House. His first duty was in that capacity. As an official he should stand aloof from all considerations of money; he should not act as agent where money is to be disbursed to influence legislation before the body of which he is an officer. I care not whether this money was so used or not. That does not influence my judgment in this case. I find—and it can not be disputed—that Mr. Warder received $1,250. For what? He received it, if we put the most charitable construction upon the case, as disbursing agent of a fund raised for the purpose of influencing legislation before this House. I say that is enough for me; I do not need to go any further.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I yield seven minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. PETERS].

Mr. PETERS. Mr. Speaker, this is an information against Mr. Warder charging him with having exacted, collected, and accepted from some person or persons in Jeffersonville, Ind., a certain sum of money with which to influence the official action of Members or Senators. The evidence has been presented to us by the committee. I have, after a careful examination of the evidence, made a dozen findings of fact; and I think those findings of fact completely cover the case. The first is that in 1883 Jeffersonville had a flood which destroyed considerable property. Second, that the people of that city determined to apply to Congress for an appropriation. Third, that Mr. Warder came to Washington in January, 1884, and that he had never been in Washington city prior to that time. Fourth, that at the request of citizens of Jeffersonville he agreed to look after the interests of Jeffersonville here in Washington in connection with that appropriation and in connection with the affairs of this House. Fifth, that in May, 1884, he employed one E. N. Hill as an attorney to take care of and look after the interests of Jeffersonville. Sixth, that he agreed to pay Hill $1,250—$250 as a retainer, $1,000 as a contingent fee—and that he borrowed $250 and paid to Hill that retaining fee. Seventh, that Hill made no appearance before the Committee on Rivers and Harbors, and did nothing in the case except to make suggestions to Mr. Warder. Eighth, that Hill was an attorney somewhat disreputable, but had received fees for acting as attorney in certain cases. Ninth, that the $50,000 appropriation was secured. Tenth, that the citizens of Jeffersonville had raised the $1,250 and placed it in bank subject to an order. Eleventh, that the $1,000 remaining was paid upon order of Mr. Warder. And twelfth, that the $1,000 was paid to Mr. Hill.

This covers the entire evidence in the case. If the evidence from which these findings of fact were drawn be true, then Mr. Warder can in no case be guilty. For, sir, this is in the nature of criminal prosecution. Mr. Warder is on trial before this House. While the resolution only provides he shall be dismissed the service of the House, yet the natural implication of the adoption of such a resolution is he was guilty of a violation of the law.

Why do they say he should be dismissed? Not because any of these findings of fact are true, but because they are suspicious some of the evidence supporting these findings of fact is false. And why false? Because, in the first place, of the bad character of the man he employed. That has been adverted to, and I will not take up time of the committee by arguing it further.

Secondly. Because the name of the attorney was not mentioned to the people of Jeffersonville. Was it necessary? Was there any reason why he should state to the people of Jeffersonville the name of the attorney he employed? But even suppose he kept a secret, was it evidence of guilt on his part? No one will come to any such conclusion.

Third. Hill did nothing. It is alleged Warder never paid the money to Hill because Hill did nothing, and yet it is shown Warder had never been in Washington before he came here to take this position, that before that time he had no experience here. Now, how many members come here with the idea that a powerful lobby surrounds this House, and that it is necessary, in order to obtain legislation here, to secure the services of lobbyists?

But is there anything wrong about the employment of attorneys? Have they not appeared before every committee of Congress? We have had before the Committee on the Post-Office and Post-Roads, of which I am a member, at this session such distinguished attorneys of this city as Judge Shellabarger, men of the very highest character. Do you think they appeared before the committees of this House and argued questions affecting the legislation of Congress without receiving fees for their services? During the last Congress I was on the Committee on Commerce, and during the pendency of the interstate-commerce discussion attorney after attorney appeared before that committee in the interest of the railroads, and attorneys, although very few in number, I am sorry to say, appeared there in the interest of the public. They appeared before that committee and argued in favor of the propositions involved in the interstate-commerce bill. Now, were the members of the House, who requested these attorneys to come here and present these matters to the Committee on Commerce, guilty of any crime? Were they guilty of any impropriety?

Why, Mr. Speaker, in the last House my seat was contested and I employed an attorney to go before the Committee on Elections and speak for me, although I regarded the contest as a frivolous one. Am I to be accused of improper conduct because I employed an attorney to go before the Committee on Elections to plead my case? Then shall we charge Mr. Warder with crime for doing what I did and what other members of the House have done?

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I yield for five minutes to my colleague.

Mr. LOWRY. Mr. Speaker, the high regard I personally entertain for the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Civil-Service Reform and for the members of the committee known to me when they made this report created a serious apprehension in my mind as to whether or not a citizen of Indiana was not doomed to have administered to him the discipline of this House. I felt much concerned in reference to the matter, and it was not until I received an appeal from that citizen, addressed, as appears, to each member of the House, simply to read the testimony in his case, indicating that degree of confidence in his innocence and a sense of exemption from reprehension in reference to this matter, that I felt there was a hope the position of the committee could not be sustained. I naturally considered how it could happen a committee of this character should come to this conclusion without there being sufficient evidence to sustain it. I could not but reflect how natural, when our honor is at stake—for such is not only the case with this body in the aggregate but with each member of this House—when a charge is made against one of its own servants, we should not only feel sensitive, but we should be particularly guarded. We should not fail to administer the discipline called for when there is any infraction of the rules of the House.

But, sir, at the same time I recall the fact that when such interests are involved we are not in a condition to judge with entire impartiality on any such question; and I am apprehensive that while this committee has been duly sensitive of the honor of the House and of its members while deliberating upon the testimony before them, they have been too hasty. I would feel apprehensive, sir, in view of the character of this report and the unanimity with which the committee agree with reference to it, of the result here, were we not admonished by circumstances which have transpired in the past that it is well to consider carefully the facts of the case and the testimony before we come to a conclusion or act under the impulse of the moment. Sir, we remember that in this very city a distinguished soldier was tried, adjudged guilty, and sentenced to be dismissed in disgrace from the Army; and for a couple of decades the heart of this soldier has been agonized in consequence of that disgrace, until at length the House and the Senate of the United States have determined that he was wrongfully adjudged to be guilty of the offense charged against him. We remember the case of the execution of Mrs. Surratt, when, in obedience to a morbid sentiment on the part of the people, our humanity was shocked by the sacrifice upon the gallows of the life of that unfortunate woman; and who is there now within the sound of my voice, if he had the power, would not recall that unfortunate execution?

In this case, sir, the chairman of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service has stated to us that it was a rule of evidence that the manner of a witness when on the stand and his conduct under examination should be considered in determining his credibility.

We are told by this report that the witnesses in this case did not commend themselves favorably to the committee because of the manner of their testimony, and hence this report. What is the result? Why, they report against the accused. This is not sufficient evidence to sustain their finding. The charge is that money was procured for the purpose of corruptly influencing legislation here. That charge is not proved.

Now let us examine that point.

[Here the hammer fell.]

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I now give five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CURTIN].

Mr. LOWRY. I hope my colleague will give me half a minute longer.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I regret that I have not the time at my disposal.

Mr. CURTIN. Mr. Speaker, since my presence in this House I have scarcely ever known an appropriation for local purposes that some one did not appear before some committee of some kind who was authorized and empowered to aid if possible in procuring its passage. It is a matter of every-day occurrence.

Now, sir, there is no evidence that any part of this money was offered to any member of that committee or to any member of this House; and if there was money expended for an attorney why the settlement is between the gentlemen who received it and the people who placed it in his hands. I have never in all my life been in favor of persecuting any man without just cause. I do not know the man who is accused here; nor do I know anything of the man who is said to have been employed; nor do I shrink from my duty because the slime of the serpent is sought to be interwoven against the man now accused before the House.

At the request of my friend from Indiana I have examined the testimony in this case as well as the briefs of the lawyers, and my mind was carried back to a period of my life when I practiced in criminal courts; and I now allege in the presence of this House that this man could not be convicted before any jury of any criminal court of this country properly organized upon such testimony. True, they paid the money out there; and if gentlemen in this House can remember any instance in which they were authorized to procure an appropriation for a court-house or a custom-house or a public building or a levee to protect commerce or to clear out a river when there were not employed men here to advocate its passage and properly go before the committees, they can recall more than I do. This man seems to have got the money for a similar purpose. He did not retain one cent of it. He was here in the employment of the House, and they sent the money to him to disburse it. They say the Representative from that district was not spoken to or the Senators in the Chamber at the other end of the Capitol. Why should they be spoken to? The people of that town desired a protection to their commerce and trade, and this man, being here, was intrusted with the disbursement of their funds. He fell into the hands of the lobbyists in Washington and gave them the money, every cent of it, and not one cent is chargeable to him. I do not know him now. I never saw him.

They say he was a gallant soldier, and other things being equal I am always for the soldier. [Applause.] He is shown to be a man reputable in the community where he lives—mayor of the city, chargeable with high responsibilities to his neighbors. He is not accused of ever having violated the trusts reposed in him at any time. He is here before this august tribunal which has resolved itself into a court of quarter sessions, and the committee which makes the report is the grand jury of the court of quarter sessions. That report is before the House as an indictment. We are the jury sitting upon the reputation and the future and the happiness of a fellow-man and of his family. We are to decide on the testimony before us that not one cent of that money can be traced to his pocket; and if the money was not properly appropriated he has to contend with the people who sent it to him, as he was here, if he gave it to the wrong man. That is a question between them. Who has not been so deceived? If the $1,250 received by him would debauch this House, then, Mr. Speaker, we are very cheap. [Laughter and applause.]

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania has expired.

Mr. CURTIN. What, strike me again? [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. COX. I yield now the remainder of the time to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. FINDLAY].

Mr. FINDLAY. I desire to say in the outset that I have no feeling whatever in this case; that this Mr. Warder is a stranger to me, and that until after the investigation had closed I did not even know him by sight. It so happened that my duties called me elsewhere, and I never attended a single session of the Committee on Reform in the Civil Service while this investigation was in progress.

I have done, therefore, what Mr. Warder requests members of this House to do in his circular, and that is, to take up the testimony, to take up the record, and come to a dispassionate conclusion upon the record. And the opinion I have formed in this case is founded upon the record and the facts disclosed in the record and has nothing to do with the demeanor or the manner of the witnesses while they were upon the stand. I wish I could have reached another conclusion than that which was reached unanimously by the committee. I would much rather have found this man guiltless than have found him guilty; not only for his own sake, but for the sake of the family for whom he appeals; for the sake of the innocent who, by the inexplicable laws of the Almighty, seem in this wondrous economy of ours to be mixed up with the guilty without any fault of their own. But I feel I would have been untrue to myself, untrue to my country, and untrue to this House if I did not pronounce Mr. Warder guilty upon the record as it stands.

What is the charge against him? The charge is that he received or accepted money under pretense of influencing the legislation of this body.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Will you please point to the place in the testimony which shows that?

Mr. FINDLAY. I do not wish to be interrupted. The charge is that he accepted money under the pretense of influencing legislation. That was the matter which was submitted to us for inquiry. That was the matter which we were instructed to investigate, and it is upon that matter that we have reported. And we have said that we find him guilty of accepting money under the pretense of influencing legislation. Did he or did he not? What did he get the money for? What was the money sent for? Is it not a concessum in this case from the beginning to the end that the money was sent here for the purpose of procuring an appropriation for the benefit of the city of Jeffersonville? If it was sent here for that purpose, it was sent here for the purpose of influencing legislation. I do not care how, or through what medium, or by what means, it was sent here under that pretense.

Now, sir, that would have been sufficient in my judgment to authorize his expulsion from this House if it had stood alone. But in addition to that we go a step further, and we say he got that money under a false pretense. Why false? It was sent here for the purpose of procuring legislation upon the assumption that it was necessary to procure the legislation. Was it necessary? No, sir. It is a concessum throughout this whole case that the appropriation would have been made whether the money was sent or not. It is a fact proven in this case from the beginning to the end of it that that appropriation was already in the bill in the form of an amendment in the Senate, with every prospect and probability of going through the House before the money was sent.

What is the case then? The case so far is that he got the money under the pretense of influencing legislation. Secondly, he got the money under a false pretense, pretending that he had influenced legislation by the use of that money when in point of fact he had not.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I deny every word of that.

Mr. FINDLAY. I do not yield.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman declines to be interrupted.

Mr. FINDLAY. We have got that far. We have traced the money in his hands for an illegal purpose, or a purpose, as was well said by the gentleman from Virginia, that if this had been an action in court, if this had been a suit at law for the recovery of this money it could not have been recovered, because the contract was void as against public policy.

Just let me read a brief extract from a decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Marshall vs. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, 16 Howard:

> A contract is void as against public policy, and can have no standing in court by which one party stipulates to employ a number of secret agents in order to obtain the passage of a particular law, and the other party promises to pay a large sum of money in case the law should pass.

Was not the agent secret here? Who was the agent? This Mr. Hill. Who knew of Mr. Hill's employment? While this appropriation was in the different stages of its passage did he appear before any committee? No, sir. Did he file any brief? No, sir. Did he make any argument to anybody? No, sir. He was unknown in the transaction. This employment was of a nature which comes directly within the terms of that decision.

He was employed as a secret agent for the purpose of influencing the legislation upon this floor; and upon that the Supreme Court of the United States has set the seal, the emphatic seal, of its disapproval.

We have traced this money into his hands for an illegal purpose.

Mr. HENLEY. Does the gentleman decline to yield?

Mr. FINDLAY. I prefer not to yield.

Mr. HENLEY. I would like to know where the element of secrecy is in this case.

Mr. FINDLAY. If I had the time to take up this testimony, running through this record of one hundred and twenty-six pages, and to dissect it and analyze it as I have done in the quiet of my room, I think I could demonstrate to the gentleman where the secrecy is. But I have not the time. I must simply seize such salient points as I can and pass on without discussing matters of detail.

We have traced this money into his hands for an unlawful purpose. Who is to explain how he got rid of the money? Is it for us to account for how he got rid of it? Are we to come in and show what disposition he made of it, whether it was lawful or unlawful? No, sir. The onus is upon him. He must explain what he did with it.

Now what is his explanation? He says that making a casual acquaintance, as one dog makes the acquaintance of another dog, of this Hill on the floor of the House, having no introduction to him whatever, never having seen him before, knowing nothing under heaven about him, he meets him and they get to talking—about what? About levees. And it seems that Mr. Hill was particularly posted in levees, because he had been raised behind a levee. He gives that as a reason for it; and there is also evidence in the case to show that has been his business in life, levying on one thing or another ever since he was born. Making his acquaintance in that casual kind of way what does he do? He says, "I will give you $250 as a retainer in this case, and then you shall receive a thousand more contingent on the success of the appropriation," and the $250 is paid; and then, on Sunday, the 6th day of July, a telegraphic order is sent on here from Jeffersonville, and that $1,000 in the original package as taken from the bank Warder says he went into the office of the Sergeant-at-Arms and there handed over to Mr. Hill—every dollar of that money—which Hill himself says he did not count, and he did not know whether there was $1,000 in it or not. But he said Hill accepted it for $1,000.

And these gentlemen, having such reverence for the law, minutely careful that it should not be infracted in any particular, did not draw the receipt and date it as of Sunday, which was the 6th of July, but with a vigilance and careful respect for the law which does them credit they date the so-called receipt on Monday, the 7th of July.

How did that money get here? It got here on a dispatch from Warder to persons in Jeffersonville to send on the money at once; that he did not wish to be detained here; that the appropriation had been passed; that he would see to it that the money was not paid to the lawyer (whose name had not been disclosed); he would see to it that the money was not paid to this undisclosed and unnamed as well as briefless attorney until the President had signed the bill. Mr. Warder is in a hurry to get the money here; and it comes on here in this way; and then, according to his statement, he pays it over in the original package, without counting it, to this man Hill.

Hill admits that he did nothing. Warder says that Hill did nothing except to give him a piece of advice; and what was that advice? It was a fraud in itself. "Do not come in and ask for the appropriation upon the real ground, but ask for it under a false pretense; do not come in and say you want it for the city of Jeffersonville, but come in and say you need it for the protection of the Government property located at Jeffersonville."

Mr. WARD, of Indiana, rose.

Mr. FINDLAY. Wait one moment. On that advice he says he paid Mr. Hill. Well, there is not a word of truth in that, for the simple reason that Mr. Stockslager had introduced a bill here early in the session based upon the same idea and for the same purpose. Senator HARRISON, of Indiana, at the other end of the Capitol, was working upon the same line; and he says that he acted upon his own suggestion, and not upon any hint from Mr. Hill, Mr. Warder, or anybody else.

Mr. MATSON. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. FINDLAY. I decline to be interrupted.

Mr. MATSON. I only wanted to ask whether you meant to say that Senator HARRISON was guilty of "false pretenses."

Mr. FINDLAY. No, sir.

Mr. MATSON. You said Warder was guilty of "false pretenses."

Mr. FINDLAY. I did not say he was guilty of false pretenses. What I said was—and I repeat it—that the appropriation which went through this House and the other House did not go through on its merits, did not go through as an appropriation for the benefit of the city of Jeffersonville, but it went through as an appropriation for the purpose of protecting the Government property at Jeffersonville. That is what I say, and that is what I stand by. I accuse nobody in the other Chamber or in this of a false pretense.

[Here the hammer fell.]

The SPEAKER. The hour fixed by the House for the close of this debate has arrived. By order of the House the previous question now takes effect.

Mr. WARD, of Indiana. I ask leave to withdraw the substitute I have offered, and allow the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] to offer in its stead one which meets my approval.

Several MEMBERS. Read it.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the proposition which the gentleman from Alabama desires consent to offer as a substitute for the resolution proposed by the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conduct of Luther F. Warder, he being at the time an employé of the House, in receiving money from the city of Jeffersonville, Ind., to employ counsel to influence legislation in Congress, was a gross impropriety, and that this House hereby expresses its emphatic condemnation thereof; but the evidence adduced, in the opinion of this House, does not require his expulsion from the office he holds.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to permitting this substitute to be offered in lieu of that heretofore submitted by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WARD]? The Chair hears none. The question is first upon the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] for the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. FINDLAY. Let us have the yeas and nays on the substitute.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Is not this substitute susceptible of division? May not that part of it which closes with the statement that the conduct of Mr. Warder was a "gross impropriety" be separated from the other part?

The SPEAKER (after examining the substitute). The Chair thinks the resolution offered as a substitute contains two distinct propositions, and is divisible.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Then I call for a division of the question.

The SPEAKER. The first question is on ordering the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is an amendment in order?

The SPEAKER. It is not.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Speaker, before the vote is taken I desire to ask that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. PAYSON] be excused from attendance to-day on account of sickness.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

WARDER CASE.

The SPEAKER. The question is first on that part of the substitute which will now be read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the conduct of Luther F. Warder, he being at the time an employé of the House, in receiving money from the city of Jeffersonville, Ind., to influence legislation of Congress, was a gross impropriety, and this House hereby expresses its emphatic condemnation thereof.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Mr. Speaker, is that in lieu of the original resolution?

The SPEAKER. This is offered as a substitute for the resolution reported by the committee, and the question is upon agreeing to the part of the substitute which has just been read.

Mr. ROBERTSON. If this be adopted, then it does away with the resolution reported by the committee.

The SPEAKER. If it is adopted, then the vote will be on agreeing to the resolution as amended; but there will be still another vote to be taken upon the remaining part of the substitute.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. Gentlemen all around me desire to know what will be the effect of the adoption of this portion of the substitute?

The SPEAKER. Whether this first part of the substitute be adopted or not, a vote must be taken upon the second part of the substitute, and if either of them be agreed to by the House, then the question will be upon agreeing to the resolution as amended.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Suppose the first part of the proposition is approved by the House, does not that first part thereupon become a substitute for the original resolution? Ought not the division of the question to come after the substitution of the substitute for the original proposition?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks it could not be done then.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry. If we should adopt the first part of the substitute, and then should desire to adopt the resolution reported by the Committee as the conclusion thereof, could that be done?

The SPEAKER. It could not; because then the question would be upon agreeing to that resolution as amended by this.

Mr. BROWNE, of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my application for a division of the substitute.

The SPEAKER. The demand for a division of the question is withdrawn. The question then is upon agreeing to the substitute proposed by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. OATES] for the resolution reported by the committee.

Mr. OATES. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the substitute be again read.

The substitute was again read in full.

The question was taken on the adoption of the substitute; and there were—yeas 136, nays 67, not voting 120; as follows:

Mr. MILLS. I desire to announce that my colleague, Mr. STEWART, is confined to his bed by sickness.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I happened to be out in the hall when my name was called, but I would like to record my vote.

The SPEAKER. The Chair can not entertain the gentleman's request under the circumstances. The gentleman can state how he would have voted.

Mr. O'NEILL, of Pennsylvania. If I had been present, I would have voted ay.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, the reading of names of members voting was dispensed with.

The following-named members were announced as paired until further notice:

Mr. STEWART, of Texas, with Mr. COOPER.

Mr. HALL with Mr. CUTCHEON.

Mr. ARNOT with Mr. DAVIS.

Mr. VIELE with Mr. LAIRD.

Mr. COLE with Mr. THOMAS, of Illinois.

Mr. WARNER, of Ohio, with Mr. GROSVENOR.

Mr. BOYLE with Mr. GUENTHER.

Mr. STONE, of Missouri, with Mr. REED, of Maine.

Mr. NEGLEY with Mr. BRAGG, on political questions.

Mr. CLEMENTS with Mr. HIESTAND.

Mr. EDEN with Mr. MARKHAM.

Mr. ROGERS with Mr. EZRA B. TAYLOR.

Mr. JONES, of Alabama, with Mr. BURLEIGH.

Mr. FREDERICK with Mr. DUNHAM.

Mr. CROXTON with Mr. DORSEY.

Mr. STEWART, of Vermont, with Mr. TUCKER.

Mr. MILLS with Mr. HISCOCK.

Mr. MILLARD with Mr. SPRIGGS.

Mr. GLOVER with Mr. BUNNELL.

Mr. ADAMS, of New York, and Mr. JACKSON were announced as paired until Monday next.

Mr. HUDD and Mr. BAYNE were announced as paired until June 7.

The following were announced as paired for this day:

Mr. DINGLEY with Mr. DUNN.

Mr. VAN EATON with Mr. PAYSON.

Mr. HATCH with Mr. LITTLE.

Mr. SNYDER with Mr. ROCKWELL.

Mr. MAYBURY with Mr. KELLEY.

Mr. HARRIS with Mr. DAVENPORT.

The following were announced as paired on this vote:

Mr. MCKENNA with Mr. FELTON. If present, Mr. MCKENNA would vote no and Mr. FELTON ay.

Mr. J. M. TAYLOR with Mr. ERMENTROUT.

Mr. NEECE with Mr. FISHER.

Mr. HOUK with Mr. STEELE.

Mr. WHITE, of Minnesota, with Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas.

Mr. ELLSBERRY with Mr. STRAIT.

Mr. FELIX CAMPBELL with Mr. PIRCE.

Mr. LAIRD with Mr. OSBORN. If present, Mr. LAIRD would vote against the report of the committee, Mr. OSBORN in its favor.

Mr. BRAGG with Mr. CASWELL. Mr. BRAGG would vote against the report of the committee, Mr. CASWELL for it.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa, with Mr. THOMAS, of Wisconsin.

Mr. CONGER with Mr. PLUMB.

The result of the vote was then announced as above recorded.

Mr. OATES moved to reconsider the vote just taken; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

The question recurred on the adoption of the resolution as amended.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 94, noes 43.

So the resolution as amended was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move private business be dispensed with for the balance of the day.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 44.

Mr. PETTIBONE. No quorum.

The SPEAKER appointed Mr. PETTIBONE and Mr. HOLMAN as tellers.

Mr. PETTIBONE. I do not further insist on my demand.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 105, noes 56.

So the motion was agreed to.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move to dispense for to-day with the morning hour for the call of committees for reports.

The SPEAKER. That requires a vote of two-thirds.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 85, noes 13.

So (no further count being demanded) the motion was agreed to.

ENROLLED JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

Mr. FISHER, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled joint resolution (H. Res. 112) for the relief of the estate of the late James G. Wintersmith, late Doorkeeper of the House of Representatives, when the Speaker signed the same.

LEGISLATIVE, ETC., APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN moved that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The motion was agreed to; and the House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. BLOUNT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The committee takes up for consideration a bill (H. R. 8974) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes.

Mr. HOLMAN. I move that the first reading of the bill for information be dispensed with.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I want to reserve all points of order, so there may be no misunderstanding on that matter hereafter.

Mr. HOLMAN. That has already been done.

Now, Mr. Chairman, before proceeding further with the consideration of this bill I would like to ascertain whether or not by unanimous consent some arrangement can not be come to by which the time to be consumed on both sides in the general debate on this bill may be limited? I will suggest it be limited to three or four hours. If agreeable to members, say three hours of general debate on this legislative, &c., appropriation bill.

Mr. CANNON. It seems to me we had better allow it to run on without limit in the first instance. When we come out of committee into the House gentlemen may move to limit the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. I suggest, then, the debate be limited to four hours.

Mr. CANNON. I think you had better let it run for a time, and you can tell whenever you wish to close the debate what is the temper of the House.

Mr. HOLMAN. Will the gentleman name the time which would be agreeable to members on the other side?

Mr. CANNON. A number of gentlemen about me say in the first instance they would prefer the debate should run without limit. Whenever we come out of committee gentlemen can indicate the time to which to limit the debate.

Mr. HOLMAN. Say four or five hours.

Mr. FARQUHAR. That is not sufficient time for so important a measure as this.

Mr. CANNON. Let it run until the committee rises.

Mr. RYAN. There is no purpose to delay unnecessarily action on the bill, and we had better let the debate run for to-day at least.

Mr. HOLMAN. That then will have to be the understanding for the present. Unless some gentleman desires to address the committee this evening I will move the committee rise.

Mr. REAGAN. Why not go on with the debate?

Mr. HOLMAN. I have stated if any gentleman wishes to address the committee I will yield to him.

Mr. BUTTERWORTH. I will say to the gentleman from Indiana no members on thisside have arranged to address the committee, as it was generally supposed the resolution which has been debated during the morning would consume the day.

Mr. HOLMAN. With a view to a recess, then, I move the committee rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BLOUNT reported that the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union had, according to order, had under consideration the bill (H. R. 8975) making appropriations for the legislative, executive, and judicial expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1887, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

PAYMENT OF FEES FOR RETURNING EVIDENCE.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, the Committee on Appropriations was discharged from the further consideration of the Attorney-General's letter relating to the payment of fees for returning evidence; and the same was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

UNITED STATES PENITENTIARY, BOISE CITY, IDAHO.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, the Committee on Appropriations was also discharged from the further consideration of letter of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to the United States penitentiary at Boise City, Idaho; and the same was referred to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

LIGHT-HOUSE AT GRAY'S HARBOR, WASHINGTON TERRITORY.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, the Committee on Appropriations was also discharged from the further consideration of letter of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to light-house at Gray's Harbor, Washington Territory; and the same was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

FEES OF WITNESSES AND JURORS.

On motion of Mr. RANDALL, the Committee on Appropriations was also discharged from the further consideration of letter of the Secretary of the Treasury relating to fees of witnesses and jurors; and the same was referred to the Committee on Claims.

SALE OF DISTRICT PROPERTY.

Mr. HEARD. At the request of the commissioners of the District I ask to introduce a bill so it may be considered next Monday when the District business will be called up.

The SPEAKER. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. HEARD introduced a bill (H. R. 9125) to authorize the sale of certain property for the benefit of public schools of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia, and ordered to be printed.

HOUR OF MEETING FRIDAY EVENING SESSIONS.

Mr. McMILLIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that during the balance of this session the recess to be taken on Friday evenings be hereafter from 5 to 8 o'clock instead of to half past 7. We tried it last Friday evening and found it to work more satisfactorily.

The SPEAKER. Without objection that order will be made.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

DUTY ON FISH.

Mr. BOUTELLE, by unanimous consent, introduced a bill (H. R. 9126) to amend Title XXXIII of the Revised Statutes, relating to the duty on fish; which was read a first and second time, referred to the Committee on Ways and Means, and ordered to be printed.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Private Calendar the bill (H. R. 6265) for the relief of John Montgomery and put it upon its passage.

The bill was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MORRISON. I object, unless we can have some explanation of it.

Mr. McMILLIN. Let the report be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. This is private bill day, and we have half an hour left before the time for taking the recess, so we might dispose of some bills to which there is no objection. I would like to have the report read in this case, however, before waiving the right to object.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I object. This is an ordinary war claim, and there are thousands of them in the committee-rooms and on the Calendars, and I shall object to it.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up if I can by unanimous consent the bill (S. 30) for the relief of Harry J. Todd, keeper of the penitentiary of Kentucky, which bill simply gives him the right to appeal to the Court of Claims.

The SPEAKER. The bill will be read, after which the Chair will ask for objections.

The bill was read at length.

Mr. SPRINGER. I will reserve the objection until I can hear the report read.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I think I can state it in a much shorter time than the report can be read.

Mr. SPRINGER. How much is the amount involved?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I do not know the amount. The facts are these, and it is a question of this sort: Harry J. Todd was keeper of the Kentucky penitentiary and was charged under the income-tax law a percentage upon the amount received by him as such keeper. The Supreme Court afterward decided that it was unconstitutional; that officers receiving salaries from the States—State officers—could not be taxed upon their salaries. This is simply a bill allowing him to go before the Court of Claims and adjudicate his claim for a refund of the tax——

Mr. LONG. The amount involved then is probably inconsiderable?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. It may be more than you think, because he was paid by a percentage on the amount resulting from the expenditure for prisoners in the penitentiary.

Mr. SPRINGER. I think I would prefer to hear the report read before consenting.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Kentucky. I believe the gentleman himself made the report.

Mr. SPRINGER. I do not know how that may be; but still I think it had better be read.

The report was read at length.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SPRINGER. I will have to object to this, although I dislike to do it.

Mr. RANDALL. I move that the House take a recess until 8 o'clock this evening for the consideration of bills under the special order.

The question was taken; and on a division there were—ayes 52, noes 11.

So the motion was agreed to; and accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 37 minutes p. m.) the House took a recess until 8 o'clock p. m.

EVENING SESSION.

At 8 o'clock the House was called to order by the Clerk, who directed the reading of the following communication from the Speaker:

SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 4, 1886.

SIR: I hereby designate Hon. BENTON McMILLIN to preside as Speaker pro tempore at the session of the House this evening.

J. G. CARLISLE, Speaker.

Hon. JOHN B. CLARK, Jr.,
Clerk House of Representatives.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read the order under which the House assembles.

The special order was read.

Mr. WINANS. I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The House accordingly resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House, Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole for consideration of bills on the Private Calendar under the special order.

The Clerk will report the first bill.

The Clerk read the title of the first pension bill on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4097) for the relief of William J. Owings.

Mr. MORRILL. I ask that that bill be passed over without prejudice.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The Clerk read the title of the next pension bill on the Private Calendar, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 4702) amending sections 4756 and 4757 of the Revised Statutes, relating to pensions to certain disabled persons who have served in the Navy or Marine Corps.

Mr. MORRILL. That is a general bill and does not come under the order for this evening.

The bill was passed over, retaining its place on the Calendar.

PHŒBE H. MEECH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech; reported by the Committee on Pensions.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c. That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Phœbe H. Meech, widow of Horace J. Meech, late a second lieutenant in the Second Regiment New York Volunteers, in the Mexican war, and to pay to her, from and after the passage of this act, a pension at the rate of $15 per month, in lieu of the pension she is now receiving.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. When this bill was up for consideration before I opposed it, because I was not satisfied that the officer, the husband of the claimant, had ever been mustered as a second lieutenant. Since that time I have seen a certificate from the proper officers in Albany, N. Y., from which State he went into the Mexican war, showing that his commission as second lieutenant was issued to him some six months before he was discharged from the Army. I have reason to believe, from other evidence, that his commission was retained by his superior officers. I withdraw any further opposition to the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask that the report may be read.

The report (by Mr. WHITE, of Pennsylvania) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech respectfully submit the following report:

Phœbe C. Meech is the widow of Horace J. Meech, who was a soldier in the Mexican war, serving gallantly and faithfully. By the records of the adjutant-general's office at Albany, N. Y., he is shown to have been commissioned second lieutenant in the First Regiment Volunteers on the 19th day of February, 1848, with rank from that date. Also, the same fact is shown by quite a number of witnesses. Whether he was mustered or served as a second lieutenant is not clear. He was honorably discharged on the 28th day of June, 1848. He applied for a pension, but died in 1851, before receiving the same. The applicant was pensioned in 1875, but only from that date and only at the rate of $8 per month.

From all the facts in the case your committee are of the opinion that she is entitled to receive pension as a widow of a second lieutenant. They therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I ask the gentleman in charge of this bill whether this officer was duly commissioned second lieutenant? As no gentleman answers my question I ask is anybody responsible for this bill? It proposes to increase the pension of this lady on the ground that she is the widow of a second lieutenant.

Mr. BRADY. I understand from the report he was commissioned second lieutenant.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Was there any evidence of that before the committee?

Mr. BRADY. I do not recollect distinctly the evidence in this case, but I presume there was such evidence or the committee would not have made the report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR], whom I do not now see in his seat, remarked a few moments ago that he had opposed the bill on a previous evening because he did not understand that this lieutenant had been mustered. He remarked he had since ascertained that the lieutenant's commission was issued, but through some neglect the commission did not reach him. The commission was signed and issued in good faith. The gentleman was perfectly satisfied the case was a meritorious one, and he withdrew the objection he had made to the bill the other evening.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PETER ADAMS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Peter Adams.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Peter Adams, late of Company D, One hundred and sixty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers.

Mr. WINANS. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Peter Adams, submit the following report:

Claimant was a private in Company D, One hundred and sixty-fifth Pennsylvania Volunteers, and asks a pension for an injury to the left testicle caused by falling down an embankment. The application was rejected on the ground of no record and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence. The stumbling-block in the case seems to be a letter written by Dr. William C. Stern, dated September 28, 1883, that claimant told him in 1860 that he was ruptured, and says he knows this by reference to his books. December 1, 1883, Dr. William C. Stern, presumably the same person, testifies under oath that up to February, 1859, claimant was a sound man, and that in September, 1863, he told affiant that he was ruptured, and affiant advised him to get a truss and wear it; that he knows this from reference to his books, and that the record of this advice and a record of treatment in 1870 for fever includes the principal medical treatment of Peter Adams for nineteen years. The letter and the affidavit are flatly contradictory, and your committee deem both as unworthy of credence, and conclude that the case ought to be decided upon other evidence submitted.

Capt. J. H. Plank, the captain of the company, testifies that he has known claimant since 1854; that he served with him nine months in the service, and knows that he was a sound man before he enlisted; that on or about the — day of May, 1863, at Windsor, Va., I found him incapacitated for duty while then 18 miles from camp, and ordered him to return in the ambulance. He was wholly unable to do any duty. His sickness seemed to be serious. He was a good and faithful soldier.

John Strambough testifies to prior soundness and gives reasons for knowing which are perfectly satisfactory to your committee. He also states that the claimant was injured at discharge; that the rupture was about the size of a turkey's egg, and that claimant described the manner of receiving it, which corresponds with his statements in the declaration.

Henry J. Lawrence testifies that while marching at night claimant accidentally fell and seriously and permanently injured his left testicle; that he saw him just before the accident, when he was well, and saw him again the morning after it happened, when he was disabled and was taken away in the ambulance. The evidence of continuance seems to be unquestioned. It is proven by evidence of one physician and five or six neighbors. The examining board at York, Pa., report: "We find upon examination an enlargement about the size of a man's fist, &c.;" and they rate the disability at one-half.

There seems to be no reason whatever (aside from Dr. Stern's letter) to doubt that the disability was received in the service and has continued ever since.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to ask whether this case has ever been presented to the Pension Bureau?

Mr. BRADY. Yes, sir. The report shows that it has been before the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I was not present during the reading of the entire report. On what grounds was the application rejected?

Mr. ROWELL. The report states that the application was rejected because there was no hospital record of the disability.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What evidence have we of that which was not in possession of the Pension Bureau?

Mr. ROWELL. There is the evidence of four or five witnesses set forth in the declaration.

Mr. MORRILL. If the gentleman from Arkansas will allow me, I will state that this application was rejected by the Pension Bureau because a Dr. Stern wrote a letter in which he stated the disability existed in 1860. Afterward he made an affidavit that he learned of the disability in 1863, and that he then treated the man for it. The application was rejected on that contradictory evidence, and because there was no hospital record. The captain of the company testifies positively as to the time when the soldier received the injury. The evidence of prior soundness given by comrades was very strong.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Have we any stronger evidence than the Pension Bureau had?

Mr. MORRILL. If we are only to pass pension cases which the Pension Office might properly pass, there would be no further occasion for the Committee on Invalid Pensions reporting. But this was an extremely strong case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. As I conceive the course we should pursue, we ought not to pass any pension case that comes within the power of the Pension Bureau and which they have considered as not established. I think they, with their trained force, and certainly their friendly disposition toward pensioners, are better able to judge within the limits prescribed to them than we are.

Cases frequently come up that are very meritorious, but which are not covered by the general powers given to the Pension Bureau. They are cases that the Pension Bureau can not pass whatever may be the merits, and they may properly come up for the action of Congress. But if this is a case that has attached to it at this time only the evidence that it possessed before the Pension Bureau, and is one that the Pension Bureau has full power to act upon, but refrained from action because they considered it not established, I should only give my consent to it upon the most conclusive proof that the Pension Bureau has acted in an unjust manner toward the claimant.

Mr. MORRILL. In reply to the gentleman from Arkansas I will say that it seemed to me after an examination of the case that it ought to be allowed. The only knowledge I have of it is derived from a careful examination of all the papers. The bill was introduced by a gentleman from Pennsylvania, and by special request was referred to me for examination. I gave it special care upon that ground and it seemed to me the proof was absolute as to the injury. The conflicting testimony in the case was that of Dr. Stern, who flatly contradicted himself.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Was he the regimental surgeon who treated this soldier?

Mr. MORRILL. Not at all. He was a physician living in the place where this man resided; and he wrote this letter that in 1860 this applicant consulted him about this disability. Afterward he made an affidavit that this occurred in 1863.

A MEMBER. When did the injury occur?

Mr. MORRILL. I think in 1862.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Suppose the Pension Bureau came to the same conclusion that you have come to, that the case was probably a meritorious one, that that part of the evidence which was unfavorable was not as weighty as that which was favorable, and that the man ought to have a pension, would not the bureau at this time have the power to grant him a pension?

Mr. MORRILL. I suppose they would have the power now. The case was rejected some years ago.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. But that does not interfere with the right of review.

Mr. MORRILL. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will say in answer to the gentleman's question that the Pension Office requires clear, positive proof of the incurrence of the disability in the service, and that wherever there is a doubt, oftentimes a very unreasonable doubt, the office rejects the case. For that reason it has been the custom of Congress to pass favorably upon cases in which they thought the Pension Office had decided unjustly.

Mr. RANDALL. Or upon technicalities.

Mr. MORRILL. Or upon technicalities.

Mr. BRADY. I will say to the gentleman from Arkansas that it has been almost the invariable practice of the Pension Bureau to reject cases upon mere technicalities.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Is there any technicality in this case?

Mr. BRADY. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What is it?

Mr. BRADY. It has been stated by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL]. I speak from experience when I say that the rule of the Department has been to reject many meritorious cases on technical grounds.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, I wish to ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] whether his committee has reversed the decision of the Pension Bureau upon the same evidence that was before the bureau, or whether the report of the committee is based upon additional evidence?

Mr. MORRILL. In answer to the gentleman from Louisiana I will say, that upon evidence no stronger than the evidence in this case he, as a lawyer, could undoubtedly go before any intelligent jury in the country and convict a man of murder; yet the Pension Office rejected the case. The Committee on Invalid Pensions have, in a large majority of cases coming before them, reviewed the evidence submitted to the Pension Office, and where they have thought the rulings unjust or unreasonable they have recommended the allowance of the pension.

Mr. GROUT. Will the gentleman permit me a question?

Mr. MORRILL. With pleasure.

Mr. GROUT. I suppose that in your report you present a summary of the evidence?

Mr. MORRILL. Yes; and it is an extremely strong case.

Mr. GROUT. Certainly the evidence as recited in the report does present a strong case in favor of the claim.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I was not present, Mr. Chairman, during the reading of the first part of the report. I will simply say this. As the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. MORRILL] is so firm in his belief in the merits of the case, and as I know he is honest in that belief (as I am sure he is in all the opinions he expresses here), and as I have not heard the whole of the report read, I will make no objection to this case; but I think that the evidence should be just as clear and strong as I have no doubt the gentleman believes it to be here before we should take up a case that can be acted upon by the Pension Bureau, especially a case in which the bureau tells us the claimant is not entitled to a pension.

Mr. HAYNES. Mr. Chairman, I would say to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] that if he had had as much experience in "punching up" cases in the Pension Office as some other members here he would lose his faith in the infallibility of the office. Those members who have many pension cases to handle are well aware from experience that in many cases which have been rejected in the Pension Office it is not unusual, by going there and having the evidence reviewed, to get a reversal of the adverse judgment without introducing a single word of new evidence. Only within a few days past my colleague who sits by me, a physician [Mr. GALLINGER], came to me with a case which had been rejected upon the opinion of the medical experts of the Pension Office. He came to consult with me about introducing a bill for the relief of the claimant. He was so firm in his belief that the medical judgment was wrong that I suggested to him that he had better go down first and see the medical reviewer. He did call at the office, and, upon looking at the case again, the reviewer, without any argument being submitted, reversed his former decision. I simply mention this case to illustrate the point that the Pension Office is not infallible in its judgments, and that our judgment is just as liable to be good in certain cases as that of any clerk or any employé of the Pension Bureau.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I have no doubt that what the gentleman says about decisions being in many instances reversed upon re-examination is true, and I think it is to the credit of the bureau that when they find they have made a mistake they are willing to correct that mistake. Nevertheless, that is the machinery which we have supplied for the purpose of deciding upon these pension cases.

If it is not good we should make it good. We should not seek to convert Congress, with far more business of other classes than it can attend to properly, into a pension bureau. Congress ought not to take up any pension cases except those in which it can be clearly shown that the bureau, though having the power, is yet undoubtedly at fault, and those meritorious cases which do not come within the general scope of the power granted to the bureau. Exceptions of this sort must always come to Congress, and I think such cases ought to be received here in a very liberal spirit. While we should require clear evidence to support them, yet upon such evidence we ought very cheerfully to vote in favor of them. I heed all that the gentleman says; and this is the opinion I entertain.

Mr. ROWELL. Mr. Chairman, at the very opening of this evening session an objection is raised which would reject ninety-nine out of every one hundred pension bills—no, probably not quite that many.

A MEMBER. About seventy-five out of a hundred.

Mr. ROWELL. Seventy-five out of every one hundred pension bills passed by Congress are passed upon the judgment of the appropriate committee that the Pension Bureau has not properly weighed the evidence, has improperly rejected the claim upon the evidence; that the Pension Bureau has rejected the claim, not because of technical objections, but because it has misjudged the case upon the evidence. And it is proper right here to consider whether we ought to pass bills of that character.

Now, everybody knows that a chief of division, not the Commissioner of Pensions, first reviews the case. The Commissioner does not examine personally one case in a thousand. Some chief of division may conclude that the case has been proved. He sends it to a reviewing officer and the reviewing officer rejects it. I recollect examining a case within the last two weeks where two special examiners in the field had examamined and cross-examined the witnesses and reported very strongly in favor of the allowance of the application; yet the reviewing officer in the Pension Bureau rejected the claim on the express ground that there was no proof that the disability had been incurred in the Army, notwithstanding the fact that the Army surgeon had positively sworn, not only in an affidavit which was filed, but before the special examiner, that the man was in the ambulance corps, and that this disability was incurred while he was a member of the ambulance corps; that the surgeon knew him intimately and treated him for the disability. Notwithstanding the fact that there was on file the strongest kind of evidence of the character and credit of this surgeon, showing that he was so careful in filing affidavits that the members of his regiment found fault with him, yet the reviewing officer rejected the case on the ground that there was no evidence of the incurrence of the disability in the Army.

I recollect another case—a case that has gone through this Congress—which was rejected by throwing out the testimony of a man who was in the battle where the applicant for a pension had been wounded; and this testimony was thrown out on the ground that the record showed that the man who gave the testimony was in the regimental hospital at the time of the battle, though this same witness was pensioned for a wound received in that very battle.

Such is the character of the cases rejected sometimes at the Pension Office when they happen to get into the hands of an unskillful reviewer. Among a thousand employés you may have five hundred or six hundred or seven hundred good ones, and you may have others who are not so good. It is to correct errors of this kind that we meet here every Friday evening; and I insist it is not a proper objection——

Mr. BLANCHARD. I would like to ask the gentleman a question. When a pension case is reviewed in the Pension Office, and the reviewer passes upon it, either allowing it or rejecting it, is that the end of it, or does it pass before some other officer for further examination?

Mr. ROWELL. That is in general the end of it. In the very case of which I spoke, when the attention of the reviewing officer was called to the fact that he had falsely stated there was no evidence in the records of the incurrence of disability in the Army, he said he would take the matter under advice; and a week afterward he writes an opinion reaffirming his former decision. The only way to secure justice in such cases is to bring them before Congress.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Another question. If the reviewing officer rejects the case, then, as I understand the gentleman, it goes to no other reviewing officer in the Pension Bureau.

Mr. ROWELL. It may go to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I was about to ask whether an appeal was not allowed to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. ROWELL. Oh, yes, such an appeal can be taken in any case; a year or two years will be occupied in reaching it; and the chances are ten to one that the decision will be reaffirmed unless there is somebody right there to argue and protest. In other words, there is pro forma affirmance of the judgment below. In other words, that judgment, after a delay of a year or more, is in general affirmed without examination.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If it does not trespass upon the courtesy of my friend from Illinois——

Mr. ROWELL. Not at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I will say, without wishing to detain the committee, that I have listened with interest to what the gentleman has said. I do not think, however, that his remarks impeach the soundness of the view I have expressed that we should exercise particularity and care in acting on these pension cases. That is about the sum and substance of my position.

Mr. ROWELL. That is all right.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Furthermore, if there are incompetent reviewers in the Pension Bureau the chief remedy for that trouble is not to be in flooding thousands of cases before Congress.

Mr. ROWELL. Allow me to answer that?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Wait until I complete it. The proper remedy is to get well-attested cases and have the reviewers removed.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Who is going to attend to that?

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That we must attend to in a more general way than to crowd a thousand cases here. I do not think there could be a more careless review than by our committee as a general thing. I do not mean to cast any reflection on the Committee on Invalid Pensions, because I think it is an honest and competent committee.

Mr. ROWELL. It has been my experience in the employment of men and women that where there are large numbers employed it is impossible to have all of them first class men or women. You get the average. You find all to be equally competent men. One has a technical mind and is always hunting for technical objections. Another has a broad and liberal mind. Both of them are honest, and both desire to do what is right. One reviews the case and it is passed. If it fell into the other reviewer's hands it would be rejected. That is part of our poor humanity. It is not possible to get a body of reviewers each one of whom will come to the same conclusion any more than it is possible in every case to get a supreme court to be united in opinion in all causes.

Now, every private bill which comes before Congress, if it is passed it is because in the judgment of Congress justice will not be done in the Department or has not been done.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Frequently there is no jurisdiction in the Department.

Mr. ROWELL. But frequently there is.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I am only speaking of cases where there is jurisdiction. We are slow to grant any claim that has a remedy before any court.

Mr. ROWELL. We have been in the habit for many years of granting these pension claims.

Mr. BLANCHARD. One more question.

Mr. ROWELL. One more only, then, as I want these pension cases passed.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It is the most expeditious way of passing them.

Mr. ROWELL. I will hear the gentleman's question.

Mr. BLANCHARD. The gentleman speaks of the reviewer in the Pension Bureau sitting on pension cases. Now, is it not a board of reviewers?

Mr. ROWELL. Nominally it is a board of reviewers, but you will find only one reviewer reviews each case.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Of how many persons is the board of reviewers composed?

Mr. ROWELL. I think there are about forty.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How many did the gentleman say—three?

Mr. ROWELL. No; forty. In the board of review one man takes one case and another another.

Mr. BLANCHARD. How many take a case?

Mr. ROWELL. Only one. In the board of review one man takes one case and another another. You will find where a case has been sent by the chief of division properly approved it will be returned signed by only one reviewer. One single reviewer passes the case and returns it. It is not looked at by any other.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Does the gentleman say of all those composing the board of review each case is examined by only one reviewer.

Mr. ROWELL. I say under the present régime I have not yet been able to get the Commissioner or the deputy commissioner to examine anything after it has been returned on the part of the reviewer.

Mr. McMILLIN. But is it not a fact that the board passes upon them?

Mr. ROWELL. No; only one reviewer passes on each case.

Mr. McMILLIN. I say when the Department approves?

Mr. ROWELL. That is in the case of an appeal.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is in the case of a rereview.

Mr. ROWELL. There is a board of medical reviewers.

Mr. McMILLIN. They do not pass upon the facts.

Mr. ROWELL. They are medical examiners.

Mr. McMILLIN. I knew there was one department there where more than one man was engaged in such work.

Mr. ROWELL. But even that is done by one man.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

HARRIET WELCH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Harriet Welch.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Harriet Welch, widow of Cyraneous Welch, late a private in Company C, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteers, at the rate of $8 per month, and $2 per month for each of her children under the age of sixteen years, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The committee adopt the Senate report, as follows:

Harriet Welch is the widow of Syraneous Welch, private, Company C, Thirty-eighth Regiment Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, who was pensioned for gunshot wound of his left leg, received in the military service and in the line of his duty. The rate of pension was increased from one-half to three-quarters because of increasing disability in the wounded leg. Again applying for increase of pension, he was directed to report for examination before the examining board of surgeons convened at Green Bay, Wis. Returning from Green Bay, Wis., he fell from the cars and was killed, September 7, 1877.

John Hammer filed affidavit May 22, 1884, that "soldier's leg was so crippled that he could not depend upon it and that it gave way many times and caused him to fall." That it is his belief that in attempting to pass from one car to another while returning from Green Bay his leg gave out and caused him to fall between the cars, when he was crushed to death.

In view of all the facts, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill, and recommend its passage, with the following amendment: Strike out in the seventh, eighth, and ninth lines the words "at the rate of eight dollars per month, and two dollars per month for each of her children under the age of sixteen years" and insert "and her minor children" in lieu thereof.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LYDIA O. HUTCHINGS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1382) for the relief of Lydia O. Hutchings.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Lydia O. Hutchings, mother of George T. Pomeroy, late a private in Company C, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteers, on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

The [illegible] (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

Lydia [illegible]tchings is the dependent mother of George T. Pomeroy, late a private in Company C, One hundred and eighty-sixth Regiment New York Volunteer Infantry, who was shot dead in the line of his duty April 2, 1865. That at the time of his death Lydia O. Hutchings, the mother, was dependent upon the said son, George T. Pomeroy, for her support, and accordingly lived at his (the son's) house at the date of his enlistment, and continued to be supported by him until his death; and after his death that she lived with the widow of soldier until the widow of said soldier died, on or about August 31, 1869; that said soldier left no children.

The fact of the widow Hannah Pomeroy's death is supported by affidavit of Lydia O. Hutchings, filed December 5, 1882; also, by affidavit of Emelia Beckley, filed December 5, 1882; also, by affidavit of E. C. Draper, filed January 17, 1883.

The claim that the widow, Hannah Pomeroy, left no children is supported by affidavit of E. C. Draper, brother of Hannah Pomeroy, deceased; also, by affidavit of Lydia O. Hutchings.

The soldier's widow was pensioned by certificate No. 67038.

Taking into consideration all the circumstances of this case, the committee believe it to be their duty to report in favor of this bill, and recommend its passage.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MARRILLA PARSONS.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich., dependent stepmother of Daniel P. Parsons, late captain of Company D, Eleventh Missouri Cavalry.

The report (by Mr. WINANS) was read, as follows:

The facts in this case show that Marrilla Parsons is the widow of the late ex-Governor Andrew Parsons, of the State of Michigan, and the stepmother of the late Daniel P. Parsons, who enlisted in Company B, Thirteenth Regiment of Illinois Infantry, on the 24th of May, 1861; that he was discharged on the 1st day of February, 1863, for promotion as captain of Company D, Eleventh Regiment of Missouri Cavalry, and that from exposure incident to his service he was taken sick and died of consumption at Sterling, Ill., on the 13th of August, 1864, leaving no widow or children surviving him. Under the law Mrs. Parsons is not entitled to a mother's pension, being the stepmother of the deceased, but the papers in the case show that from the time of her marriage until Daniel Parsons, the deceased, left home she exercised the same care over him as a mother would have done, and that after the death of her husband and his father, in 1854, the said Daniel Parsons contributed from his wages to her support as if he had been her own son, and continued to do so up to the time of his death. She received from him the same treatment and affection that would have been given if he had been her son.

The papers also show that Mrs. Parsons, for whom a pension is asked, was dependent upon the support given her by said Daniel Parsons, and that since his death she has been dependent upon other friends, having no property herself.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill for the reason that Marrilla Parsons is as much entitled to a pension as if she had been the natural mother of the late Daniel P. Parsons.

Mr. BLANCHARD. This is a case, it seems to me, Mr. Chairman, entirely outside the law. It is not a case of a pension being granted to the mother of a deceased soldier, but the case of granting a pension to a stepmother, not provided by the pension laws at all.

Mr. NEECE. Why should she not be pensioned where she has raised the child?

Mr. GROUT. That is just the reason why this bill is introduced, for the purpose of making her case a special exception because she does not come within the provisions of the law.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. If she is a good stepmother she ought to have a pension.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I can well understand, Mr. Chairman, that where reviewers of the Pension Office reject a case because of the insufficiency of testimony, or on some technical ground, we are asked to make exceptions to the general law and grant such party a pension where the testimony warrants it; but here is a case that does not come under any provision of the law whatever. There is no evidence in this case that the reviewers of the Pension Office rejected this claim on any technicality or any insufficiency of testimony. I question, indeed, whether it is a case that has ever been presented at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Will my friend from Louisiana pardon me for interrupting him a moment?

Mr. BLANCHARD. Certainly.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. This, as I understand it, is a case over which the Pension Bureau has no control whatever.

Mr. BLANCHARD. None at all.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The law does not provide for pensioning stepmothers. Now, I think this is a very meritorious case. I would draw the line at mothers-in-law, but I would not draw it at stepmothers [laughter], especially such as this.

Mr. TIMOTHY J. CAMPBELL. Especially if she is a good one.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And I have no doubt that she was a good one. She seems to have taken good care of this child and supported it with the warmest affection; and he seems to have recognized what men do not always recognize, that there is an equal claim upon him for reciprocal affection and honor toward the relict of his father, and to discharge toward this stepmother the duties which he would properly owe to his own mother—this stepmother who had exhibited and sustained such affection toward him. She is now entirely dependent upon the Government since her maimed pensioned son has been removed by death. I think, therefore, my friend from Louisiana is mistaken in citing the jurisdiction of the bureau as against this case. He draws the line just a little too much inside. It is well to cut off the mothers-in-law, but not always the stepmothers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. It was not my purpose, Mr. Chairman, when I rose to oppose this bill to the extent of calling a quorum upon it, but simply to call the attention of the House and the country to the extent which we are going in this pension legislation. I confess since I have been a member of this House I have not been attending regularly these Friday night sessions, and I do not know whether or not there has been any case similar to this passed upon by the House.

Mr. GROUT. Plenty of them.

Mr. WINANS. I will say, with the consent of the gentleman from Louisiana, that this is one of those cases that necessarily come before Congress. It can not be allowed by the Pension Department, because the law does not provide for it, she not being the natural mother of the soldier; and yet her relations sustained toward the son were of the most tender character, as shown by the report, and would entitle her to a pension as much as the natural mother. She reared this young man from a tender age, bearing toward him all the relations of a mother up to the time of his death. It could not under the circumstances be considered by the Pension Office, and it is properly a case to come before this body. And it could not be allowed in the Pension Office, and therefore this is a legitimate case to come here. I will say to the gentleman there have been a great many such cases, and this is the place to which to bring them for relief.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Many cases like this allowing pensions to stepmothers?

Mr. WINANS. Very many of them.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Then, if that be so, I do not see why the line should be drawn on this particular stepmother. But I for one am here to protest against the allowance of pensions in any such cases as this, not to the extent of calling a quorum on this case, but simply to express my opposition to it.

Mr. GLASS. I think probably this case had better go over and wait the action of a full House.

Mr. WINANS. I hope my friend will not insist upon that. This is one of the clearest cases that could be brought before the House for relief by Congress. This woman has no property, and no means of support. She was clearly dependent upon this stepson, who supported her. Her husband is dead. The son is now dead. She was as much dependent on this son as if she had been his natural mother. It is a clear case for relief, and there should be no objection to it. There have been many such cases passed without objection, and it seems to me just as deserving a case as though this woman had been the natural mother of this dead soldier.

Mr. GLASS. I will not press the objection. I think a general law could be passed to meet all this class of cases.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCOTT. I ask consent that members present be allowed to call up bills out of their order on the Calendar.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

WILLIAM H. BECK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1400) granting a pension to William H. Beck.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of William H. Beck, late of Company K, Eighth Iowa Veteran Volunteer Infantry.

Mr. BLANCHARD. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1400) granting a pension to William H. Beck, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Pension Committee in this case, which is full and complete, is adopted, and reads as follows:

"That the records in this case show that William H. Beck enlisted as a private in Company K, Eighth Regiment Iowa Volunteers, on September 21, 1861, and was discharged April 20, 1866; declaration for pension filed April 4, 1879, alleging that on or about June 15, 1863, claimant incurred epilepsy, since which time epileptic attacks come on from one to ten days apart; claim rejected on the ground "that there is no record of the alleged epilepsy, and claimant has declared his inability to furnish testimony of commanding officer as to origin, of regimental surgeon showing treatment in service, or medical testimony showing existence at discharge."

"Claimant testifies that on or about May 18, 1863, he came from guard duty and went to sleep in a trench in the hot sun, close to where a piece of heavy artillery was being fired almost constantly, and the next thing claimant realized he was being carried to a temporary hospital in rear of the trenches, where he remained a few days, and then returned to duty, and that ever since that time the epileptic fits have become more frequent and severe.

"Claimant's testimony is corroborated by affidavits of comrades Corporal M. Ryan and Private L. M. Kensey, who found him in the trench, as stated, and that at each discharge of the artillery it brought on another fit.

"Also the testimony of Samuel B. Davidson, who was present at that time, and who had been with claimant from September 21, 1861, until that time, and knew he was sound and healthy.

"Testimony of claimant is further corroborated by affidavits of neighbors and friends and the family physician as to claimant being sound and free from epilepsy or other diseases before enlistment, and the testimony of neighbors as to the occurrence of the epileptic fits since claimant's discharge.

"To all this testimony there is to be added the certificate of the examining surgeon under the direction of the Pension Office, signed L. A. Perce, M. D., to the effect that he contracted this disease in the service, and that he is 'entitled to one-half total pension for privates, or $4.'

"We can see no reason why this pension should not have been allowed by the Pension Office."

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ROBERT HOLSEY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to Robert Holsey.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Robert Holsey, late of Company H, Ninth Regiment Kansas Cavalry Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to Robert Holsey, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee, which is herewith made a part of this report, contains a clear statement of this case:

"The petitioner was a private in Company H, Ninth Kansas Cavalry, and asks for a pension in consequence of disabilities contracted in the line of his duty. The report of the Surgeon-General shows that he was in the general hospital from September 14, 1863, to January 1, 1864; also that he was treated in January, July, and August, 1863. Three comrades testify to his sound condition when he enlisted.

"Lieutenant Cram, who was in command of the company, gives evidence of the suffering condition of the soldier, and in consequence put him on light duty. The same witness says:

"'That on the 20th of April, 1863, the claimant was sent with others from Leavenworth to Levy, Kans., as burial escort; that they were exposed to storm and night travel, after which the claimant was sick in camp and hospital, and that he was in feeble health when mustered out.'

"Comrade Crotts gives similar testimony, and adds that he was with claimant from December 20, 1863, to March 6, 1864, and was at his bedside every day.

"His neighbor, John G. Chase, was acquainted with him soon after muster-out, and knew that he was ill and totally unable to labor during the space of five years.

"Dr. H. D. Hill testifies, in affidavit dated November 9, 1882—

"'That he has known the petitioner during the past ten years, and that he has always appeared to be in feeble health, and that on examination he found him greatly reduced by a complication of diseases, including affection of lungs, liver, and kidneys.'

"There is a large amount of testimony from comrades and neighbors, all of whom appear to be reliable and disinterested witnesses, which favors the petitioner's claim, and there is no evidence of an adverse description.

"The claim was rejected by the Pension Office on the alleged insufficiency of the medical proof.

"We find a report of an examining board, dated November 12, 1882, which states that the disability is permanent; that there is evidence of kidney trouble, which is rated at half total.

"A subsequent examination by the same board reports that the claimant has Bright's disease, and rates the disability as total."

Your committee report the bill favorably, with a recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

MRS. MARGARET SMITH.

The next pension business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Margaret Smith, widow of Joseph Smith, late a sergeant of Company H, Fourth United States Infantry, Company H, Sixth United States Infantry, and Company B, Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The Clerk commenced to read the report.

Mr. BUCHANAN. I suggest that in reading the reports hereafter the formal part be omitted.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the whole of the report be read.

The Clerk resumed, and concluded the reading of the report (by Mr. MORRILL), as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Margaret Smith, submit the following report:

The report of the Senate Committee on Pensions sets forth the facts in this case very clearly, and is as follows:

"That the claimant is the widow of Sergt. Joseph Smith, late of Company H, Fourth United States Infantry, Company H, Sixth United States Infantry, and Company B, Tenth Regiment Kansas Volunteers. She made application to the Commissioner of Pensions, but the claim was rejected on the ground 'that the soldier's death was not a result of any disease contracted in the United States service.'"

Sergeant Smith was pensioned October 9, 1850, for injuries of veins of right leg, from long and continuous marches during the war with Mexico. During the rebellion he served from July 26, 1861, to August 8, 1863, when he was discharged for disability. Was restored to the pension-rolls February 18, 1867, to date from his discharge from the volunteer service August 9, 1863, and was a pensioner at date of his death, which occurred August 10, 1881, the cause of death being stated as "old age and chronic disease of liver."

Joseph Smith served in the armies of the United States, volunteer and regular, a period of thirty-two years. He participated in the Florida war, the war with Mexico, and in the war of the rebellion. During his last illness, covering a period of two years and eleven months, he was confined to his bed, and at times not able to move without assistance. The claimant attended him constantly, and as a result is completely broken in health, aged, and unable to earn a living. Her home had to be sold at a great loss to enable her to purchase food, medicine, and medical attendance for the soldier.

"A number of leading citizens of the city of Leavenworth certify to the respectability of the claimant, and petition Congress to grant her a pension, believing that the soldier's death was indirectly caused by his long and faithful service in the armies of the United States."

Your committee, feeling that this case is one of unusual merit, recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

STEPHEN R. SMITH.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Stephen R. Smith, late a private in Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Infantry, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of the pension he is now receiving, to commence from the passage of this act.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. MORRILL) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith, having examined the same, recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant was a private in Company C, Thirty-first Regiment Iowa Infantry Volunteers, and was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability for gunshot wound of right lung received at the battle of Kenesaw Mountain, Georgia, June 27, 1864. He was pensioned in 1867 for gunshot wound of right lung, and has received various rates, ranging from $8 to $24 per month, since June 12, 1865, the date of his discharge, and the latter is the present rate of allowance, having been advanced to that sum under the provisions of the act of March 3, 1883.

He subsequently made application for increase, and on June 17, 1884, was examined by the board of examining surgeons at Washington, D. C., who reported adversely to his application for increase, solely because he was receiving the maximum rate allowed by the pension law, and conclude their report as follows: "His disability is equivalent to the loss of a hand or foot."

The medical examinations held in this case have uniformly found "that the disability is permanent; that the ball still remains in his body; that he suffers much from dyspepsia and pain of right lung; that he can not perform any labor requiring the active use of his arms; that the wound yet remains open and discharges pus freely; that the wound is still an open suppurating ulcer; every symptom of consumption; the right arm partially paralyzed; generally debility exists.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

PATRICK MURPHY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 6087) granting a pension to Patrick Murphy.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension law, the name of Patrick Murphy, late a seaman in the United States Navy.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. LOVERING) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred House bill 6087, submit the following report:

Patrick Murphy enlisted in the United States Navy August 20, 1864, and was discharged September 8, 1865. He filed an application for pension January 11, 1881, alleging that—

"On or about January, 1865, while going from the fire-room to the deck, after coming off watch, he slipped on the iron steps leading from the fire-room to the deck, striking upon the right side of his body and head, which resulted in disease of the eyes, and ultimately in loss of right eye and impairment of vision of left."

His claim was rejected—

"Because there was no record evidence in the Navy Department of the alleged disability, and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence connecting said disability with service and line of duty."

The evidence in the case is as follows:

Robert T. Stackhouse and John Murray testify that they personally knew claimant before he enlisted in the service; that he was in good health and free from any apparent disability.

J. Knox Foster, late assistant engineer, United States Navy, testifies:

"Claimant was a coal passer on U. S. S. Mahaska, when lying at Key West in the winter of 1864 and 1865. Affiant was assistant engineer on same vessel, and Murphy was on his watch. In passing from fire-room to main deck he slipped and fell back from the ladder to the floor of the fire-room, injuring his head and eye. He was placed on the sick-list, and eventually lost his right eye by reason of the injury. This accident occurred in line of duty. That he was sent to marine hospital at Key West, and never again rejoined the ship. Before the accident claimant was to all appearances a sound and healthy man. It was affiant's duty to inspect the men weekly, and if there had been any bodily infirmity affiant would have discovered it."

Edward Early, of South Weymouth, Mass., shipmate of claimant, testifies that he was an eye-witness to the accident, and that claimant complained of his head and eyes.

John C. Foster, of Gloucester, Mass., testifies:

"I was an acting master's mate on the U. S. S. Mahaska; that claimant fell in coming from the fire-room to the main deck, receiving severe injuries to his head and eye, with certain internal injuries; that prior to the accident claimant was in good, sound bodily health, with the use of both his eyes."

George Quackenbush, seaman, also testifies substantially as his other shipmates, and further says "it was conceded at the time of the accident and believed that he had lost his right eye."

William F. Coleman, M. D., September 7, 1881, testifies:

"Claimant has been under my care on account of sympathetic disease of eyes, which has left his sight so much impaired as to render him incapable of seeing anything except large objects."

Dr. R. Percy Cowashall testifies:

"Claimant has been a patient of general public hospital Saint John's, New Brunswick, receiving treatment for debility and nervous symptoms consequent upon a fall upon the head."

L. B. Botsford, M. D., marine hospital, Saint John's, New Brunswick, testifies:

"Claimant was an inmate of this hospital from December 27, 1878, till March 18, 1879. He suffered from inflammation of right eye."

George W. Galvin, M. D., testifies:

"Claimant was examined at the Massachusetts Charitable Eye and Ear Infirmary in May, 1880, for disease of eye."

The Surgeon-General, in reply to office inquiry, replies that the records of the U. S. S. Mahaska are not on file.

Albert F. Stillings, surgeon's steward, U. S. S. Mahaska, testifies that—

"Claimant received injuries to his head by fall from a ladder while on duty at Key West, Fla.; he was placed on the sick-list; remained some two weeks, I think, and not improving to be fit for duty, the surgeon in charge had him sent to the hospital at Key West, and that he never again rejoined the vessel."

The evidence in this case shows conclusively that claimant entered the service a strong, healthy man; that he met with a painful accident to his head and eye; that he was put in hospital on board the Mahaska and transferred to hospital on shore, and that after the accident he never did service, and that ever since his discharge he has suffered with his eyes until at present he has lost the sight of one and the other is impaired, as shown by the report of the medical examining board at Washington, D. C., April, 1881, as follows:

"Total loss of right eye and slight amblyopia of left eye, about seven-eighths normal vision in that eye."

In view of all the facts in this case your committee are of opinion that the fact, "No record evidence at the Navy Department," should not deprive him of his right to pension. They therefore report back the accompanying bill, and recommend its passage.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Does this pension come out of the general pension fund, or is there a separate provision made?

Mr. BRADY. It comes out of the naval pension fund, as I understand. It is not necessary to specify in the act from which fund it comes.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. You are satisfied that the bill is right in that particular?

Mr. BRADY. Yes, sir.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. That is all I desire to know.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ABEL COMSTOCK.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1016) granting an increase of pension to Abel Comstock.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Abel Comstock, late a private in Company C, Twenty-first Regiment Ohio Veteran Infantry Volunteers, at the rate of $30 per month, in lieu of what he is now receiving.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The Clerk commenced to read the report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY).

Mr. GOFF (interrupting the reading). I ask that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The reading of the report was asked for by the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

Mr. GOFF. I do not understand that a gentleman can call for the reading of the report as a matter of right.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that at these Friday evening sessions whenever the reading of a report is called for it is read in the time of the gentleman who calls for the reading.

Mr. GOFF. I do not understand that a gentleman can call for the reading of a report and can then resume his seat while it is being read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is under the impression that any gentleman can call for the reading of the report in his own time.

Mr. BLANCHARD. If the remarks of the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] are directed toward myself——

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. It was I who called for the reading of the report. I would suggest to the gentleman from West Virginia that the report is the basis upon which we are asked to grant the pension. All the information relating to the case, in the absence of a statement from the gentleman who has charge of the bill, is contained, I presume, in the report. Now, it can hardly be assumed that we should grant applications for pensions without any information, and unless some gentleman is prepared to make a plain statement of the facts I think the most expeditious way of prosecuting this business is to let the report be read. It was in that spirit that I called for the reading of the report, and I am quite sure that the gentleman from West Virginia does not wish to retard the progress of business or to keep the House out of any information in the premises.

Mr. GOFF. If a member desires to have the report read as a part of his remarks it may be presumed that he will follow the reading with his opinion on the report in the particular case. I understand that to be the meaning and spirit of the rule, and I do not understand that this is a privilege of which any member may avail himself for the purpose, I may say, of consuming time and preventing the progress of these cases.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair is perfectly aware that the report must be read in the time of some gentleman who is assumed to be addressing the House. The Chair is guided by what he understands to be the custom of the House. The Chair assumes that the gentleman who calls for the reading of the report must be considered as having risen to discuss the case, and the Chair can not go into the motives with which any gentleman either discusses a case or calls for the reading of a report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair feels bound to recognize at this point the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] for any purpose for which he claims the floor.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I would state to the gentleman from West Virginia [Mr. GOFF] that it would be as improper in me to assume that he wishes to deny to the House any information in the premises as—and I say it with all respect—it is perhaps a little uncharitable in him, and certainly entirely incorrect, to assume that I have called for the reading of the report as a means of needlessly consuming time.

The report gives me and gives him information in the premises. If the report in any given case be satisfactory, or if when I have called for the reading of a report the first part of it proves satisfactory as to the merits of the case, I certainly shall not supplement it by any unnecessary remarks. The absence of remark is evidence that the report is satisfactory, and in several instances where I have called for the reading of a report and have found from the first part of it that the proof was conclusive, or satisfactory, I have stopped the reading as a needless consumption of time.

Mr. GOFF. I hope, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman sees that that is so in this case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. If this should prove to be such a case, I shall take that course.

Mr. GOFF. I think the gentleman has heard enough of this report to be satisfied that this is such a case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I have not. I will call for the rereading of the few lines that have been read, and, as they are gone over again, I may catch something that escaped me in the former reading.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is entitled to the floor and calls for the reading of the report.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, I question the right of a member——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE] is entitled to the floor.

Mr. PRICE. The gentleman instructed the Clerk to go on with the reading of the report. Then I addressed the Chair and was recognized. Now, is the gentleman from Arkansas still entitled to the floor?

The CHAIRMAN. He is entitled to the floor for the reading of the report. The Chair recognized the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. PRICE] in order to ask the purpose for which he rose.

Mr. PRICE. I rise for the purpose of reading a few lines from Jefferson's Manual (page 147) with reference to the point of order. I read:

When the reading of a paper is called for and objected to, it shall be determined by a vote of the Senate without debate.

This is not the Senate, but that is parliamentary law as laid down by Jefferson; it applies to the proceedings of this House, and I think it is clearly to the point here.

Several MEMBERS. "Regular order!"

The CHAIRMAN. The report will be read in the time of the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. BRECKINRIDGE].

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1016) having examined the same, concur in the Senate printed report hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant, Abel Comstock, late private of Company C, Twenty-first Ohio Volunteers, was pensioned from November 4, 1881, at $12 per month. This was reduced to $8 September 4, 1883, and afterward increased to $12 from September 29, 1884. He now asks that this amount be raised to $30 per month by special act of Congress. In support of his application he presents the affidavit of four reputable physicians, which have been filed by Senator SHERMAN, one of which we copy, as follows:

THE STATE OF OHIO, Wood County, ss:

On this 1st day of January, A. D. 1886, before me, clerk of the common pleas court within and for the county and State aforesaid, personally came Dr. Joseph C. Lincoln, aged forty-two years, a resident of, and whose post-office address is, Bowling Green, Wood County, Ohio, and who, being by me first duly sworn according to law, makes a solemn oath, and says as follows, viz: That I am a a regular physician by profession, and have been in practice in Bowling Green, Ohio, since 1873; that I first became acquainted with claimant, Abel Comstock, in the spring of 1876, and have met him almost daily ever since; that I have at different times since 1876 examined him professionally, and advised him as to his physical condition and proper treatment; that upon making examinations as aforesaid I have found him to be suffering from chronic diarrhea, piles, disease of liver and spleen, with gastric troubles, varicose veins of both legs and feet, with swellings of the ankles and limbs, and discharging varicose ulcers, also resulting sympathetic disease of the heart, caused by disease of liver and spleen, deranged portal circulation, and gastric troubles; that ever since 1876 the claimant has been incapacitated for the performance of any manual labor by reason of the disabilities above described, the heart-beat averaging about one hundred per minute while at rest; that the extent of his disability, by reason of his condition as above described, is equal to or greater than that resulting from the loss of a leg above the knee; that I have no interest in this claim, direct or indirect.

JOSEPH C. LINCOLN, M. D.

THE STATE of OHIO, Wood County, ss:

Sworn to before me and signed in my presence, in duplicate, by the above-named affiant, this 1st day of January, A. D. 1886, and I hereby certify that the purpose and contents of the above affidavit were fully made known and explained to the affiant before swearing; that the affiant is well known to me, and is a reputable person, and in good standing in his profession, and that I have no interest in this claim or its prosecution.

[SEAL.] R. M. DONNELLY, County Clerk.

The other three professional affidavits are to the same effect, and are corroborated by the other evidence in the case.

It appears to be a case of extreme and complicated disability, which does not appear to be reached by the general pension laws, and your committee believe that relief should be furnished by special legislation. The disability would seem to be really greater than that which is in many cases allowed a far higher rating, and where the disability is far less serious in its nature.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill allowing a pension at the rate of $30 a month.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask some member of the committee whether the bureau has not the power in a case where the disability proceeds from general causes but equals a certain fixed degree of disability, such as that occasioned by the loss of a leg or an arm, to increase the pension accordingly?

Mr. ROWELL. It may increase the pension to $24 where the disability is equivalent to the loss of a leg below the knee or an arm below the elbow.

Mr. MORRILL. But the increased disability has to be connected with the original disability. Where a man is pensioned for a particular disability, the Pension Office will allow only the rate of pension which that disability indicates. In this case, as the gentleman will perceive from the report, there seems to be a complication of troubles, all arising probably from the same original cause.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I can, of course, understand that these troubles may all arise from the same original cause and yet not be distinctly traceable to it.

Mr. MORRILL. The man was pensioned at a certain rate, and his other disabilities are not recognized by the office.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I observed an apparent gap in the testimony; but the explanation is entirely satisfactory to me.

There being no objection, the bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

ALFRED DENNY.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Alfred Denny, late a captain and assistant quartermaster, subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. ELLSBERRY) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny, having examined the same, concur in the Senate report hereunto attached, and recommend the passage of the bill.

"The Committee on Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny, beg leave to report back the same with recommendation that it do pass.

"Alfred Denny was mustered into the United States service as a captain and assistant quartermaster of volunteers on the 12th day of June, 1863, and was honorably discharged on the 3d day of June, 1864. His declaration for original invalid pension, signed and sworn to on the 4th day of March, 1884, shows that 'while in the service and in the line of his duty at Chambersburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, on or about the 25th day of August, 1864, he was, by the sudden movement of his horse, thrown upon the horn of his saddle and received an injury, causing a rupture or hernia;' that 'being a post quartermaster he could not be treated by a regimental surgeon, but, upon the contrary, was treated by a private physician.'

"The statement of the examining surgeon for the county in which Mr. Denny lives, Preble County, Ohio, dated July 19, 1884, shows from the time that Mr. Denny left the United States service, as above stated, he has suffered from rupture, 'so much so that within the last three years the other side became affected, and a hernia appeared, which from some cause produced most excruciating pain, so that a council of physicians had to be called in the case, his life being despaired of for the time.' The examining surgeon further states that he was Mr. Denny's physician 'before he went into the service,' and has been 'since he came out;' and he asserts that 'I know that he has been wholly incapacitated for manual labor ever since he came out of the Army, by reason of the continual suffering from these ruptures and consequent troubles.'"

The Commissioner of Pensions required Mr. Denny to furnish evidence of "a commissioned officer or member of the company" to which he belonged, which it was manifestly impossible for him to do, as he belonged to no company or regiment, being a captain and assistant quartermaster; for the same reason he was unable to furnish evidence from the "regimental surgeon" as to treatment, &c.

Under all of the circumstances the committee are of opinion that Mr. Denny is entitled to a pension, and recommend that the bill be amended by striking out of lines 5 and 6 the words "at the rate of twenty dollars per month" and inserting in lieu thereof the words "subject to the limitations and provisions of the pension laws."

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

LUCINDA SAWYER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 8333) granting a pension to Lucinda Sawyer.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and hereby is, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll the name of Lucinda Sawyer, stepmother of John Sawyer, late a private in Company C, Third Regiment Maine Volunteers, subject to the limitations and provisions of the laws governing pensions to dependent parents.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I call for the reading of the report.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the petition of Lucinda Sawyer, having considered the same and accompanying papers, submit the following report:

This petitioner is the stepmother of John Sawyer, a private of Company C, Third Regiment Maine Volunteers, who died from wound received in the first battle of Bull Run. The mother of soldier died while he was an infant. His father married the petitioner when John was about three years old, and she filled a mother's place in every particular from that time till the time of his death; in fact, she had the care of him almost from the time of his mother's death. She reared him as her own child, nursed, clothed, and worked hard for him, for the family seem to have been poor.

Leason Sawyer was pensioned as dependent father of the soldier. He died in 1879. The claimant was equally dependent with the father upon the pension for support, but, as a stepmother, can have no claim under the laws governing pensions. She is sixty-three years old, and in feeble health, with no means of support, having no money or property from which she derives any income.

It is in the line of numerous precedents, and this committee think it is right, that this woman, the only mother John Sawyer ever knew, who nursed him and reared him and sent him forth to die in the service of his country, is entitled to the same consideration she would receive as his natural mother.

We therefore report the accompanying bill and recommend that it do pass.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHARLES N. SEBASTIAN.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 686) granting a pension to Charles N. Sebastian.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Charles N. Sebastian, late of Company A, Second New Hampshire Volunteers.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Let the report be read.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S.686) granting a pension to Charles N. Sebastian, submit the following report:

The committee adopt the Senate report, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The Senate report is as follows:

The applicant, Charles N. Sebastian, late a private in Company H, Twenty-third Massachusetts Volunteers, enlisted under the name of Charles N. Derby, July 31, 1862, and was discharged July 15, 1863. He re-enlisted in the same company and regiment December 2, 1863. It appears that he had a prior service. He made application for a pension, which has been pending before the Commissioner for a long time, and the only objection to its allowance is the charge of desertion. It is a case not relieved by the recent legislation, as appears by the certificate of the Adjutant-General.

The following letter (Exhibit A) from Mr. Sebastian to the member of your committee who reports upon this bill fully explains the circumstances of the alleged desertion, which was such but in name, and did not interfere with his rendering faithful service as a soldier from April 21, 1861, to July 31, 1865, one year of which was spent in confederate prisons.

Your committee recommend the passage of the bill.

EXHIBIT A.

TROY, N. H., February 13, 1885.

DEAR SIR: I received your kind answer to my letter in due season, informing me that I should hear from my pension soon. I did receive a letter yesterday, which I inclose with this to you.

My case is different from most others, and in order to have you understand it fully I am obliged to write you the whole:

I, Charles N. Sebastian, first enlisted at Keene, N. H, April 21, 1861, in Company G, First New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry; was transferrred into Company A, Second New Hampshire Volunteer Infantry, for three years; was in the first battle of Bull Run, and there taken prisoner; was kept a prisoner until June 3, 1862, then released on parole; came home; staid about five weeks; was ordered to Camp Distribution at Annapolis. Arriving in Boston I ran across some of my old school-mates that had enlisted in Company H, Twenty-third Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry. They wanted me to go with them, so I enlisted in Company H, Twenty-third Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, under the assumed name of Charles N. Derby, so that if taken prisoner again before I was exchanged my name would (as Derby) prove me not to be the former prisoner. I was young then and did not think of the wrong I was doing, but I have the satisfaction still of knowing that I served my country faithfully as a soldier from April 21, 1861, until July 31, 1865, with that one exception. I had no motive for enlisting in Company H, Twenty-third Massachusetts, other than to be with my old school-mates. Elmer Dickinson, James Dickinson, George Reynolds, and Alfred R. Stone are their names; two of them are dead.

I contracted gastritis and pericarditis while in prison and in the service, and have never been a well man since I was discharged. It seems, if I can get a transfer from Company A, Second New Hampshire Volunteers, to Company H, Twenty-third Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, with my right name, Charles N. Sebastian, put on Company H, Twenty-third Massachusetts, papers, it would help me to get a pension soon, perhaps; or a discharge from Company A, Second New Hampshire; but perhaps the transfer would be of the most benefit to me, if I can get it.

If you will please help me to get this all right, I shall, indeed, be ever so thankful to you. My wife and little children will always be very grateful also.

Thanking you very much for what you have done,

I remain, your obedient servant,

CHAS. N. SEBASTIAN.

Hon. H. W. BLAIR, Washington, D. C.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with care to the reading of the report, but I have not heard any evidence of disability except the testimony of the claimant himself.

Mr. HAYNES. The statement in the first part of the Senate report, as I remember it, is that the only bar to the allowance of the claim in the Pension Office—for it appears by the report that this man applied there—is this charge of desertion which stands against him. I think that is stated in specific terms. I do not know that the evidence is cited in the report.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I remember that last Friday night we had up a question similar to this as to the action of the bureau. It was then stated that in the case then under consideration a pension had been refused by the bureau upon certain grounds, and it was claimed that in the absence of that technical objection, as it was, and perhaps justly, denominated, the bureau would have granted the pension. I then asked whether the bureau had indicated a willingness to grant the pension if the bar based upon this so-called technical objection were removed.

The statement was then made by some gentleman of the committee that the bureau never goes further than to state the fact on which it grants a pension, or the naked fact on which the pension is refused; that it never goes into the problematical part of a case. If that be true, it is altogether an assumption on our part to say that the Pension Bureau would have given this man a pension had it not been for this technical objection. In the case of which I speak the evidence which has been before the bureau was adduced in the report; and upon that evidence we granted the claimant a pension. In this case, so far as I have heard the report, no such evidence is adduced, but there is simply the assumption that in the absence of this technical objection the bureau would have granted the pension.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Perhaps the case may have been so clear as to induce that conclusion.

Mr. HAYNES. The report as drawn may not be so full in its statements as it should be. In fact, I have observed that the Senate reports do not state the evidence with the same fullness as do the House reports. In fact, as to some Senate cases in which I have taken pains to examine the papers, not being satisfied upon the face of the Senate report, which, in fact, appeared to show a case in which I would not recommend favorable action, I have found on examination of the papers that the conclusion of the Senate committee was correct, and I have made a favorable report on such cases.

Now, taking the Senate report as we have heard it read, there is no question that we have to accept on faith the conclusion there stated that the charge of desertion is the only bar which exists to the allowance of this man's claim. The facts in the case are not stated as fully perhaps as they should be. If we choose to assume that the statement of the Senate report as to the charge of desertion being the only bar to the allowance of the claim is incorrect, undoubtedly that gives a different aspect to the case.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The Senate report seems to give the conclusion of the Senate committee without any data upon which that conclusion is based.

Mr. HAYNES. It certainly does; there is no question about that.

Mr. NEECE. I wish to call attention to the fact that this bill proposes to place the man on the pension-roll subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws. If the bill passes, he will have to go to the Pension Office to get his rating; and if there is no disability, he can get nothing. He will have to go before the board of surgeons for examination.

Mr. HAYNES. And if he goes there for examination, it will be upon the specific disabilities on which he applied for a pension at the Pension Office.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I wish to ask gentlemen here, who are more familiar with the pension business than I am, this question: If we should pass this bill and the fact should be developed that there is no disability, could the man get a pension?

Mr. HAYNES. He could get no pension. As I understand, upon the passage of this bill he will be ordered before the board of surgeons for examination upon the specific disabilities on which he applied to the Pension Office. If no disability exists, he will receive no rating, and consequently no pension.

Mr. BRADY. If a man is already on the pension-roll and his disabilty ceases, his pension ceases; he is dropped.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Then there is one other question I would like to have answered.. Suppose we pass this bill and he is found in a state of disability, will the Pension Bureau have power to inquire whether that disability arose in the line of service?

Mr. BRADY. I think not.

Mr. HAYNES. This establishes the presumption that it did so arise.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. And we would be establishing that presumption without a line of evidence. And we would be establishing that presumption when on last Friday night we distinctly took the position we could not presume the Pension Bureau in denying an applicant a pension for a technical reason meant to disparage the merits of his case, while here we are seeking to assume in denying it for a technical reason they mean to admit the merits of his case.

There is one other point in this claimant's case which should be made plain to the House. If he changed his branch of service in the way he did as a kind of college-boy's freak it of course is entirely satisfactory to me, and I presume it would be to every gentleman. We overlook that; but it ought to be clearly shown to us, to whom he is a stranger, this did not involve any of the bounty-jumping business which was common at that time.

Mr. HAYNES. The fact that he served to the end of the war in 1865 would indicate he was not a bounty-jumper. We know bounty-jumpers were in the service, of course.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. They jumped more than once. They jumped every fence they came to. [Laughter.]

Mr. HAYNES. His first service was in my regiment, but I know nothing about the man. He was taken a prisoner at the first battle of Bull Run. Those prisoners were kept, if I remember correctly, some ten months before they were sent back and paroled. It appears in this case he was sent back immediately, but that on his way back he enlisted in a Massachusetts regiment and served in that regiment till the end of the war in April, 1865, which would indicate to my mind he was not a bounty-jumper, but rendered good service in the Army.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. The man seems to have rendered service in the Army, and I suppose we will be able to get over the question of bounty-jumping or any suspicion we may have on that score very readily.

Mr. HAYNES. I will call the gentleman's attention to the fact that at the time this man first enlisted these large bounties were not being paid.

Mr. GROUT. And as the claimant himself states he left his own regiment and went into another regiment, in which he served till the close of the war, merely for the purpose of being with his college associates and with no other motive whatever.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes, that is his statement; and, if corroborated, it will be evidence of that fact.

But, sir, to bring the matter to a conclusion I will say I do not think it is proper for us to grant pensions without having laid before us a summary on the part of the committee of the evidence of the case. I am not willing to admit the Pension Bureau in rejecting for a given reason means to credit or discredit that evidence upon which they have not passed judgment. So far as we see that is an assumption on the part of the Senate, and it clearly is if the position we took is a correct one.

Mr. BRADY. That is the opinion of the Senate.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Yes; the Senate is a solemn body; but, sir, we have to pass on the merits in these cases upon our own judgment of the evidence presented.

Mr. BRADY. That is true.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Without meaning to express any unfavorable opinion on this case, because I can not do that from the absolute ignorance we are in about its merits, I ask the case be sent back to the committee, in order that it may submit to us a summary of the evidence, which we do not now have.

Mr. HAYNES. Very well, I will move at the proper time that the case be recommitted to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. BRADY. No, that is not necessary.

Mr. HAYNES. Or let it be understood that the committee hereafter is to submit such a statement of evidence to be presented when this bill is again called up.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Let the bill retain its place, and the committee can look the matter up.

Mr. HAYNES. All right. I withdraw my motion to recommit.

The CHAIRMAN. That motion would not now be in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask, Mr. Chairman, by unanimous consent that the bill be passed over informally for the present and to retain its place on the Calendar.

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the Calendar in the regular way be suspended, and that gentlemen present may have an opportunity of calling up bills. It is now within fifteen minutes of 10 o'clock, and it will shortly be time for the committee to rise.

Mr. BRADY. I object.

Mr. BINGHAM. As the gentleman from Virginia has objected to the proposition of the gentleman from Pennsylvania, and in order that gentlemen present, who have come here for the purpose of reaching certain bills upon the Calendar, may have an opportunity of securing their consideration, I will ask unanimous consent that the bills upon the Calendar be taken up in their regular order and read by their titles, and if the demand is not made by some member present for the reading of the report that the bill be passed over informally without detriment to its place upon the Calendar, and so continue until a bill is reached in which some member present is interested, who will call for the reading of the report, and thus bring the bill before the committee for consideration.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I think that is a very good suggestion.

Mr. LONG. That will not necessitate the reading of the reports unless the bill is to be acted upon.

Mr. BINGHAM. No; nor the reading of the bill, either.

Mr. PRICE. Mr. Chairman, right on this subject, if you will permit me to call the attention of the Chair for a few moments, I wish to be heard. Evidently the gentleman from Pennsylvania in making his request is proceeding upon the theory that any member of the House has a right to demand the reading of any report in any case. I called the attention of the Chair to this a few moments ago, and now I desire permission to be heard still further in the same direction for the purpose of ascertaining whether that is not a mistaken opinion, and if the Chair does not agree in reference to the point I shall make, I will be satisfied with the ruling and make no further objection.

I call attention now for a moment to two clauses in this Digest; one is the common law, and the other the statute law; that is to say, one is the general parliamentary law, and the other a rule of the House.

SECTION XXVIII—READING PAPERS.

There is, indeed, so manifest a propriety of permitting every member to have as much information as possible on every question on which he is to vote, that when he desires the reading, if it be seen that it is really for information and not for delay, the Speaker directs it to be read without putting a question, if no one objects; but if objected to, a question must be put.

That is the common law.

Now, Rule XXXI of the House provides:

READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded—

And the report is not such a paper—and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

Now, in the light of this law I do not see how any gentleman can demand as a matter of right the reading of a report, nor how it can be read at all except by consent. That is the point to which I wish to direct the attention of the Chair.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. The presumption is all are read outside.

Mr. PRICE. That is the object of sending the reports out. They are laid upon our tables, or sent to us every day, and there is no need for taking up the time of the committee now by reading them. I therefore present the question in order to obtain a ruling upon it at the proper time.

Mr. BINGHAM. Do I understand my friend from Wisconsin to object to the reading of the reports?

Mr. PRICE. I am raising the point as to the right of a member to have the reports read when objection is made.

Mr. BINGHAM. Then you deny the validity of the rulings of the Chair all the evening, that they can be read?

Mr. PRICE. It is for the very purpose of obtaining a ruling from the Chair that I make the point now.

The CHAIRMAN. That point of order is not before the committee at this time.

Mr. PRICE. No; but I call the attention of the Chair to it so that when the time does come it shall be properly before the Chair for a ruling.

The CHAIRMAN. The only question now is whether unanimous consent is given that the Clerk shall read the bills by their titles in their regular order on the Calendar, so that when a bill is thus reached and read by its title, if no gentleman addresses the Chair asking for the reading of the report, the bill shall be considered as passed over informally, retaining its place on the Calendar.

Mr. TAULBEE. How long is that rule intended to operate?

The CHAIRMAN. Only to-night, as the Chair understands.

Mr. TAULBEE. Will it interfere with debate?

The CHAIRMAN. No; gentlemen have the right to debate any questions before the committee for consideration.

Mr. TAULBEE. I have no objection.

MARY J. NOTTAGE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage.

Mr. HAYNES. I ask for the reading of that bill.

The bill is as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Mary J. Nottage, widow of Thomas Nottage, late a sergeant of Company F, Third New Hampshire Volunteers.

Mr. HAYNES. I ask that the report be read as a part of my remarks.

Mr. PRICE. I object to the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Hampshire is recognized to discuss the bill, and has called for the reading of the report as a part of his remarks.

Mr. PRICE. And I make the objection to which I have just alluded, relying upon the law which I have cited, and if the Chair shall overrule the point of order I will yield gracefully to the decision.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to the reading of the report, basing his right to object on the language of Rule XXXI, which is as follows:

READING OF PAPERS.

When the reading of a paper other than one upon which the House is called to give a final vote is demanded, and the same is objected to by any member, it shall be determined without debate by a vote of the House.

The Chair understands that this rule relates to the reading of any paper not in the time of any gentleman addressing the committee or House, but when such paper is introduced at any time to be read on request of a member or as a matter of privilege; and doubtless the rule will apply to a case such as the Chair has mentioned.

But it has been the universal custom of the committee, so far as the present occupant of the chair is aware, that any gentleman rising to address the committee and recognized for that purpose is entitled to have anything read that is respectful in its language or otherwise unobjectionable at the Clerk's desk as a part of his remarks. The Chair rules that the reading of a report in the time of the gentleman who is occupying the floor is not the reading of a paper such as is referred to in Rule XXXI; and it so happens that in the present case the member addressing the Chair asks to have read the report on the bill now under consideration, although the ruling would be precisely the same if an article in a newspaper or any other document were asked to be read.

The Clerk will read the report.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage, submit the following report:

The committee accept the statement of the case made in the report of the Senate Committee on Pensions, hereto appended, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The claimant, Mary J. Nottage, is the widow of Thomas Nottage, late sergeant of Company F, Third New Hampshire Volunteers, No. 270607. She made application at the Pension Office, but it was rejected on the ground that the cause of the death of the soldier was not a result of his military service.

It appears that the soldier enlisted August 15, 1861, and served until discharged, September 17, 1862. He died January 8, 1879, and the widow applied June 24, 1880.

The record in the Adjutant-General's Office states that he was "discharged for disability," and his certificate of discharge for disability is on file, showing in detail his condition at that time. The certificate of his attending physician, that he died of "consumption," is also on file.

E. P. Emerson, general agent of the New England Life Insurance Company, testifies that an examination was made July, 1860, by Dr. James B. Greely, who reported that the soldier was of good constitution, and vital organs normal. He was insured in their company.

Dr. Josiah G. Graves testifies that he was soldier's family physician for many years before his enlistment; attended him in 1853 for lung fever, and his books show he made fourteen professional visits to him; has no knowledge of any other sickness up to the time of his enlistment, and his relations were such that if he had had any disease or disability he would have known it. So far as affiant knows, the soldier was a sound man when he enlisted, and had been since his illness in 1853.

The evidence of several comrades is on file, showing that he was sick in the service with malaria and kidney trouble, and became thin, pale, and weak.

Several witnesses testify to his condition since that time, as having worked with him and seen him constantly, and that he was during the whole time unfit for any hard manual labor, and remained so until he died; that during all those years he suffered a great deal; that he frequently kept about his business, although suffering with remittent fever and general debility; that he had piles, and became very weak and feeble, and had a cough ever after he came out of the service on the slightest exposure to cold.

Without detailing all the evidence, your committee state that they believe that it fairly establishes the fact that the soldier died from the results of his service. His system seems to have been shattered and never to have recovered; and it seems but fair to presume that the "consumption," which is stated to have been the final stage of his disease, was a legitimate result of the condition in which he left the service and afterward continued. If there could be any doubt we feel disposed to give this widow the benefit of it, and therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. What was the date of the death of the claimant's husband?

Mr. HAYNES. January, 1879.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

JAMES BUTLER.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (S. 2025) granting a pension to James Butler.

Mr. HAYNES. I call for the reading of the bill and also for the reading of the report in my time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of James Butler, late a private in Company F, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery.

The report (by Mr. HAYNES) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (S. 2025) granting a pension to James Butler, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

The statement of facts contained in the Senate report is as follows:

"The claimant, James Butler, late a private of Company F, First New Hampshire Heavy Artillery, applied for a pension at the Department November 10, 1871, alleging disability from breaking his right leg just above the knee, at Concord, N. H., September 9, 1864. It appears that the soldier received a pass from the captain of his company until the next morning and went home in the city; that he got up in the morning before light to return to camp and started; that in passing to camp he fell into a cellar where a house had just been removed, breaking his right leg.

"The records show that he was discharged September 12, 1864, by reason of rejection on organization of company at general rendezvous, Concord, N. H., per General Order No. 243, War Department A. G. O., 1864, on account of comminuted fracture of lower third right femur since muster into service. It also appears that he was treated in the hospital at Concord. The testimony of Capt. D. J. Flanders is to substantially the same effect, and further states that he was rejected on organization of the company, after his muster-in, and that he received the injury while in the service and in the line of duty. There is other corroborating testimony."

The claim was rejected by the Department on the ground that disability was not contracted in the line of duty. Without arguing this point at length, this committee indorses the decision of the Senate committee, and recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

CHRISTOPHER C. WHITE.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 4407) granting a pension to Christopher C. White.

Mr. McMILLIN. I call for the reading of the bill, and also of the report, in my time.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, the name of Christopher C. White, late of Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteers.

The report (by Mr. TAULBEE) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 4407) granting a pension to Christopher C. White, submit the following report:

Christopher C. White enlisted as a private in Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Mounted Infantry Volunteers, December 18, 1863, and was discharged January 30, 1865. Filed claim for pension December 17, 1875, based on injury to chest, shoulder, and leg, caused by his horse falling upon him. His claim was rejected on the ground of "no record, and claimant's inability to furnish satisfactory evidence showing origin of alleged disability in the service and line of duty. Not treated in hospital or by regimental surgeon. First treatment after discharge was in fall of 1866."

Claimant is shown to have been sound and free from disease at enlistment.

The evidence shows that claimant and nine others of his comrades, under command of Lieut. M. C. Crary, were on a scouting expedition, and while on said scouting expedition claimant's horse fell on him, and, rolling over him, injured his chest, shoulder, and leg, and the said lieutenant testifies that he sent claimant to his (claimant's) father's residence to be treated for said injuries, claimant's father being a physician and residing in the neighborhood where the injury was received. After claimant partially recovered he returned to his command and remained with his command until he was discharged. He is shown to have been badly injured and a continual sufferer from said injuries.

The medical evidence shows him to be suffering from a painful condition of the spine, obstruction of the liver (hepatitis), and general debility. Your committee have no doubt of the fact that soldier's present disabilities are the result of the injury received as aforesaid in the service and line of duty.

They recommend the passage of the bill.

The bill was laid aside to be reported to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The next business on the Private Calendar was the bill H. R. 7221, granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh.

THOMAS B. WALSH.

Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR. I call for the reading of the bill and report.

The bill was read, as follows:

Be it enacted, &c., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place the name of Thomas B. Walsh, late of Company D, Tenth Tennessee Cavalry, upon the pension-roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws.

Mr. WHEELER. I call for the reading of the report.

The CHAIRMAN. That has already been called for by the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. ZACH. TAYLOR].

The report (by Mr. O'HARA) was read, as follows:

The Committee on Invalid Pensions, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 7221) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh, have had the same under consideration, and submit the following report:

Claimant enlisted as a private in Company D, Tenth Regiment Tennessee Cavalry, January 1, 1864, and was discharged August 1, 1865. Claims a pension for disability caused by rheumatism contracted while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. Claim rejected on the ground that there is no record of alleged disability, and claimant is unable to prove by reliable testimony that it was contracted in the service and in line of duty. Claimant states that he was treated for rheumatism, in camp, by Dr. Leonard, assistant surgeon of his regiment, at Johnsonville, Tenn., for about two and a half months, until sent to Nashville for discharge.

After his discharge he was treated by Drs. Abel, Slack, May, and Parkerson; that he has not been treated by any physician for the last several years, but has used a medicine recommended by Dr. Parkerson, which always afforded temporary relief. Has performed manual labor about one-fourth of his time since discharge; that he can not find a commissioned officer of regiment to give further testimony than that now on file; that he has written to Dr. Spencer J. Freeman, formerly of his regiment, but fails to get any reply. Dr. Alexander is dead. Dr. John A. Parkerson, Isaac M. Bigham, and Capt. John A. Davis all testify as to prior soundness of soldier, and that at date of enlistment he was a sound, healthy man, having no disease whatever.

Capt. John A. Davis further testifies that soldier complained of rheumatism, located in both hips; saw him placing his hands on his hips as if in pain; that soldier often reported to the surgeon for treatment for said disease, and to make his lot easier he was detailed about the adjutant's tent, where he staid until mustered out. Knows above from personal observation.

Comrades John G. Williams and William H. Wingo testify to the same state of facts.

First Lieut. Lorenzo D. McJunkins testifies that claimant, while in the line of duty at Johnsonville, Tenn., about July, 1865, was affected by rheumatism, and that he relieved him from duty on that account, and he did no more active duty until discharged; that soldier, with his company and regiment, was transferred from New Orleans to Nashville, Tenn., on a steamer. They were eleven days on the passage, exposed to the fogs and mist from the waters. This, with exposure to camp life, brought on rheumatism.

Dr. Abraham Slack testified that he treated soldier for lumbago and rheumatism shortly after his discharge and again in 1868 and 1870.

Dr. A. G. Clapton also treated soldier for rheumatism.

Dr. J. P. Rowe testifies as to the continuance of rheumatism, and rates soldier as two-thirds disabled. There is an abundance of testimony showing continuance of disability from date of discharge.

Dr. A. J. Paine, examining surgeon, gives soldier a three-fourths rating for disability for rheumatism.

Your committee are of the opinion that soldier contracted the disease from which he now suffers while in the service of the United States and in the line of duty. He is clearly entitled to a pension, and we therefore recommend the passage of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection the bill will be laid aside to be reported to the House with a favorable recommendation.

Mr. CRAIN. I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, Shall the bill be laid aside to be reported with a favorable recommendation?

The question was decided in the affirmative, and the order was made.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MATSON. I move that the committee rise and report to the House the bills on which action has been taken.

Mr. LAWLER. Pending that motion, I desire to make a brief statement. There is a case on the Calendar of a lady from Chicago who has been here for five weeks. She has at home an aged mother, eighty-one years old, a cripple, and in bed. This lady has remained here in hopes of getting action on this bill to-night. The Senators from the State of Illinois [Mr. CULLOM and Mr. LOGAN] have been over requesting action by the committee. I ask unanimous consent to allow that case to be taken up.

Mr. MATSON. I object.

Mr. RANDALL. This is a case of great hardship. I happen to know something about it.

Mr. MATSON. I expect I know as much about it as others do. I know there are a great many cases of suffering and hardship. The committee to-night has seen fit to take up these cases in order, and I know of no reason why this case should be taken up out of its order.

Mr. LAWLER. This lady has been here for five long weeks, and has remained in order to see if any action would be taken this evening.

Mr. MATSON. We agreed last Friday night that General WHEELER should have an opportunity to speak this evening. It is now 10 o'clock, and in view of that arrangement it is time the committee should rise.

Mr. WHEELER. I wish to state I would not allow any pension case to be interfered with by any remarks which I desire to submit. My wish is that after the committee has got entirely through with its business I may have unanimous consent to submit those remarks. [Cries of "Regular order!"]

Mr. RANDALL. The gentleman from Alabama does not object to the request which has been made for the consideration of the Lanigan bill?

Mr. WHEELER. Not at all. I am in favor of it.

Mr. MATSON. The gentleman from Indiana objects.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Indiana insist on his objection?

Mr. MATSON. I do.

The question being taken, there were—ayes 22, noes 15.

So the motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. MCMILLIN having resumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois, reported that the Committee of the Whole House, having had under consideration the Private Calendar under the special order, had directed him to report sundry bills to the House with favorable recommendations.

BILLS PASSED.

House bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House, were severally ordered to be engrossed and read a third time; and being engrossed, they were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (H. R. 1649) granting a pension to Phœbe H. Meech;

A bill (H. R. 7163) granting a pension to Peter Adams;

A bill (H. R. 6087) granting a pension to Patrick Murphy;

A bill (H. R. 8333) granting a pension to Lucinda Sawyer;

A bill (H. R. 4407) granting a pension to Christopher C. White; and

A bill (H. R. 7221) granting a pension to Thomas B. Walsh.

Senate bills of the following titles, reported from the Committee of the Whole House with favorable recommendations, were severally ordered to a third reading, and were accordingly read the third time, and passed:

A bill (S. 1383) granting a pension to Harriet Welch;

A bill (S. 1382) for the relief of Lydia O. Hutchings;

A bill (S. 342) granting a pension to Marrilla Parsons, of Detroit, Mich.;

A bill (S. 1400) granting a pension to William H. Beck;

A bill (S. 1288) granting a pension to Robert Holsey;

A bill (S. 1467) granting a pension to Mrs. Margaret Smith;

A bill (S. 1466) granting an increase of pension to Stephen R. Smith;

A bill (S. 1016) granting an increase of pension to Abel Comstock;

A bill (S. 1192) granting a pension to Alfred Denny;

A bill (S. 2005) granting a pension to Mary J. Nottage; and

A bill (S. 2025) granting a pension to James Butler.

Mr. WINANS moved to reconsider the votes by which the bills were passed; and also moved that the motion to reconsider be laid on the table.

The latter motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. ADAMS, of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee of the Whole be discharged from the further consideration of Senate bill 2349, being an act granting a pension to Catharine Lanigan, and that the same be now considered in the House.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Mr. Speaker, would assent to that permit a statement to be made?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. A statement may be made by unanimous consent.

Mr. WINANS. I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. I should like to hear a brief statement of the merits of the case.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS] objects.

Mr. WINANS moved that the House adjourn, but immediately withdrew his motion.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, I was unwilling to occupy the time of the House while pension bills were being passed, but as that business is entirely finished for the evening, and as some gentlemen have kindly consented to hear what I have to say, I shall now, with the permission of the House, proceed in continuation of my remarks which I began last Friday evening.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Alabama that no remarks are in order now except by unanimous consent.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Nothing is in order at this evening session but the consideration of pension bills, and although there may have been a tacit understanding to the contrary last Friday evening, the Chair holds that that understanding can not be permitted to contravene the order under which the House assembles. The Chair therefore holds that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] can obtain or retain the floor only by unanimous consent.

Mr. HERMAN. I hope, Mr. Speaker, that the understanding will be carried out.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. As an agreement had been arrived at by unanimous consent upon last Friday evening and also this evening, in Committee of the Whole, that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. WHEELER] should have an opportunity to deliver his speech, does not that agreement render unnecessary unanimous consent at this time?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair is having the record examined and will answer the gentleman's inquiry when report is made upon the record of last Friday night.

Mr. ANDERSON, of Kansas. I sincerely trust that the gentleman from Alabama will be heard.

Mr. LEHLBACH. I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The objection is withdrawn. Unless further objection is made, the gentleman from Alabama will proceed.

There was no objection.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Speaker, it is unnecessary for me to say that I am and always have been unwilling to occupy a single moment of the time of the House which could be made available for the consideration of pensions or other laws, and all the gentlemen present must have observed that both by vote and word I insisted upon the completion of all our work; and since all the business of the House for this evening has been finished, and as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WINANS], who moved that the House adjourn, has withdrawn his motion, I desire first to thank the House for extending to me their unanimous consent to proceed with my remarks in reply to the unjust reflection which emanated from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN].

Pending the consideration of the bill to appropriate the means necessary to support the Army for the year ending June 30, 1887, the RECORD reads:

The Clerk read as follows:

"Subsistence Department:

"For one brigadier-general, two colonels, three lieutenant-colonels, eight majors, twelve captains (mounted), and additional pay for one hundred and forty acting commissaries, $79,500.

"Mr. HEPBURN. I move to amend by striking out the paragraph just read; and I give notice that at the proper time I shall move to strike out the paragraphs beginning respectively on line 100, line 113, line 116, line 120, and line 124."

Carrying out this intention, the gentleman made four additional motions to strike out the other paragraphs as they were successively reached, devoting the usual time to discussing the various amendments.

The chairman of the Committee on Military Affairs, General BRAGG, explained to him and to the House, that all these appropriations were for the pay of officers who held their positions under existing laws, and that our failure to appropriate would not lessen the liability of the Government to the officers referred to.

The gentleman from Iowa had been very prominent in his attacks upon the bill to provide for improving our rivers and harbors. He had used his best efforts to destroy many of the essential features of that measure, and to do this he had offered numerous amendments in quick succession, and the RECORD shows that he made twenty different speeches in his continued and repeated assaults upon the bill; and when this amendment to the Army bill was coupled with his assertion that the next five paragraphs would be attacked by him, were we not justified in our belief that the gentleman intended an assault upon every feature of the bill then being considered, the only effect of which, if successful, would have been to embarrass and block the machinery of the Government?

INDISCRIMINATE ATTACKS AVERTED.

If nothing else was accomplished by my reference to the Judge-Advocate-General's Department, it was advantageous to the House and to the country in so far that it appears to have had the effect of stopping the gentleman's indiscriminate and unreasonable attacks upon the Army bill.

Although less than one-fourth of the bill had been considered, and although up to that time he had not proposed all the amendments which he had indicated a purpose of introducing, he allowed the business of the House to proceed without further objection or comment. This has probably saved the House fivefold the time I shall occupy in the explanation which the gentleman's language and course have made necessary.

After the gentleman had offered five amendments, the effect of each being to abolish and destroy a department of the Army, and after the fifth amendment had been discussed and advocated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. GROSVENOR], I ventured to call attention to the origin of the department last referred to, and to the fact that the abuses of which he complained arose and existed under Republican administrations, and I referred to an episode which I think has been accepted as unquestioned history.

I stated that Mr. Stanton sought to conspire to drag down officers who did not conform to his views or sustain his line of policy. In my desire to repel with merited scorn the unjustifiable and totally unwarranted imputation made by the gentleman from Iowa that I had assailed the memory of President Lincoln, I, in the warmth of my indignation, used words which roused the sensibilities of some members of this House.

I had no wish or intention to reflect upon Mr. Stanton, and notwithstanding the language used by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] I endeavored to obtain the floor with the intention of asking permission to withdraw the expression referred to before replying to the attack upon myself. The next morning when the matter was brought up I rose with the same intention, and notwithstanding my continued efforts this is my first opportunity to reply to the gentleman's attack, and I will also add that it is the first time I have ever asked the indulgence of the House regarding a matter which involved a question of personal explanation.

Although a very old member of this House had, by his example, more than justified the language I employed by alluding to a President of the Republic as an "arch criminal," I had no desire to follow such a lead. I regretted using the words, and would gladly have omitted them. I have always endeavored to abstain from any harsh, extreme, or unkind expressions, and have always felt that members of Congress were here for a higher and better purpose. Actuated by these feelings I availed myself of the rules of the House and asked to have the word most objected to omitted from the RECORD. But as the gentleman from Pennsylvania insisted that the word should appear, I now feel called upon to explain the facts which caused and seemed to justify the expression, and in doing this I shall endeavor to use no improper language. I shall not for one moment forget the courtesy due this House nor the usages of parliamentary decorum; and I shall most certainly abstain from the use of such words and phrases as were indulged in by the gentleman from Iowa, which I do not wish and shall not attempt to characterize, as to do so appropriately would necessitate the use of language neither parliamentary nor decorous.

I am aware that a few have in times past contended that Southern men should silently endure all taunts and jeers, whether leveled at themselves or their constituencies; but this sentiment is an insult to the manhood of the just, honorable, and brave of every Northern State from Maine to California. At the time I was under the influence of mingled feelings—my innate love of justice, my abhorrence of injustice, and sympathy with the wronged and oppressed.

CONTROLLING INFLUENCES.

I had in my mind the statement of President Lincoln regarding the influences which controlled his action in the case of a court-martial which affected the honor of a distinguished general.

I also recalled the arbitrary dismissal of many devoted officers, and the arrest, imprisonment, and attempted ruin of General Stone. Many of these cases have been appealed to this body, and the facts connected with these arbitrary dismissals have developed such gross injustice that in almost every instance Congress has been constrained to reverse the action of Mr. Stanton.

I had in my mind the assertions of the leading Republicans—Mr. Seward, Mr. Sumner, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Dawes, and Mr. Howard—that the very first act of Mr. Stanton as a member of Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet was to instigate, aid, and abet a design to procure the arrest and disgrace of his colleague, Mr. Toucey.

I had in my mind the sad execution of an innocent woman, not in time of war, but in time of peace, and like the crushing and irresistible force of a tornado, these episodes in our history were thrust upon me, together with the attending circumstances, which show that Mr. Stanton was a leading actor, and in most cases the instigator, of the arbitrary acts by which so many had suffered.

Mr. HEPBURN. Will the gentleman permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. WHEELER. I will yield to the gentleman for a question.

Mr. HEPBURN. I want to inquire who suggested that you said that Mr. Stanton sought to conspire to break down the character of officers?

Mr. WHEELER. That is substantially what I said in my remarks in reply to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HEPBURN. Is that what you said or is that what you made the RECORD say afterward?

Mr. WHEELER. That is substantially what I said, as I understand it.

Mr. HEPBURN. I understand that you said, and that the notes of the reporter show you said, that Mr. Stanton was the "arch-conspirator" and had conspired.

Mr. BRECKINRIDGE, of Arkansas. Oh, there is no material difference there.

Mr. WHEELER. I can not see that there is any material difference. I can not see that any such technicality as that can have any weight in this discussion.

It has not been denied that I used the word "arch," but the gentleman knows that I have used every effort in my power to withdraw it, and its appearance in the RECORD is solely due to the friends of the gentlemen, who have forced me into this controversy. The very point made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] illustrates the question at issue, that he and his friends have sought to force into the RECORD expressions made in the heat of debate and which they consider unjust to Mr. Stanton, while my endeavor has been to prevent their further publicity.

I do not think the gentleman quotes the exact words, but he is substantially correct.

Mr. HEPBURN. I think I can see a great difference.

Mr. WHEELER. I also recalled that his most extreme and arbitrary acts and his matchless craft were the features of his character which had sometimes been eulogized above the greater qualities exhibited by his undoubted mental and physical energies, some of his eulogists—at least by implication—having indicated that in their opinion the omission of the characteristics first mentioned was unjust to him. It was like the play of Hamlet with Hamlet left out, or like Samson after he was shorn of his locks.

The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BRUMM] opposed the suppression of the words which seemed to grate upon the sensibilities of the gentleman from New York and the gentleman from Iowa.

Whether the gentleman from Pennsylvania agreed with those who would contend that the words described characteristics which they admired, or whether the purpose was to place me in what they hoped would be a more vulnerable position for their attack is immaterial to the question.

THE CONTROVERSY RELUCTANTLY ACCEPTED.

At the risk of inviting another sneer from the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] for repeating what I have already said, I wish, Mr. Speaker, to emphasize my regret at being forced into this controversy.

My indisposition to use any unkind or unfavorable expressions in reference to Mr. Stanton has been clearly demonstrated by my efforts to withdraw the words, uttered in the warmth of debate, which the friends of Mr. Stanton thought objectionable, and to omit them from the RECORD.

Nay, further, with the exception of the single expression which certain gentlemen on the other side of the House have determined to make so prominent, I have never uttered one word which was other than complimentary to Mr. Stanton.

I have spoken of him as a man of unquestioned ability and legal accomplishments, with a trained intellect backed by untiring energy and indomitable will. And I still insist that he possessed qualities which enabled him to achieve much good, but at the same time gave him unlimited power for evil.

My accidental and unpremeditated assertion that these talents had been sometimes used to disparage, and even to destroy, those who did not conform to his views is the extent of my offending.

I might have expressed myself in different language; had I been given a moment's reflection no doubt I would have used less rugged words. But I believe that Mr. Stanton would rather have his history written by a man who would boldly present the strong qualities which made his reputation than intrust it to the cant and hypocrisy of those who would hide these qualities by an attempt to enrobe him in the garb of a saint.

GREAT MEN DISDAIN FLATTERY.

It has been a trait of all men of decided character—all men whose abilities raised them to eminence and enabled them to leave the impress of their opinions and actions upon the time in which they lived—to desire that posterity should know them as they were.

Macaulay tells us that when Sir Peter Lely proposed to leave out of his portrait of Oliver Cromwell the warts and moles which he thought a blemish, the great Roundhead leader protested against the ignoble flattery, and insisted that his portrait should show him to future generations as he was.

Would not the same feelings that controlled Cromwell in the matter of his portrait have been potent with Mr. Stanton respecting his career? When his life ebbed away, had his biographer been by his side, would not his last words have been: "Write of me as I was. Do not, I insist, omit a paragraph or a word. The worst enemies of the great men of past time are those who seek to suppress acts and qualities which they do not understand and therefore can not appreciate. All of a great man's life is essential to its rotundity. Leave out the prominent acts, even though they are not good acts, and you destroy all—the symmetry is gone, and the strength is gone. What the people of one school of morals and of one age execrate the people of another may extol. There will always be those who must applaud my craft, my skill, my determined will, and my audacity."

If Mr. Stanton were here would he not say, "Yes, I did the work described by Mr. Seward, Mr. Sumner, Mr. Dawes, and Mr. Wilson, and I did it with consummate skill. I made everything succumb to my will. It is my pride and glory that I did what no one else could accomplish. I played a part in the drama no one else could play. Confound to confusion the hypocrites who would strip me of this part of my history and attempt to make me appear like a country parson, a county-court lawyer, or an underclerk in a Department of the Government. Paint me as Stanton or wipe me from the page of history."

But Mr. Stanton was not the kind of man to wish to be wiped from history. He had played a prominent and important part in public affairs; he had been part of and had helped to make the history of a most momentous epoch. It is an insult to such a man to seek either to entomb his memory or to suppress the plain and truthful recital of what he did by substituting for it glittering generalities or high-sounding platitudes.

For these reasons no true friend of Mr. Stanton can object to a plain, impartial consideration of some of the prominent events in which he was an actor.

THEIR EMPHATIC CHALLENGE.

But as my effort to suppress the objectionable language was most strenuously opposed, and as the words to which exception was taken have since their utterance been repeatedly used by a gentleman on the Republican side of the House—and used in the most offensive manner which the rules of the House would allow—and as the gentlemen who insist upon this controversy have by various other means manifested their desire to force a consideration of Mr. Stanton's merits upon this House, and as the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] has within the last few days seemed to assume a very martial mien, and during that time has posed with what appeared to be a studied grace and an unmistakable air of self-conscious importance before the Speaker's desk, I am constrained to construe their words and actions as a personal challenge to me to substantiate my assertion respecting Mr. Stanton, or confess that it was unfounded, if not wanton.

And this challenge gains additional emphasis by the gentleman's recent repeated exhibitions of indecorum and impropriety. First, in his reiterated and groundless insinuations that a highly honored member of this House was capable of taking an oath in the morning and breaking it before night. Second, his use of the word "blackguard," in speaking of a Northern Democrat, whose cultured language and whose conduct in every respect the gentleman from Iowa might well emulate. Certainly, the conduct of the leader of the "Iron Brigade" from the Wilderness in May, 1864, to Appomattox in April, 1865, was well worthy of any man's emulation. Third, his assertion on the floor of the House that because the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. WEAVER] was at that time a member of the Republican party in good standing it would justify or excuse him [Mr. HEPBURN] for denouncing the Republican party as being "so rotten that the Goddess of Liberty had to hold her nose when she passed over the Capitol."

Having by this means, in the judgment of some, established himself before the House of Representatives as a polished gentleman and refined debater, he seems to seek further opportunity for an exhibition of his peculiar characteristics, and his colleague [Mr. STRUBLE] standing beside him, cries out:

I understand my colleague [Mr. HEPBURN] does not wish better fun than to have a discussion with the gentleman from Alabama.

I regret very much to be so publicly informed that I have been selected as the especial target for the gentleman's insinuations and epithets, but since such a determination has been announced on the floor of the House I shall endeavor to undergo the infliction, fully realizing the weight and power of the combined oratorical talent which, under the gentleman's leadership, has arrayed itself against me.

I protest, Mr. Speaker, that I am sincere when I say I am reluctantly forced either to pursue this matter, or to admit that I have used words which do injustice to an official whom some gentlemen on this floor regard with admiration.

The words I used and which these gentlemen challenge me to defend only conveyed the idea that Mr. Stanton had sometimes exercised very arbitrary and cruel power, and on other occasions had been wanting in fidelity to associates for whom he had professed friendship, and that information gained in the confidence of such sacred relations had been used by him to their injury; that in doing these acts he had joined and aided others, or had been aided by others in efforts to accomplish his object.

QUESTIONABLE PRACTICES.

I admit there are those who regard such practices merely as sharp tricks, as indicative of talent, as traits to be admired, as characteristics worthy of commendation, but by the class of gentlemen with whom it has been my good fortune to associate such methods are condemned.

Such purposes are seldom attempted by one man alone, as the nature of the undertaking requires concert of action, and this concert of two or more persons is generally designated conspiracy.

I admit that the gentlemen have displayed great sagacity in forcing this issue upon one who was identified with the cause opposed to the one which gave employment to Mr. Stanton, because they well judged the hesitation and embarrassment one so circumstanced must feel in being driven into such a controversy.

As these gentlemen will not permit me to be silent, I will now proceed to present some of the voluminous proof bearing upon this matter, the testimony being that of witnesses whom my opponents must accept as absolutely unimpeachable.

Though well known to many as an ardent pro-slavery Democrat, Mr. Stanton first became prominent in public affairs when he was made a member of Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet.

Lest it may be claimed that I have no warrant for asserting Mr. Stanton to have been a pro-slavery Democrat, I desire to call attention to his own utterances on the Sickles trial, April 14, 1859, in which cause he was one of the counsel for the defendant. The quotation I make is found on page 51 of the printed report of that celebrated case. I read now from that report:

As the relations of counsel to slavery had been referred to, he would state that he had the blood of slave-holding parents in his veins; his father had been a North Carolinian and his mother a Virginian.

This by way of parenthesis.

I shall begin with his appointment as Attorney-General in Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet, and in this review I shall not utter one word of disparagement to Mr. Stanton which can possibly be avoided, nor quote a single expression from any of his opponents or enemies. I shall measure him by the standard selected by his friends, and shall use no expressions or evidence except the encomiums of his eulogists and panegyrists.

The issue then is distinctly joined. I am challenged to produce evidence justifying or warranting the assertion that Mr. Stanton at any time "sought to conspire to drag down officers," &c.

That evidence I shall now introduce, and the first witness is Henry Wilson, of Massachusetts, during his life a prominent Republican, a Senator and Vice-President of the United States.

BUCHANAN'S ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

In the Atlantic Monthly for February, 1870, Hon. Henry Wilson, in an intended panegyric upon Mr. Stanton, asserts that, while occupying the confidential position of Attorney-General in Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet, he habitually and systematically pursued a course which I think all will admit violated the plainest and simplest obligations of official propriety by disclosing to others what occurred in Cabinet meetings.

He asserts further that he entered into an arrangement with the Republican members of a special committee of the House of Representatives which had been appointed upon his suggestion to procure the arrest of his associate in the Cabinet, Hon. Isaac Toucey, the Secretary of the Navy.

This witness asserts further that while occupying the aforesaid confidential position in President Buchanan's Cabinet Mr. Stanton conferred and consulted with "a committee of vigilance," composed of the more active Republican members of Congress, and the statements of Mr. Wilson, when taken together with those of Mr. Seward and Mr. Howard and Mr. Sumner, clearly show that this was done "almost daily," for the purpose of keeping them (the "committee of vigilance") informed of the utterances and actions of the President and his constitutional advisers; and the witness says that—

He [Mr. Stanton] put himself in communication with the Republicans in Congress and kept them well informed of what was going on in the councils of the administration.

This witness further alleges that Mr. Stanton held a midnight conference with Senator Sumner to disclose to that prominent Republican leader some special and particular information which I think the evidence clearly shows had come to his (Stanton's) knowledge by and through his aforesaid position of unlimited trust and confidence, and that Mr. Stanton himself appointed the midnight rendezvous because "he [Stanton] did not dare to hold conversation with him [Sumner] there" (in Stanton's office).

Mr. Wilson says:

He [Stanton] led Mr. Sumner from his office and told him he did not dare to hold conversation with him there, and made an appointment to call upon him at 1 o'clock in the morning. At that hour he made the promised call and explained to him the perilous condition of the country, and suggested plans of action for the loyal men in Congress.

Of course such intense patriotism, sleepless vigilance, and tireless activity brought him in conflict with disloyal men both in the Cabinet and in Congress.

Mr. Sumner's evidence fixes this interview as occurring in January, and at a period when the Cabinet was composed of men who remained in it until March 4, and these are the men who are alluded to as disloyal.

This witness further alleges that "nearly thirty years" before the date on which his testimony is given (February, 1870) Mr. Stanton approached Mr. Chase on the streets of Columbus, Ohio, and declared that he was in "entire agreement with the anti-slavery sentiments just put forth by the latter" (Mr. Chase), "and hoped he [Stanton] should soon be able to take his place by his [Chase's] side," but that he never did so, and continued to act with the Democratic party.

This witness also alleges, finally, that after the accession of Mr. Johnson to the Presidency Mr. Stanton retained his confidential position as a member of the Cabinet; and the language of the witness clearly indicates that the action of Mr. Stanton was governed by the intention to prevent the President being successful in the prosecution of his policy, and to that end "did all he could to secure, in the elections, the success" of those opposed to the President and his policy.

The witness also says upon this point:

To break with the President before he had fully revealed his purposes would, he thought, place the Republicans in a false position before the people and inure solely to the advantage of Mr. Johnson.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Do you in every instance give the source from which you take the extract?

Mr. WHEELER. I specify the sources.

Mr. BUCHANAN. Do they show that those acts were committed near the close of President Buchanan's term?

Mr. WHEELER. They show that they were committed in January and February preceding the close of President Buchanan's term.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. Extracts touching what points?

Mr. WHEELER. Touching these points that I have just been discussing.

Mr. GALLINGER. Extracts from the speeches of the gentlemen you have referred to?

Mr. WHEELER. Extracts from their speeches, or rather from their articles published in different magazines.

Mr. HENDERSON, of Iowa. Does your statement have reference to the Committee on the Conduct of the War?

Mr. WHEELER. No, sir; that committee was not formed at that time.

Mr. GROUT. Those transactions took place, I believe, at a time when troops were being raised and organized throughout the South?

Mr. WHEELER. I presume so, to a limited extent. We all know the history of the country in 1860–'61.

I was not in the South at the time. I was in the far West, hoping, and, I will say, hoping with confidence, that Mr. Buchanan's efforts to preserve the Union and to preserve peace would be successful. I was one of those who never believed that this Union could be disrupted and that Americans could be arrayed against each other, and no one regretted more than myself when the inevitable burst upon us.

But, it may be objected, the evidence of a single witness, however credible and unimpeachable, will not suffice, unsupported, to convict any man of the offenses recited by Mr. Wilson. Unfortunately for the defenders of Mr. Stanton the case against him does not rest upon Mr. Wilson's unsupported testimony.

AN ALLY OF MR. SEWARD.

There are a number of witnesses by whom every material allegation of Mr. Wilson is corroborated, some of whom I shall now introduce, the first one being Hon. William H. Seward.

In the Atlantic Monthly for October, 1870, there is quoted a letter of Secretary Seward's, the date given being June 6, from which I read:

If my memory serves me, I did not personally know Edwin M. Stanton until after he was appointed Attorney-General in place of Hon. Jeremiah S. Black, who became Secretary of State on the resignation of General Cass.

Mr. Peter H. Watson, who during Mr. Lincoln's administration became a very devoted and efficient assistant Secretary of War, was an intimate personal friend of Mr. Stanton, as well as of myself. Immediately after Mr. Stanton took office he put himself into indirect communication with me at my house, employing Mr. Watson for that purpose. Every day thereafter, until the inauguration had passed, I conferred either in the morning or in the evening, or both, with Mr. Stanton through the same agency. * * * Mr. Watson often brought with him suggestions in writing from Mr. Stanton and returned to Mr. Stanton with mine. * * *

One day, as I was riding through F street from the Capitol, I met Mr. Stanton on foot. We recognized each other, and a hurried explanation concerning our relations, as they were being conducted through the agency of Mr. Watson, took place. We separated quickly, from the motive on my part, and I supposed on his, of avoiding public observation. This was the only occasion, as I remember, on which I met Mr. Stanton until after the expiration of Mr. Buchanan's Presidential term.

Bear in mind that Mr. Seward was the very embodiment, the incarnation, of the most active and rancorous hostility to President Buchanan's administration; that, as he himself says in this letter: "* * * It early became understood that I was to be appointed Secretary of State by Mr. Lincoln. In this manner it happened that I came to be regarded somewhat extensively as a person representing the incoming administration and the Republican party." And yet Mr. Stanton, while holding office under a Democratic administration, professing, necessarily, to be in thorough accord with his Democratic associates upon all questions of party policy, and implicitly trusted by them, could consent to accept and retain a strictly confidential position in Buchanan's Cabinet, and "immediately upon taking office," as Mr. Seward says, put himself into communication with the bitterest and most virulent enemy of the Democratic party whom he could reach. It is positively stated by Mr. Wilson and clearly indicated by Mr. Seward that this was done for the purpose of disclosing to him and other Republicans what transpired in Cabinet councils. In other words, Mr. Stanton deliberately revealed the deliberations of his party associates to their most active opponent. What could have been the motive of these revelations?

Could it have been any other than to injure, to "drag down," and possibly to ruin, those whose trust he should have held sacred?

And who were the gentlemen whom Mr. Stanton thus "sought to conspire to drag down?" In answering this question we must remember that Mr. Seward testifies that this secret and indirect communication, which I presume all will admit was a systematic violation of trust, was persisted in during every day of the two months (January and February, 1861) Mr. Stanton was in Buchanan's Cabinet. Mr. Seward says it began immediately after Mr. Stanton took office and continued until Mr. Lincoln was inaugurated.

I say this occurred in January and February, 1861. All the proof shows this to be so, but as conclusive on this point Mr. Wilson asserts that Mr. Stanton was engaged in an important trial in Pittsburgh until the last days of December, 1860.

WHO WERE TO BE DRAGGED DOWN?

I repeat the question, Who were the proposed victims it was sought to thus "drag down" and ruin? They were James Buchanan, Jeremiah S. Black, John A. Dix, Joseph Holt, Isaac Toucey, and Horatio King. These gentlemen were devoted and true to the country, devoted and true to the Union, and were earnest and untiring in their efforts to preserve the Union in its integrity, in peace, unity, and concord. No one can point to an act by any of these gentlemen that showed aught but devotion to the Union—not even Edwin M. Stanton himself.

The witness now on the stand, Hon. William H. Seward, testifies that upon one occasion at least, even while he was seeking to "drag them down," Mr. Stanton expressed "entire confidence in the loyalty of the President and of the heads of the Departments who remained in association with him until the close of that administration."

Mr. Seward's evidence needs no corroboration; but nevertheless I will introduce another witness, the Hon. Gideon Welles, Mr. Lincoln's Secretary of the Navy. I read from his work, "Lincoln and Seward," page 201, where, referring to this very matter, he says:

It is well known that Mr. Stanton, at that time a member of Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet, * * * secretly confided to Mr. Seward the consultations and purposes of that administration.

This incontrovertible evidence of Mr. Wilson, Mr. Seward, and Mr. Welles certainly exhibits Mr. Stanton as a most astounding and remarkable character. Is it not in keeping with General Sherman's inference "that Mr. Stanton was notoriously vindictive in his prejudices," as well as with the declaration of General Grant that "he (Stanton) cared nothing for the feelings of others? In fact it seemed pleasanter to him to disappoint than to gratify."

Does not the evidence I have already submitted justify any one in the assertion that Mr. Stanton "sought to conspire to drag down," &c.?

I feel confident it does, and that I might safely rest my case here; but I have still further evidence, and the next witness I shall call is Mr. William A. Howard, of Michigan. This witness was chairman of the special committee of the House of Representatives, referred to by Mr. Wilson in his evidence as having been appointed at the suggestion of Mr. Stanton to procure the arrest of Secretary Toucey. The witness therefore enjoyed special and peculiar advantages of knowing all about the organization, methods, and purposes of that committee.

EFFORT TO ARREST MR. TOUCEY.

In the Atlantic Monthly for October, 1870, I find a lengthy quotation from a letter of Mr. Howard to ex-Attorney-General Hoar, under date of February 7, 1870, from which I read:

If you will refer to the resolutions of the House early in January, 1861, under which the special committee of which I was chairman was appointed, you will see that the committee was clothed with very ample powers. That committee was raised at the request of loyal members of the Cabinet. The resolutions came from them, and were placed in my hands with a request that I would offer them, and thus become, if they should pass, chairman of the committee. At first I refused to assume so fearful a responsibility.

* * * * * * *

I do not know that Mr. Stanton wrote the resolutions creating the committee. I did not see him write them. I never heard him say he wrote them. It would be easier, however, to persuade me that Mr. Jefferson did not write the Declaration of Independence than that Mr. Stanton did not write those resolutions. * * * I do not think I saw Mr. Stanton at any time between the 1st of January and the 4th of March, 1861, but I think I heard from him more times than there were days in those two months.

* * * * * * *

We were more than once told it would probably be necessary to arrest a certain member of the Cabinet for treason. Once we were told it would probably have to be within an hour, but to wait until we could hear a second time. Word came to hold on. Those messages certainly came from some member of the Cabinet. * * * For obvious reasons personal interviews with Cabinet ministers were avoided during the labors of the committee; but I do know I many times sent inquiries, and always received answers with great promptness, conveying information of great importance. But these communications were indirect and anonymous.

To appreciate the full significance of this evidence it is necessary to recall the history of the resolutions referred to by the witness. On the 8th of January, 1861, President Buchanan sent a special message to Congress relative to the condition of the country, and urging it to devote itself exclusively to devising the means whereby the Union might be preserved in peace. This message was discussed and the important question it dealt with considered in all its bearings by the Cabinet, receiving the cordial approbation of every one of the President's advisers.

Among these advisers was Mr. Stanton. Observe, the message was sent January 8; the resolutions appointing the committee were introduced by Hr. Howard, the witness, on January 9, and he testifies positively that they (the resolutions) were sent to him from the Cabinet, and that—

It would be easier to persuade him that Mr. Jefferson did not write the Declaration of Independence than that Mr. Stanton did not write those resolutions.

The resolutions followed the message so closely we are forced to conclude that Mr. Stanton hurried from the confidential conference of the President with his trusted counselors to the privacy of his own office, and with all convenient speed devoted his unrivaled ingenuity and distinguished ability in draughting a series of resolutions investing the political enemies of the President and his Cabinet with formidable powers which he knew would be unsparingly exercised. Nor was this all. With a skill and cunning almost superhuman the very solicitude of the administration for the preservation of the Union was made to furnish the means of attacking it for treasonable designs and to supply the pretext for the arrest of one of its members.

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. I say it was to his credit on account of the peculiar state of affairs in the country at the time. He was a patriot, and it was his duty to ferret out the conspiracy against his country.

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Buchanan was a patriot; Mr. Horatio King was a patriot; Jeremiah S. Black was a patriot; General John A. Dix was a patriot; Isaac Toucey was a patriot; and has one man so much patriotism that he must cause the arrest of another patriot?

A MEMBER. It depends upon what the other "patriot" was doing.

Mr. WHEELER. That other patriot was doing all he could to preserve the unity of his country. There were no men at that time in the Cabinet of Mr. Buchanan except men who, as Mr. Stanton said in his letter to Mr. Buchanan and also in his letter to Mr. Sumner, had his fullest confidence as loyal and devoted to the country.

Mr. BRADY. Is it not a fact that Mr. Thompson was in the Cabinet at that time?

Mr. WHEELER. Mr. Thompson had left the Cabinet. Every one of the Southern men had left the Cabinet. Judge Holt was the only member of the Cabinet, except those I have named. All this I will show as I go on.

Mr. BRADY. I was under the impression that Mr. Thompson was in the Cabinet at that time.

Mr. WHEELER. No; he was not. Mr. Cobb and Mr. Floyd resigned in December, 1860. Mr. Thompson resigned early in January, his resignation being accepted on January 8, and it was after this date that Mr. Howard introduced the resolutions in Congress, which his evidence shows were written by Mr. Stanton, and the evident purpose of which was the arrest of Mr. Toucey.

MATCHLESS DEXTERITY.

Gentlemen will search history in vain for an instance of superior dexterity in outwitting and ensnaring political opponents. Compared with the artificer of this matchless device Fouché, Talleyrand, Mazarin, Richelieu, and Machiavel were tyros and bunglers. Those they overthrew fell victims to their own weaknesses, follies or vices, but the excellence of this contrivance was that the virtue of the proposed victims was to be punished as vice—they were to suffer as traitors because they had given unmistakable evidence of unfaltering patriotism.

The copious vocabulary of panegyric of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. HEPBURN] or of the gentleman from New York [Mr. HISCOCK] might exhaust itself upon the phenomenal mental powers of invention, combination, suggestion, arrangement, and direction displayed in this masterpiece of craft without doing justice to their superlative merits, but the merely moral aspects of the entire transaction may safely be left to the verdict of any one possessing intelligence and conscience enough to know right from wrong—to distinguish good from evil.

To corroborate the evidence of Mr. Wilson as to the design and purpose of Mr. Stanton to procure the arrest of Secretary Toucey, I desire now to call Hon. HENRY L. DAWES, Senator from Massachusetts, and associated with Mr. Howard on the special committee to which reference has been made by former witnesses.

In the periodical from which I last quoted I find it asserted:

> In an article written immediately after the death of Mr. Stanton * * * he [Mr. DAWES] stated that some of the most important and secret plans of the couspirators became known and were thwarted by means of communications from Mr. Stanton to the committee.

A PERPLEXING INQUIRY.

I trust I will be pardoned for arresting the witness at this point for a moment while I call attention to the extraordinary import of a portion of his evidence. He says "important and secret plans of the conspirators" were made known by Mr. Stanton. Who were these "conspirators" with whom Mr. Stanton was so intimate and by whom he was so fully trusted as to enable him to learn their "most important and secret plans?" The world knows that Mr. Stanton held confidential and secret relations with President Buchanan's Cabinet, of which he was a member, and simultaneously held similar relations with the most active and virulent political enemies of that Cabinet, with whom he held secret and midnight interviews, and with whom he constantly communicated through chosen agents. Were the "conspirators" referred to by this witness to be found in either of these bodies? Clearly they could not have been in the Cabinet, for before the appointment of the committee to which the witness says this information was given the Cabinet had been reconstituted, and at the time fixed by the witness was composed of the same members of whom Mr. Seward testifies that Mr. Stanton assured him he (Stanton) had entire confidence in their loyalty. These "conspirators" could not have been found in the other body of gentlemen by whom Mr. Stanton was so implicitly trusted, for it is at once their justification and their glory that they were "conspiring" to baffle conspiracy.

Can it be possible, then, that Mr. Stanton maintained secret and confidential relations with a third body of men, whose secrets he systematically disclosed? If so, could this third body have consisted of secessionists, pure and simple, and their sympathizers? It seems well-nigh incredible, and yet that conclusion seems to be unavoidable.

But irresistible as this conclusion appears to be, I reject it utterly. I had rather be thought illogical than so simply credulous as to permit even the most potent reasons to convince my judgment of so arrant an absurdity as that Mr. Stanton ever established or ever held—for even the briefest period—confidential relations with the secessionists. I almost dare be sworn that he never was so associated. It is not merely an absurdity—it is an impossibility. So firm is my faith on this point that fire could not burn it out of me.

SOUTHERN MEN CONCEALED NOTHING.

A moment's reflection will enable any one to recall the fact that nothing could have been more open than the action of the Southern people during all this period. In Congress and in the public press their purposes and plans were boldly and unreservedly announced. Senators and Representatives, Army and Navy officers, resigned and made their adieus to their old friends and associates. The course they pursued was sanctioned by the best authority and the highest officials.

Mr. Greeley's historical expression, "Erring sisters, go in peace."

General Scott's repeated utterance: "Wayward sisters, depart in peace;" and Mr. Chase's opinion, "The South is not worth fighting for, let it alone," were published and republished in every paper in the land. From the day Mr. Lincoln's election was announced, Mr. Greeley, in the New York Tribune, asserted that the South had a perfect right to secede. I read from his paper of November 9, 1860:

> If the cotton States shall become satisfied that they can do better out of the Union than in it, we insist on letting them go in peace.

In the issue of November 16 I find:

> If the fifteen slave States, or even the eight cotton States alone, shall quietly, decisively say to the rest, "We prefer to be henceforth separated from you," we shall insist that they be permitted to go in peace.

On November 19 the Tribune said:

> Whenever the slave States, or the cotton States only, shall unitedly and coolly say to the rest, "We want to get out of the Union," we shall urge that their request be acceded to.

The same idea was repeated on November 30:

> But if the cotton States generally unite with her [South Carolina] in seceding, we insist that they can not be prevented, and that the attempt must not be made.

At a later date, and while the South Carolina convention was in session, Mr. Greeley said:

> If it (the Declaration of Independence) justified the secession from the British Empire of three million of colonists in 1776, we do not see why it would not justify the secession of five million of Southrons from the Federal Union in 1861.

Even after the formation of the confederate government Mr. Greeley declared:

> We have repeatedly said, and we once more insist, that the great principle embodied by Jefferson in the Declaration of Independence that governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed is sound and just, and that if the slave States, the cotton States, or the Gulf States only, choose to form an independent nation, they have a clear and moral right to do so.

All this shows that there was no necessity for any secrecy on the part of Southern men, and the history of the time shows that there was nothing of that character. I will, therefore, say that no power on earth, no argument, no proof, can satisfy me that Mr. Stanton ever maintained confidential relations except with the two bodies I have named. His most intimate and most trusted confederates, Mr. Seward, Mr. Wilson, Mr. Sumner, Mr. DAWES, and Mr. Howard have taken the world into their confidence, and they have told all about the important revelations made by Mr. Stanton, but the most rigid scrutiny of their utterances will fail to discover any revelations whatever touching the purposes or the designs of the secessionists.

If they trusted him, where are the revelations? Until some one is able to produce revelations affecting the secessionists I refuse to believe that he was ever in intimate and confidential relations with them.

This impossible hypothesis disposed of, I again ask who were these "conspirators?" Mr. DAWES could enlighten the world on this point.

"A CABINET OFFICER DENOUNCED."

Apologizing for the interruption, I will now allow the witness, Mr. DAWES, to resume his testimony. He says:

> Once a member of that committee read by the light of the street lamps these words: "Secretary ——— is a traitor, depend upon it. * * * Arrest him instantly, or all will be lost." The paper went back to its hiding-place, but the Secretary, though he walked the streets unmolested, was watched from that hour.

Who can question the truthfulness of this testimony? Who can doubt the fact that Mr. Stanton, in the extraordinary emergencies of that dark winter, did put himself in communication with Republican members of Congress?

Now, who was this "Secretary," this "member of the Cabinet," who, according to the evidence of Mr. Wilson, Mr. Howard, and Mr. DAWES, Mr. Stanton sought to have arrested? If the testimony of these witnesses is to be accepted it was Hon. Isaac Toucey, the Secretary of the Navy. And even without their positive testimony to the fact, all the circumstances point irresistibly to Mr. Toucey as the person to be arrested. It could not have been Judge Black, nor General Dix, nor Judge Holt, nor Mr. King, and certainly Mr. Stanton did not enter into a clandestine arrangement with "the committee" to effect the arrest of the Attorney-General. There was no possibility of its being any other than Mr. Toucey.

Mr. HEPBURN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Alabama whether these gentlemen whom he has just named were those he had in his mind when he spoke the other day of Mr. Stanton as an "arch conspirator."

Mr. WHEELER. Yes; I had them all in my mind—those and many others; there was an immense number in my mind.

Mr. HEPBURN. Then it was not McClellan and it was not——

Mr. WHEELER. Yes, it was McClellan; it was Fitz-John Porter; it was General Stone. I could spend the night in giving a list of them, but I must hasten on in my justification, as my time is limited.

Now what were the grounds upon which Mr. Stanton denounced his personal friend and political associate in the Cabinet? Will it be credited that this committee, prepared to believe the worst by the prejudicial representations of their secret ally in the Cabinet, and clothed by Congress with "very ample powers," instituted a searching inquiry into Mr. Toucey's administration of the Navy Department, and that the report of that investigation, submitted by this witness, Hon. HENRY L. DAWES, summed up all the offenses which could be charged against Mr. Toucey in a resolution which declares that he has "committed a grave error." This was the conclusion of the Secretary's political enemies; but the minority report declares that the investigation has developed "nothing to detract from the high reputation always borne by the present Secretary for integrity and patriotism."

But the utter groundlessness of these aspersions upon Secretary Toucey's patriotism is attested by a witness whom my opponents in this controversy dare not challenge, and this witness I introduce in the person of Edwin M. Stanton, the "loyal" member of the Cabinet who denounced Mr. Toucey to the witnesses Howard and DAWES.

MR. STANTON AS A WITNESS.

In the Life of Buchanan, by George Ticknor Curtis, volume 2, page 529, I find a letter dated March 10, 1861, from Mr. Stanton to his former chief. In this letter Mr. Stanton comments upon the "errors in respect to material facts" which had attracted his attention in "some remarkable comments" of General Scott upon Mr. Holt's report in relation to Major Anderson and Fort Sumter. From these comments I read:

These errors relate, first, to the sending of the Star of the West. This is attributed to Mr. Toucey's being unwilling to furnish the Brooklyn for that expedition. My understanding was that Mr. Toucey wanted to send the Brooklyn, and that General Scott and Mr. Holt preferred the other mode, and overruled Mr. Toucey.

Elsewhere in the same letter, referring to the "comments of General Scott," Mr. Stanton says:

The second point was that on subsequent consultations General Scott urged the sending of a military and naval force to relieve Major Anderson, but that Mr. Toucey made such difficulty about furnishing the ships that it was abandoned. My understanding was that General Scott never urged the sending of any force to Sumter, but only to be ready to do so if necessary.

The full significance of this evidence can not be appreciated unless we bear in mind the dates of several occurrences. The special message to Congress which afforded Mr. Stanton the opportunity to write the resolutions under which the Howard and Dawes special committee was organized was sent on January 8; the resolutions were introduced on January 9; and it must have been subsequent to that date that, as Mr. DAWES testifies, "a member of that committee [the Howard special committee] read by the light of the street lamps" a denunciation of a member of the Cabinet, which all the evidence, I think, certainly shows came from Mr. Stanton.

But the Star of the West sailed from New York on January 5.

A comparison of these dates develops the astounding fact that Mr. Stanton denounced Mr. Toucey as "a traitor" after he had been a witness of his loyal anxiety to send the Brooklyn to relieve Fort Sumter.

We have the evidence of his own letter to Mr. Buchanan that he must have known this prior to the sailing of the Star of the West on January 5, and we have the testimony of Mr. Seward that he (Stanton) vouched for the steadfast loyalty and devotion to the Union of Mr. Toucey and all his associates in the Cabinet. Yet it is in evidence that at the very time he gave this voucher he was engaged in a clandestine arrangement to procure the arrest and ruin of Mr. Toucey for treason.

I ask, does not this show that Mr. Stanton "sought to conspire to drag down officers," &c.?

Mr. GROUT. Is that statement from Mr. Stanton that Mr. Toucey was loyal?

Mr. WHEELER. Yes.

Mr. GROUT. Was not that remote?

Mr. WHEELER. No; it was March 10, 1861.

Mr. GROUT. He sought to arrest him and yet Mr. Stanton said he was loyal?

Mr. BROWN, of Pennsylvania. He might have been loyal one day and a traitor the next.

Mr. WHEELER. He said he was always loyal. But I must proceed.

The next witness I shall introduce is Hon. Charles Sumner, whom I call to corroborate Mr. Henry Wilson's evidence as to Mr. Stanton's midnight interviews with the political enemies of Mr. Buchanan's Cabinet, Mr. Stanton being a member of that Cabinet at the time.

A MIDNIGHT CONFERENCE.

In the Atlantic Monthly for October, 1870, I find a letter from Mr. Sumner, from which I read:

* * * In the month of January, 1861, * * * I called on him (Mr. Stanton) at the Attorney-General's office * * * for information and counsel. * * * He was in the inner room, where he received me kindly. * * * Looking about and seeing somebody in the room, he whispered that we must be alone, and then passed into the ante-room, where was also somebody, and then into the next room, and then into the next, when, finding somebody in each room, he opened the door into the corridor, where he began an earnest conversation, saying that he must see me alone, * * * and he concluded by proposing to call on me at my lodgings at 1 o'clock that night, when he would tell me of the fearful condition of affairs as he saw them. I said in reply that I would expect him at the time named by him.

He came at 1 o'clock that night and was alone with me for an hour. * * *
